HOW CHRISTMAS WILL BE SPENT IN THE CITY'S CHARITABLE INSTITUTIONS

Old People in House of Providence and Protestant Home Will be Made Happy—Little Ones at the Shelter and at the St. Vincent's Orphanage Will be Well Looked After.

WILL HAVE XMAS TREES

Christmas, the day of all days, the day more than any other in the whole year, that brings to the world the assurance of God's love to His people, is not, by any means, an uneventful one in Peterborough's charitable institutions. On the contrary, it is a most joyous occasion, and one in which the inmates mingle together in love and good will. Every effort is put forth by the various managements to make their numerous charges happy; to make them realize the same joys that were theirs probably on some past Christmas days, when they were in more fortunate circumstances, surrounded by their dear ones, and that are now but a memory. On inquiry being made by an Examiner reporter at the public homes in the city, it was learned that preparations were already being made for the celebration of Christmas, and an abundance of good things will be provided. The homes will be decorated appropriately with holly and evergreen, and the Christmas message and mottoes in attractive lettering will be prominent among the decorations.

At the House of Providence in Ashburnham, the good sisters will give the old people of that home a Christmas tree, and each one will receive a gift. This will take place on Christmas eve, followed on Christmas morning with the beautiful Christmas service in the Chapel, and of course, the splendidly prepared dinner, at the regular hour. At the Protestant Home the matron informed the Examiner that the usual festivities of past years will be observed. There are seventeen inmates in this institution, nine women and eight men. They are all well advanced in years, but, nevertheless, they will be able to enjoy their Christmas dinner, and, during the week previous, they will be given a Christmas tree and the Board of Management, as has always been the custom, will visit the home and sing carols.

The Children's Shelter is crowded with boys and girls at the present time, but nothing will be left undone to make their Christmas a bright and happy one. Indeed, for some, it will be the happiest day in their young lives, as in past years, through poverty and want, they were denied the joys of this wondrous day. The Christmas tree, laden with gifts for all, will be the special attraction for the youngsters. Then, the agent, Mr. Cochrane will be a welcome visitor to many homes the day before Christmas, bringing to those who otherwise would have had to go without good cheer, and plenty to eat. Likewise at St. Vincent's Orphanage on London street, the hearts o fthe little children, of which there are forty-seven, will be gladdened by the visit of a generous Santa Claus, and lots of good things, that boys and girls look forward to in joyful anticipation.

The unfortunate prisoners in the gaol will not be forgotten, for the League of Mercy of the Salvation Army visit them in their misfortune, bringing with them God's message of "Peace and Good Will to Men," as well as an appetizing dinner.

Many Yuletide Dainties Mark Christmas Season With Coleman Brothers

There is no doubt that Coleman Bros., even to the casual observer, have this year exceeded any of their previous displays, and by this time next week will have the largest, prettiest, most varied and finest stock ever before attempted by the trade in Peterborough. Their window display is a sight worth seeing, the chief attraction being a monster Christmas cake, eight stories high, the four bottom stories being mounted on pillars, and the top of the whole cake being a very smart and quite natural looking deer. The decorations on the sides are scroll work, piped in sugar, on the front of the cake the motto: "A Merry Christmas and Hearty Greetings, from Coleman Bros., to you all."

This huge cake is almond iced, and weighs over 300 lbs., and Coleman Bros. guarantee all the ingredients to be the finest and best money can buy; also that it contains a $5 gold piece. This cake will be cut on Dec. 20th, in pound, or more, lots, and sold at 30 cents per pound, which is, in itself, a real bargain, and the fortunate purchaser of the piece with the gold piece in will find a very useful Christmas present.

Among other things to be seen at this enterprising store is a very large stock of Christmas Cakes, Home-made Mince and real English Plum Pudding. In fact, there seems to be no end to the good things, which include dainty Tea Sets of China, Dolls, Glove and Handkerchief Boxes and hundreds of the latest handsome Boxes and Baskets. The assortment of Crackers and Table Decorations is pleasing to the eye and what's more the prices are right, from 10c to $2.00 a box.

They have also a fine stock of Christmas stockings from 10c to $1.50.

In speaking with members of the firm, they said their orders are nearly double that of last year, and they have made every preparation to give every one fullest attention and satisfaction.

To the Editor of The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—I do not wish to do any knocking, but as you invite fair criticism on our municipal government, I thought I would express my views and those of other working men ratepayers in regard to this yarn works bylaw. In the first place, we think the council showed the lack of good judgment when they expected that the ratepayers would entertain this proposition. We are not surprised, as this fault is characteristic of our present municipal government. What we want is not so much men with business ability as free men with character enough of their own, not men who are parasites on the thoughts and acts of other men. A people that travels in herds can never progress.

I have told you what some of the ratepayers think of the Council and this by-law; let me give you a few reasons why they think as they do: It is proposed to lend $12,000 without interest and to exempt this factory from taxes and other privileges will naturally follow. What do we get in return, a factory that is to employ thirty operatives, two-thirds girls, which is nwtety, and it is fair to suppose that they will require about five boys, and the other five will be men. I believe this is a waste of money to put this before the public and if will have a very bad effect if a good thing should come our way.

This looks so ridiculous to some working men that you would find it almost impossible to convince them that there is not some hidden motive in bringing this before the people. If it should carry, you would have all the one-horse establishments in the city asking for exemption and our Council, like the one we have, might give it to them and tax the churches to make it up. Where were our representatives who so nobly defended the principles of equal rights and no exemption when this by-law came up. Do you not think, Mr. Editor, that the amount of wages paid should cut more figure in a case of this kind than the number of hands employed?

Have we anything to give away for so poor a return. In a short time we will be called upon to give $10,000 for a home for the poor. Would it not be a good idea to buy one of thosedefunct factories that have been exempted, so we would not lose the taxes like we did on the Bradburn homestead, that never cost the city a cent.

A change of system of government in the city might or might not do good, it would not hurt to try, as there is certainly room for improvement.

A. RATEPAYER.

K. O. P. CONCERT A MUSICAL TREAT

The local order of the Knights of Pythias is to be congratulated on securing for an appearance here of the celebrated Imperial Male Quartette of London, England, and late of the Lyceum Bureau, Chicago, which gave one of the most enjoyable concerts of the season at the Conservatory Music Hall last evening. The large auditorium was well filled with a most enthusiastic audience, and judging from the hearty applause accorded each number they were thoroughly delighted with the excellent programme provided. And it would have been impossible for the most critical audience to have been otherwise, for, in point of talent, it was of the highest order. The members of the quartette are all artists, whose ability to sing has rarely ever been excelled in Peterborough, and, should they ever visit this city on a future occasion they are assured of a hearty reception. Their programme last evening was varied, it consisting of solos, a duet, and chief of all—the quartette. Their first number was "March Away," and was sung with a swing and an evenness that resulted in the most pleasing harmony. Their next number, "Crossing the Bar," was one of their best efforts and was rendered in a faultless manner.

The quartette was assisted by the Conservatory Orchestra, under the leadership of Mr. Rupert Glidden, and Miss Julia Choate, whose numbers are always a delight to local audiences. The programme, in its entirety, was as follows:

Part I.

PETERBOROUGH AMUSEMENTS

The patronage accorded by the public to the Royal and Princess theatres is an emphatic endorsation of the policy of the management in keeping the quality of the programme always up to the very highest standard and at the same time to maintain the price always the same, no matter how expensive the attraction may prove. This principle is followed out invariably at the Royal. Sometimes there are as many as six vaudeville artists engaged in the programme and the expense is much greater than usual, but Mr. Pappas keeps his price always at the same figure, 5c in the afternoon, and 10c at night. The result is that the people of Peterborough are being given high-class entertainment at the cheapest possible figure, the usual programme being worth much more than the small fee charged. The same is true with the Princess, which shows as fine a line and as many pictures as any photo-play house on the continent. The best films by the foremost manufacturers in America and Europe are shown at this popular theatre, and the films are changed daily. This feature with the singing of Mr. Loftus, is responsible for the splendid business right along. Peterborough is fortunate in having such places of amusement as the Royal and Princess theatres.

WAR'S NEW HORROR

The Development of Flying Machines Brings Many New Methods of Destruction Into Consideration

Two interesting articles relative to the employment of aeroplanes or dirigibles in war, recently appeared in an issue of the Journal of Paris. The first of these deals with experiments made by some officers of Chalais-Meudon in destroying dirigibles. These experiments were made at the Eiffel Tower, and the method employed was to drop arrows, each carrying a small explosive charge, which burst on coming in contact with the envelope of the balloon, setting fire to the gas. A number of small captive balloons were secured round the tower, and the arrows were dropped on them by hand from the first stage. In every case the arrows exploded, igniting the gas and destroying the balloons. Further experiments will be made at varying altitudes. The idea is that an aeroplane or a dirigible with superior speed shall get above the enemy's dirigible and drop the arrows upon it in passing.

The other article, which deals with the employment of aeroplanes as fighting machines, and not mere instruments of reconnaissance involves a good deal of somewhat dry mathematical calculations; but the object of the writer is to show that it is feasible for an aviator to fly over hostile camps discharging bullets broadcast from his machine, and thereby inflicting considerable losses. He began by pointing out that aeroplanes have made flights of sixty miles carrying two passengers. If it is possible to do this, it would, according to the writer in Le Journal, be equally possible for the aviator to carry a quantity of bullets equal to the weight of two passengers. These need not be fired from a gun, because, according to the well-known law which governs the speed of falling bodies, the bullets only require to be released at a sufficient height to acquire sufficient velocity on reaching the ground to kill both men and horses. According to this law a bullet dropped from a height of 3,200 feet would have a velocity of about 480 feet per second on striking the ground. This altitude is easily within the range of aeroplanes, and bullets falling from that height would certainly kill any man or horse if struck in a vital spot. The projectile of the French rifle weighs 27 grammes, and 100 kilogrammes, or about 225 pounds' weight, would contain some 4,000 bullets. One hundred kilogrammes would not, of course, weigh so much as two passengers, and, therefore, could easily be carried by a sufficiently powerful aeroplane. The aviator flying above massed troops could release this cloud of missiles, and probably cause a great number of casualties. He could fly a long way inside the enemy's position of attack, not among the scattered firing lines, but the reserves collected in thick masses of troop on the march, or even soldiers at rest in their tents in camp. In favorable circumstances an aeroplane could make four or five journeys of this kind daily, and fire the equivalent of 20,000 rounds of ammunition. The work could be repeated every day, and the French writer estimates that in this way each aeroplane would be equivalent to four regiments of infantry.

The writer also calculates that in attacking troops in masses, such as on the march or in reserve, at least one bullet in a hundred should be effective, so that each flight of the aeroplane would mean one hundred men killed or wounded. France now possesses at least fifty aeroplanes, which, as the writer estimates each to be equal to three thousand infantry, is equivalent to an army of 150,000 men. Apart from its more distinctive effect, the hail of bullets from an aeroplane might have very far-reaching effects in cases where it was able to be launched, for instance, against a group of general officers or the headquarters staff. It is also pointed out that if the aeroplane is fired at by the soldiers while overhead all the bullets discharged will fall back again in earth with destructive effect upon themselves, added to the effect of those dropped by the aviator. Finally the writer sets out the proposition that aeroplanes used in this way would be vastly superior to artillery as a death-dealing instrument. He urges that experiments should be begun immediately to ascertain the best method of employing them, and to learn the weight of bullet which will give the most destruction when dropped from a height.

SAW VOLCANO IN ACTION

The Ill-Fated Lieut. Boyd Braved Dangers of Every Description During His Last Journey

A thrilling story of explorers' peril for days and nights on a volcano, with the earth opening in great fissures all around them, and rocks and trees hurtling down the mountain side, is told by the sole companion of the late Lieutenant Boyd Alexander, Jose Lopes, who has just arrived in England from the Lake Chad district.

Lieutenant Alexander, it will be remembered, was murdered in the French Soudan early this year, and the story by Lopes is the first personal account of the explorer's last journey across Africa.

It was when they had climbed 8,000 feet up the celebrated Kamerun Peak that Lieutenant Alexander had the rare experience of witnessing on the spot the great earthquake and eruption of the mountain, which lasted with continued severity for five days. There was sufficient warning for the natives and some German residents to escape to the coast, but the British traveller's curiosity tempted him to remain and gather knowledge of a new experience.

How he and his party came alive out of the inferno was miraculous. For several days and nights the shocks were as frequent as every two minutes, and the mountain seemed to leap under him like a live thing. Beneath the earth the tremors rolled with a noise as loud as thunder, and all through the first night and following day torrential rain poured down. The earth opened in huge fissures, and scarps and ledges of rock broke away and tore down the mountainside, levelling the trees in front of them.

The forests and the tall grass shook with a deafening hissing sound, while the great stems snapped like matches, and out of the confusion thousands of monkeys fled screaming in terror down the slopes.

Then at last the crater of the mountain burst open, belching up flame and throwing huge rocks, red-hot, high into the air. These as they fell frequently met in collision others ascending and broke with a noise like exploding shells, scattering far and wide hundreds of fragments, that often fell close to the explorer and his men.

When the earthquake had subsided, observations and photographs were taken of the crater and the lava stream before the party continued their advance to explore the Manenguba Range. All the way great difficulties were experienced in getting food, for the story had gone abroad that the earthquake had been caused by the white man, who had gone up and fired his gun down the crater, thereby rousing to anger the devil, who, the natives believe, dwells within the mountain.

At the Ibi, on the River Benue, the carriers were paid off, and Lieutenant Alexander proceeded alone through dangerous country by way of Yola to Maifoni, while Jose Lopez went round by Kano in order to buy camels for the long desert journey across the continent. It was at Yola that Lieutenant Alexander fell ill with an attack of fever, which was so severe that, had it not been for the skill of the resident doctor, who, as a last resource, plunged his patient in cold water, there could have been no hope of his recovery.

A long rest at Maifoni, while waiting for Jose's arrival with the camels, and the kind hospitality of Captain Brocklebank and Lieutenant Childers Thompson restored to health the explorer, who by then was reduced to a skeleton from fever, hard work and poor living, and at the beginning of 1910 he was ready to set out on the last and most difficult phase of his journey through Wadai and Darfur to Cairo.

The story of his murder at Tama has already been told, but it is not generally known that only a few weeks before the end, at a village called Yoa, to the south-west of Abeshr, he had given himself up for dying this time from blackwater fever but afterwards made a marvellous recovery owing to Jose's resourcefulness in trying a powerful treatment as a last chance.

NOVELTIES IN BIPLANES

France Has the Newest Aircraft, but Flying Machines no Longer Create Wonder

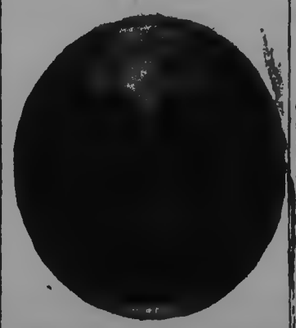
The French republic without doubt leads the world in aviation. In Paris it is so common to see aerial craft of one type or another in operation, that it no longer excites unusual interest, and, in many cases, not much more than ordinary comment. At the recent aviation show in Paris there was a remarkable variety of aerial craft, while the advance that has been made in the general construction of such machines is startling.

Instead of what may now be regarded as the comparatively crude machines of last year, there were to be seen examples of planes and balloons much beyond what the conception of last year seemed possible. Dozens of aeroplanes of practical makes unknown outside of France were to be seen, thus showing the progress that the manufacture of such machines has made.

Among the unusual appearing machines was a monoplane with a fish-shaped "chassis," having two propellers situated between the wings and the tail; a biplane with wings bent inwards at the centre, and a biplane with planes shaped like arcs of a circle the upper ones curved downwards and the lower ones upwards, to meet them.

Women are becoming intensely interested in aviation in France, and although the greater peril, as compared with automobiling, may tend to lessen the number of female aviators, yet there will no doubt be plenty of them within twelve months or so who will be sailing through the sky in their own machines and visiting friends in nearby cities. These assertions may be questioned, but let such doubters look back only one short year and ask themselves if then they would have believed possible such aerial feats as are now being performed daily without creating undue astonishment.

KING DAUDI, THE NEW KING OF UGANDA



Daudi, though King in name, was not fully recognised, but on August 4th he "ate the drum," i.e., he beat a sacred drum on which a python is carved and went through various ceremonies appertaining to taking over the kingdom. Mounted on a historic stool outside the gate of his court, he was dressed (over his clothes) with two bark cloths, a calf skin, and a leopard skin, and presented with shield, spears, bow and arrows, to remind him how his fathers dressed and with what they fought and conquered, and told that he must follow in their footsteps in bravery and caring for his country. He was then carried back in state on a big house on the shoulders of a chief, according to custom.

POWERFUL, BUT SICK

A leading Russian physician closely connected with the Imperial Court, who is now on a visit to Germany, has expressed himself clearly as to the nature of the Czarina's complaint, which is mainly neurasthenia spinalis, or nervous weakness of the spine. The consequences is melancholy and depression and sometimes pains in the back and vertebral column, which makes her very sensitive to any pressure, even the slightest, so that during the spasm even the compression of clothes is felt, and her Majesty prefers remaining in bed.

The other symptoms usual in such cases are heaviness and pains in the limbs that make her lift quickly when walking, cold hands and feet and great nervousness in the weather. The return of the heart is somewhat weakened by diseases from which the Czarina has long suffered, and the attacks of nervous fear and excitement that have occasionally enhanced anemia.

MAY STRIKE AGAIN

The French Strike Was Broken by the Soldiers, but Another Tie-Up is Prophesied

The recent railroad strike in France demonstrates that the French government, once aroused, will stand no nonsense from workingmen strikers who resort to violence and seek to win their cause by such means. In France military service is compulsory. Between the ages of twenty-one and twenty-seven all able-bodied males must serve for two years in the army. Between twenty-seven and forty years of age each must serve in the reserve, every three years, periods of twenty-one, seventeen and nine days. When the government thought the strike had gone far enough a decree was issued calling out 1,860 officials and 27,860 minor employes, and ordering them to serve as soldiers to man the very railroads on which they struck.

With regular troops filling the streets of the principal cities, the strike quickly collapsed, the strikers being convinced that the government would not hesitate to mow them down by the use of artillery. That this would have taken place had the strikers not capitulated cannot be doubted. The life of the republic was very near the balance for a perilous day or two, although the general public was not aware of the fact. With this knowledge Premier Briand and the government was resolved not to give up its existence to the Socialist strikers until the most extreme measures had been taken, for the army was loyal and had obeyed orders in every respect.

Meanwhile, notwithstanding this serious state of affairs, in certain parts of Paris, there was no outward or visible sign that anything unusual was going on, except that the use of electricity was abandoned in business houses, homes etc., which, in itself, was trouble enough, with no elevators running, no street railways run by electricity in operation, all the electric clocks (of which there are tens of thousands in Paris) stopped and no illumination except that by gas and oil.

Nevertheless, although the strike was crushed, the wise ones are prophesying a strike next year that will rule the last one into insignificance, for the spirit of revolt which instigated the last uprising is still rampant and preparing for a greater struggle. Unfortunately, there is no great confidence in President Fallieres, who is not regarded as strong enough to cope with the situation.

WHAT CAN I DO FOR MY SKIN-TORTURED BABY?

Is the Despairing Cry of Thousands of Mothers. A Scotchwomen Tells How Her Child was Cured.

"What can I do for my skin-tortured baby?" How many worried, worn-out mothers, whose children are suffering with eczema, tetter or other torturing, disfiguring humor, have asked themselves this question! Through neglect or improper treatment, some minor eruption has developed into a distressing and unsightly affliction. Simple treatments fail, and stronger ones are tried, sometimes so harsh that the suffering is increased rather than allayed. Even professional aid has proven useless, and the fear is ever-present that the skin disease will become chronic, turning the child's future into a nightmare of physical and mental misery.

Such mothers, who have witnessed their children's suffering and who have undergone the long, sleepless nights and distracting anxiety which they alone can realize, will understand the gratitude that prompted this letter from Mrs John Ewan, 5, Victoria St., Inverurie, Scotland, and will read it with keenest interest:

"I use Cuticura Soap steadily for my baby's skin. She had the eczema when she was three months old. She was in an awful mess all over her body. We never thought she would get over it. We sat with her night and day for about a month, expecting every minute to see her die. The doctor gave me an ointment to rub her with but it did her no good. My mother was home from America and she told me to try Cuticura Ointment and to wash her with Cuticura Soap. There was a great difference when I used the first box. It seemed to soothe her and she slept. I used three boxes of Cuticura Ointment and she was quite cured. She has the purest skin and is the fattest baby now! She is a miracle, the doctor declares. I am glad to tell anybody about it."

And that the success of the Cuticura Remedies is not confined to the treatment of eczema, is amply proven by Mrs. M. A. Schwedt, 674 Springwells Ave., Detroit, Mich., who writes:

"When my little Vivian was about six months old, her papa had a boil on his forehead. At that time the child was covered with prickly heat and I suppose in scratching it her own head became infected, for it broke out in boils, one after another. She had about sixty in all and I used Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment which cured her of them entirely. We do not think any one can praise Cuticura Remedies too highly."

That mothers may test the efficacy and economy of the Cuticura Remedies for themselves, the Potter Drug and Chem. Corp., 121 Columbus Ave., Boston, Mass., will send free on application, a generous trial box of Cuticura Ointment, sufficient to afford immediate relief in the most distressing forms of eczemas, rashes, itchings and scalings of the skin and scalp. Under the influence of Cuticura Ointment, the itching and burning stop, the child falls into a refreshing sleep, the mother rests, and for the first time, perhaps, in many weeks, peace falls on a distracted household. The Cuticura Remedies are sold by druggists everywhere.

BIG QUESTION FOR THE COMMONS

A Vital Subject at the Coming Session Will Probably be the Payment of the Members

The coming session of the British Parliament will in many respects be one of the most interesting England has ever witnessed, so many are the vital question to be taken up. But of all these probably none is of more practical importance than the payment of the members of the House of Commons, a question that has been pushed into the front rank by the now famous Osborne judgment, which refused the labor unions the right to use their money for political campaign expenses and to pay the labor members in the House for their work. The judgment of the court has caused violent excitement in labor circles and the demand was made that the government, whose political existence to a certain extent depends on labor support, must bring forward a bill granting the labor unions the right to use their money for political purposes. A bill of this kind will hardly be able to pass through the House of Commons, as it is constituted now, and if it does, it will surely be killed in the House of Lords. A solution has to be found however. To drive the representatives of labor out of the House of Commons because they cannot afford to sit there is, of course, out of the question, and both great parties are, therefore, advocating, with more or less sincerity, the payment of the chosen representatives of the people. The government will hardly oppose this solution which was already suggested by Gladstone in a conversation with John Morley in 1891, but what is more remarkable is that even the ultra conservative press, like the "Morning Post," is in favor of it. Mr. Balfour has not said anything yet, but it is more than likely that Austen Chamberlain, who tries to imitate his father in everything, even in appearance, may champion the cause Joseph Chamberlain fought for twenty-five years ago. At any rate, the question will surely come up for discussion in the House of Commons, and the demand made by the Chartists in 1873, and which was then considered revolutionary, may be carried through in 1910.

MOOSE LEAVING MAINE

And Going to New Brunswick, Says Boston Doctor

Dr. Charles M. Whitney and Dr. A. C. Pearce, of Boston, recently spent some time in the backwoods of New Brunswick taking pictures of big game and enjoying life in the woods. Dr. Whitney is said to have the finest series of big game pictures in the world, and obtained between sixty and seventy more as a result of his recent trip. Dr. Pearce stated: "The moose are leaving Maine and coming to New Brunswick. I am sure I am right in my statement. I can also say that the moose down here appear wiser than those in Maine and more difficult to approach. Dr. Whitney saw over two hundred on his trip and I myself saw over one hundred. Some fine specimens were included, and the sportsmen coming to New Brunswick should increase annually."

FLATTERY PAYS

"You will become the wife of a famous man," says the fortune-teller.

"But I don't want to be the wife of a notable, and be unheard of all the time for that reason."

"Ah, then," explains the soothsayer, "your husband will be famous only because he has such a beautiful wife."

With a pretty smile of appreciation the flattered gentlemanly palm the fortune-teller offers his second fee.

AERIAL FLEET OF BRITAIN

Two Biplanes have been ordered in France by the War Department

The British War Office is now taking steps to possess an aerial fleet. Orders have just been given to M. Henri Farman and to M. Paulhan for two biplanes of the military type.

These are expected to be delivered in England in about two months' time.

They will not be the first aeroplanes belonging to the British Army, for a Blériot monoplane of 50 horse-power has already been delivered.

This Blériot monoplane has, it is said, proved a great success, and negotiations are taking place now which may result in the purchase by Great Britain of several more aeroplanes of the same kind.

The Farman biplane which has just been ordered will be a splendid machine. M. Farman himself states that he has great hopes that it will prove almost perfect for its purpose.

It will carry two passengers, and will hold petrol for a five-hour flight. It is so constructed that in front of one of the occupants there is a space which will carry a large quantity of explosives. The cost is a little over $5,000.

THE CHANGES OF A YEAR

Ex-King Manuel Celebrated the Attainment of His Majority Very Quietly

Just a little over a year ago, on Nov. 16th, 1909, the bells of Windsor were ringing, flags were flying, bands were playing—King Manuel of Portugal, then on a visit to England, had reached his 20th birthday. What a change has come about in the short period dividing us from that festive day. The Royal host of Windsor, who accompanied his guest to the shoot that bright autumn morning, now lies in his coffin, and Manuel no longer wears a crown. There was no demonstration of any kind at Wood Norton last week, when King Manuel attained his majority. The Duke of Orleans left for the Continent a few days ago, and the only residents now at Wood Norton are the Duchess of Orleans (who is confined to her room), King Manuel, Queen Amelia, the Duke of Oporto, and the members of their suites. The youthful ex-king was the recipient of birthday congratulations from members of his family and his entourage, and he also received a large number of telegrams from all parts of the Continent. During the day King Manuel and his mother were walking in the grounds, and the young king also went shooting. He has recently taken to cycling.

RENT FINERY BY SEASON

Ladies of Fashion in Paris Can Blossom Out in New Furs at Comparatively Small Cost

It is not generally known, but it is nevertheless a fact, that many of the handsome furs seen on women of fashion in Paris are merely rented, either for the season or for some special occasion. Although the rental charged is very high, the woman obtaining them can give the impression that the furs are actually hers, and after returning them to the furrier at the end of the season she can appear the following season with another set, obtained in the same manner.

Of course the renter is obliged to deposit the full value of the garments with the furrier. In case they are damaged the amount agreed upon is deducted from the sum deposited.

WHAT WOMEN LIKE IN MEN

Liberality in All Things the Quality Most Admired

Women like liberality in men, a largeness of view, a contempt of the petty, a certain splendid carelessness about the small things that do not count, says a magazine writer. A touch of irresponsibility even appeals to the feminine imagination, perhaps because responsibility is so much insisted on for women that they admire when they see it trampled on by men. Minute exactness, "fussing," too much system, insistence on the unimportant, are all traits that women despise when men exhibit them. They like a man who has a merry way of throwing aside the little cares of life and laughing at them, who doesn't bother his head over small affairs, who is magnificent in his neglect of rules and regulations. Women in their secret heart think that a man—the right sort of man—is entitled to do just what he pleases, and when they find him doing it in defiance of everybody and everything, having his own way in a kind of triumphant lawlessness, they may deplore it in their speech, but it delights their fancy all the same. It is so utterly unlike their way of doing things, so unlike their little indirections, their tortuous fashion of arriving at results, their small hypocrisies. They do not wholly understand it; and perhaps that is one more reason why it so appeals to them. Parsimony, stinginess, numbering pennies, and counting the cost—these things are perhaps of all the most obnoxious to a woman. She can love a prodigal, but she cannot take the slightest interest in a miser.

PROFITED BY KING'S FUNERAL

During a county court case at Marylebone recently respecting stands near Edgware-road not being completed by a certain date, Mr. H. B. V. Currie, of the Victoria Seating Company, said he made about £1,000 profit in the series of transactions providing seats from which to view the late King's funeral procession.

THE CANOPY BEARERS

Four Duchesses Will be Chosen for an Interesting Ceremony at Coronation

It is not uninteresting to remember that stature, not precedence was the first consideration in the choosing of the four duchesses who held the canopy over Queen Alexandra's head during the ceremony of crowning. The Duchesses of Sutherland, Marlborough, Montrose and Portland were chosen as all are tall and all pretty much of a height. Whether Queen Mary will choose her attendants by the same method remains to be seen, but it is more probable that the choice will be made according to rank, in which case the Duchesses of Norfolk, Somerset, Beaufort, and Leeds would probably take office.

QUEEN'S CORONATION FAN

Her Majesty Will Wield an Elaborate and Dainty Weather Cooler

The Worshipful Company of Fanmakers have accepted the design of Mr. G. Woolliscroft Rhead, of Putney, for the Honiton lace fan to be presented to Queen Mary for use on Coronation Day.

The fan, which will be entirely of British manufacture, will bear in the centre the Royal crown and cypher, together with the arms of England, Ireland, Scotland, and Wales, and will have a filling of roses, shamrocks and thistles. The stick, which will be of yellow tortoiseshell, will also bear the crown and cypher in gold.

MUST FOREGO HOLIDAY

Great Britain's Prime Minister Cannot Spare Time for a Jaunt to Switzerland

The Prime Minister's arrangement for a delightful winter holiday have not been facilitated by the breakdown of the Veto Conference. The right honorable gentleman had arranged to visit Switzerland in company with Mrs. Asquith during the second half of January. Large suites of rooms were engaged some time ago at hotels at Wengen and Missen, where the winter sports now attract so many visitors. The Prime Minister will now, on account of the general elections, probably find himself condemned to forego his Swiss holiday in favor of January in London.

A KING'S GRACEFUL ACT

The Spanish Sovereign Shows Sympathy in a Practical Way for a Policeman's Widow

King Alfonso has just sent a present to the widow of a Paris policeman, which recalls the bomb incident in the Rue de Rohan during his first visit to Paris. One of the policemen, it may be remembered, was injured at the time by a fall from his horse. He died recently, after retiring from the service, and some one sent a cutting from a newspaper reporting the ex-policeman's death to King Alfonso. He answered at once in a touching letter through his private secretary, and enclosed a cheque for the widow.

PALACE ON WHEELS FOR HIS MAJESTY

Most Beautiful Railway Carriage in the World in Which King Takes His Journeys

To embellish and beautify a railway carriage so that it combines the perfect taste, the elegance, and comfort of a famous apartment in a Royal palace, would seem almost an impossibility to those who know by experience how uncomfortable a long railway journey can be. The impossible, however, is achieved in the magnificent Royal railway carriage made for the King and Queen of England. There is nothing in the world that furnishes such a striking contrast with the ordinary railway coach. It is really a drawing-room—in fact, a Royal palace on wheels.

This unique train is composed of six carriages, and the decorations and fittings of the interior are said to be unequalled in any rolling-stock in the world.

There are two saloons, one for the King and one for the Queen, and every conceivable contrivance for their Majesties' comfort has been installed. King George's saloon is decorated in white enamel and light green the furniture being of satin-wood inlaid with ivory. The saloon occupied by Queen Mary is also white enamel, relieved by touches of blue, and soft shades of pink. The smoking-room is a cosy apartment in mahogany, with fine inlays of rosewood and satinwood, while the dining-car is a sumptuous coach, the kitchen a model. There are balconies to each saloon, which are fitted with windows, so that they can be used as observation cars.

But even before their Majesties' comfort comes the consideration of their safety, and the precaution taken by a railway company to ensure against accidents during the Royal progress are of the most elaborate character. Fifteen minutes ahead of every Royal train goes a pilot engine, to see that the line, which has been cleared a quarter of an hour earlier, is in perfect order. Every quarter of a mile on both sides of the line a platelayer is stationed with hand signals and detonators in case of emergency. Each keeps in sight of his fellow, both on the right hand and the left, and no matter if the journey is from London to Scotland, the line is guarded in the same way throughout. When either the King or Queen travels to Balmoral, for instance, several hundred workmen are so engaged. By the side of the driver on the engine is a special look-out man, and on the train itself are all the principal officers of the company, a full complement of artificers in case of a breakdown, and two guards in electrical communication with the driver.

It also means that all ordinary traffic on the route is paralyzed for an hour, but thus their Majesties' safety is secured.

MONUMENT TO SHAKESPEARE

The city of Verona is erecting a monument to Shakespeare. The Veronese consider they have an intimate connection with the poet through "The Two Gentlemen of Verona," and because their city is that of "Romeo and Juliet."

Visitors to the city are shown by the guides the Palace of the Capulets and the ruined house of Romeo. There is also, of course, the tomb of Juliet, the genuineness of which visitors are expected to accept. Verona, with Romeo and Juliet, rivals Elsinore with Hamlet in tribute to the imagination—and London is still without the monument to the world's greatest poet.

It is computed that 950,000 dinners and lunches are served daily in London restaurants.

LIVE GEESE AS DECOYS

Mr. George Carruthers, of Winnipeg, has trained some live geese as decoys and they act most effectively. The geese appear to know that they are safe however fierce may be the cannonade, and accordingly they continue to call down the passing flocks by every goosey wile of which they are capable. Many offers have been made for the use of these trained decoys, but their owner prefers to keep them under the cover of his own gun.

The Night Of Flying Candles

A Short Story.

By Mrs. C. N. Williamson. All Rights Reserved

It was carnival time, and it seemed to me that every soul in gay little Mentone was bubbling over with the joy of life except myself.

In the beginning I had been happy too. When I came out about Christmas time to spend the rest of the season on the Riviera, to paint pictures and amuse myself, I thought that on the whole I was a lucky mortal. I was young and strong, with no pressing responsibilities; and since last year's Academy, people had begun to say to each other, "That chap Cyril Havelock seems to be doing good work." I had meant to make a few sketches round about Mentone, and then move farther on; but after I had been stopping for a day or two at a quiet hotel, my name was seen in the local papers, and somehow I was drawn half-reluctantly into society. I went to a dance one night, met Virginia Arnold, and—that was the beginning of the end. Before our first waltz was over, I knew what was bound to happen to me. Knowing this, I should have had strength of mind to leave Mentone, or at all events to keep out of her way, and never see the girl again, for it "works like madness in the brain" to worship a woman without hope that she may be won.

I had heard of Miss Arnold last summer in London, where she had been presented and made a great sensation, not only because she was the American heiress of the hour, but because of her great beauty, and charming, simple ways. Fate would have it, however, that I was to travel to the Riviera to meet her, and to be miserable.

I had always felt rather a contempt for men who made fools of themselves about girls they could never hope to marry, when all that was needed in the beginning was a little resolution; but now I had to find out that "he jests at scars who never felt a wound." I did not go away; I did not keep out of the way. On the contrary, I eagerly availed myself of every opportunity of seeing Virginia Arnold, though I was grimly aware of the misery I was storing up for myself in a future empty of her. I joined the Tennis Club because she was a member; I went on excursions up into the mountains, walking beside the red-saddled donkey on which she merrily rode. I had never cared much for dancing, but now I never missed a ball, and they were frequent. By the arrival of Carnival week, I was the most unhappy man alive; for even if I could have got the girl to care for me more than for hundreds of more eligible men, who were ready to give ten years of their lives for a chance, I felt that it would be a caddish act for a poor young artist—not even famous yet—to dare to offer himself as a husband for the heiress to twenty millions.

Virginia's father, who had brought her to the Riviera (the mother had died years ago), was a hard-headed business man, passionately proud of his daughter, under the cool, quiet manner characteristic of him, and holding ambitious views for her future. What these views were, it was not difficult to guess; for Lady Grantonville was also staying at the Riviera Palace, chaperoning Miss Arnold, and her son, Lord Grant (who would be the Marquis of Grantonville some day), had given up his beloved hunting to join his mother in Mentone.

Virginia and Lord Grant were constantly together. He was not bad looking, but was an irritatingly slow young man, who had a dormouse air of being only half awake. Even in my most furiously jealous moments—and they were too many for my peace by or rest by night—I could scarcely believe that so bright and starry a girl as Virginia could really enjoy his society.

Prompted by his energetic parent, however, Lord Grant was continually evolving plans to please Miss Arnold, and then drowsily proceeding to carry them out. He owned a magnificent motor car, and hired a small steam launch, so that he was always prepared for expeditions by land or sea, whichever the whim of a spoiled girl might suggest. He had also brought out several fine saddle horses from England, and Virginia was allowed to ride with him, chaperoned only by a discreet groom. When this programme began, the dear, idyllic donkey excursions were given up; but once I was able to score over my fortunate rival and to score heavily. The was when my friend, Manuel Cortes, appeared on the scene with his marvellous electric airship, which was still the talk of the hour.

The invention of Cortes had not only made a better record than any other airship yet invented, but it triumphed in combined lightness and the superior size of the car attached, which was able to carry two persons. It was easy to steer and practically noiseless.

I had known Cortes intimately when I was painting in Spain last year, and we had corresponded intermittently ever since. He said that his visit to Mentone was paid on my account, and that we would "do some good things together with the machine." We did the good things which excited the surprise of everybody, and the (literally) soaring ambition of Virginia Arnold. I heard that she was "dying" for a flight in air with Signor Cortes, and he was delighted to grant the favor for me. Her father, after some persuasion, sanctioned the adventure, which lasted for an hour, described by Virginia as "the time of her life." After that, I flattered myself that mere motor cars and common steam launches would seem tame to one who had sailed in ether.

But this triumph of mine was now a thing of the past, and Cortes was attracting crowds of journalists to Monte Carlo, when the Mentone Carnival week began. Lord Grant had taken Virginia and a dozen others on his launch to Villefranche for the naval battle of flowers (a party in which I was not included); we had all been to Nice one day for the Corso Carnivalesque; had had a wild afternoon of confetti-throwing in the Menton streets, hidden under masks and dominoes; and at last came the evening of "Moccoletti"—the night of flying candles.

Lady Grantonville had not wanted Virginia to venture out for this, as the Moccoletti (an entertainment of early Italian origin, consisting of running about with lighted candles, trying to keep yours alight, and doing your best to blow out those of others) sometimes draws a rather rough crowd into the streets. But the girl had pleaded for the fun, which was entirely new to her, as she had never before been to the Riviera; and at last her chaperon consented, slyly making it a condition that Lord Grant should never leave her side.

Virginia had on the same domino she had worn in the afternoon, which was a little imprudent if she did not wish to be known, as she had taken off her mask for tea at Rumpelmeyer's, and had afterwards driven home in an open carriage without it. The domino was of white satin, with a bunch of violets on the hood and another at the throat, so that, even when the little black lace mask hid her beauty, she was a conspicuous figure among others less charming. Knowing that she was to be in Lord Grant's care, and that I was not wanted, I decided that I would not go out for the Moccoletti; but I wandered up and down the corridor at my hotel like a lost spirit, and finally threw my wise resolution to the winds. The thought of Virginia drew me like a magnet; and presently I, too, was in the crowded streets, which overflowed with merry-makers in quaint costumes, as a stream of sparkling water overflows its banks. Festoons of scarlet and yellow lanterns swayed above the heads of the crowds, like tulips shaken by the wind; red and purple fire shone into black eyes, and lit up laughing, unmasked faces, while everywhere the candles flitted, small yellow sparks in the blue, illuminated dusk, uncertain in their movements as fireflies.

In the long main street my eyes, quickened by love and jealousy, soon separated Virginia Arnold in her white domino and Lord Grant in his crimson one from the irrelevant crowd. They were in the far distance, but I saw them, and knew that there could be no mistake.

The girl had thoroughly entered into the fantastic spirit of the night. Her slim white figure flew back and forth, threading the crowd like a delicate ivory shuttle weaving through a skein of bright colored wool. She held her lighted candle high above her head, and so quick and skilful was she, springing on tip-toe or dipping unexpectedly down, that while she blew out a dozen candles, no one could succeed in quenching the light of hers. Lord Grant was much slower in his movements, and followed his charge at a distance, clumsily but conscientiously. I noticed that a tall man in the dress of a Brown Carmelite had singled her out, and was making a determined attack upon her candle. She caught sight of him also, realized his intention, and was evidently bent on defeating it. She darted away like a swallow, skimming up the street towards the towering, huddled mass of the old town, the Brown Carmelite close upon her heels. Grant—who should have sided and abetted her—hopelessly left behind swamped among the contending eddies of the throng.

Unmasked as I was, and without the candle which was the insignia of the night, I could no longer resist the temptation to usurp the privilege of guardian, which Grant did not seem able to maintain. I ruthlessly elbowed the good-natured crowd as I pursued, always keeping the white domino in sight, when suddenly a girl, pushed roughly by a young peasant, who strove to blow out her candle, stumbled and fell in front of me. I should have been a brute if I had not restrained my impatience far enough to snatch her up, and set her safely on her feet again.

"Why, it is you, 'Phrasie!" I exclaimed, finding close to mine the handsome, dark face of the young woman who had served as my chief model since I came to Mentone. "I hope you are not hurt?"

"No, no, monsieur, not at all, thank you. I was in too great a hurry," she replied in the mongrel Italian-French patois which I had come now to understand. But there was no smile on her red lips, and her eyes were strained and eager. Without waiting for further words, she dashed away up the street which led on, round a slight bend, to the old town. I followed, not for 'Phrasie Voglio, but for Virginia Arnold.

Here the path was clearer; the crowd merely overflowed a little, in a thin trickle of individuals, beyond the spot at which I had been stopped. Passing the bend, I could see a long way ahead, but Virginia had vanished. Lord Grant was close in front of me now, and, turning as if he felt my presence, he spoke my name.

"Hallo, Havelock," he said. "It's confoundedly provoking; but I've lost Miss Arnold, who was in my charge. Suddenly she disappeared, just as if she'd put on an invisible cloak. Queer thing, isn't it?"

I felt furious with the slow, blundering fellow, but I said that Miss Arnold must have run up one of the narrow cross-streets, and if he liked, I could help him find her. He was glad enough of my assistance, and I tried to assure myself that in a minute we should be upon Virginia's track; that I should then have won the right to remain by her side. But we searched everywhere vainly. From mere annoyance our trouble grew to alarm, then to sickening fear. We questioned everyone we met, but several had seen the slender figure in the white domino with the violets, no one knew which way it had eventually gone.

For hours our search lasted. Her father had to be told, and rated Lord Grant soundly with certain strong American words. Then the police were informed, and all Mentone was ransacked unavailing for the missing girl. Next morning, telegrams were sent summoning detectives from Paris. The place buzzed with gossip, which was maddening to me. Some thought that the heiress had eloped with a lover disapproved by her people; others whispered of murder and horrors not to be spoken aloud; thus days passed, and nothing was heard of Virginia Arnold.

I was almost out of my senses. I could not sleep or think, much less paint. Most of my time I spent in wandering about the neighbourhood, trying to learn something, for my belief was that my darling, as a famous American heiress, had been kidnapped for a ransom. Again and again Euphrasie Voglio came in vain to the studio I had taken in the old town.—so I heard from the shopkeeper on the ground floor,—but at last she left a note. I had supposed that she merely wanted an appointment to pose for my half finished picture of "La Mentonaise," but it seemed there was something more. "I beg that Monsieur will see me," she had scrawled in ill-spelled French. "It is to me a matter of life and death, and maybe to him also of some importance. I will call once more at three o'clock to-day."

I returned to the studio at that hour, expecting to be asked for my advice on some silly love affair, as 'Phrasie was a local beauty with more than one admirer; and she pretended to set great value on my opinion.

Her first words, however, startled me out of my indifference. "Monsieur 'Avelock is interested about the young lady who has disappeared?"

"Yes," I said brusquely.

The girl gave a glance at the studio door which was closed, tip-toed to it, and peeped out on the dark landing, then returned to me with pale face, and great black, dilated eyes.

"Monsieur will swear, before I begin, that whatever happens he will keep what I may tell him secret?"

"How can I swear without knowing?"

"You must, if I am to speak. Oh, do not fear, Monsier, it's not necessary to repeat the thing I speak of."

"You may trust me then," I said.

She came very close to me. "I think you care for Mademoiselle Virginia Arnold?"

The girl's manner was almost primitively sincere, and the impulse was upon me to answer her with equal sincerity.

"I care for her more than for all the rest of the world!" I exclaimed.

"I thought so! I have thought it since the night of moccoletti. I can tell you where she is, if by all you hold sacred you vow to me that you will keep the secret, while you try to save her. If you do not make that vow, I shall be silent. Nothing can make me speak. They might put me in prison, and I would say that I knew no more than a babe unborn."

"I swear to be silent," I said.

"It is Francois Rimaldi who planned everything, and stole her," whispered 'Phrasie. "I know, because we are lovers—or we have been. He had to ask my help, for the place where he wished to take Mademoiselle first, belonged to my stepfather, and I could get the key without rousing suspicion at home. Anything is possible on moccoletti night! Francois is a socialist, and has been disappointed in his ambiton, he knew how rich Mademoiselle's father is, and that he would pay anything to buy his daughter's safety. Francois meant to keep Mademoiselle Arnold hidden for a few days, and then treat for ransom in such a way that the father would not dare let the police interfere, on pain of death for his daughter. When a hundred thousand francs had been paid them Mademoiselle was to be smuggled home; Francois and I were to marry and be rich for the rest of our lives. I believed all my lover said—indeed I think still he was honest towards me in the beginning. He disguised himself as a monk, and followed the young American lady through the streets as if to blow out her candle. She ran on and on, out of sight of her friends, never thinking of danger. Monsieur, you know my stepfather's little wood-carving shop in the old town here; the room on the sea level—or rather a little below, for go down two steps when you have opened the low, green door. The shop was closed at that hour, but I had got the key for Francois, and nobody knew. He had the key for Francois, and nobody knew. He had the door standing already ajar, gave Mademoiselle a push as she passed, which sent her stumbling against it. She fell down the steps, dazed, and he held a sponge wet with chloroform to her face till she was unconscious. Then when he had locked the door, he wrapped a big, cheap, black domino over her white one, and carried her up the stairs behind the shop, which takes one to a door in the upper street at the back, on a level with the next storey. There, a covered cart was waiting, with the brother of Francois as driver. After that, all was simple. They drove up the road towards the mountain village of Sospel, but they did not go nearly so far as that. Remember, it was now late at night. The mountain roads were deserted, and they were safe to do what they would. The plan they had thought of was a clever one. You know the hermit's cave near the opening of the Gourg del' Ora?"

"Do you mean that hole high up in the face of the mountain, where they say a hermit lived two or three hundred years ago, the front of which is artificially walled in, with a square window near the top?—the place which the peasants tell you is impossible to reach now, though it looks as if it might be easy enough to find some steep, winding path along the mountain?"

"Yes, Monsieur, that is what I mean. There is a way to the cave of course, though it is known to very few, and is difficult for even those who have once found it to find again. Well, it was there that Francois and his two brothers took Mademoiselle. They left the cart and carried her slowly, carefully, up the path which they knew so well that they could see it by the light of the rising moon. But they did not need to go all the way up to the cave. A long distance below there is another hole, which cannot be seen by strangers because of creepers and bushes. Inside rough steps are cut, and at last you come out into the cave itself. Mademoiselle is hidden in the cave still, far, far up on the mountain side, miles away from any house or village. She might scream all day for help and no one would hear, or if they did they would dnot know where to look, or what the cry meant. Francois has a sister of fifteen or sixteen, who is not quite mad, yet she is not like other girls; but she is devoted to her brothers. She will do whatever they tell her, if it were to steal or kill; and it is she who lives in the cave with Mademoiselle—just those two alone; but Francois' two brothers are always outside, on guard, and armed, and at night, Francois is there also, watching. I do not know how to reach the cave by the path so I can not tell you how to go. As for the lower entrance by the rock passage, it would be useless to look for it on the great face of the mountain, for there are countless holes into which one might go by mistake, and never come out—places which would lead to nothing but death. Even if you could discover the way to the Hermit's cave and surprise the brothers, before you could get in—you and those you might take with you,—they would either have killed Mademoiselle, or spirited her off, by the other entrance. They would die themselves, now they have gone so far, rather than give her up alive without the ransom they are aiming for."

"Yet she must be saved!" I exclaimed. "Surely, you have not been telling this story with the object of torturing me for no end?"

"No, above all things I want you to find a way of saving her, for my sake even more than yours, for Francois is playing me false, and I am half mad with rage because I can do nothing. He had to confide his plans to me, or I would not have trusted or consented to help him in the beginning, and he counted on my love and loyalty. But when he had the young American lady safely imprisoned in the cave he said to himself—oh, I know it well!—how beautiful she was, and how much better it would be to have her for his wife and all her millions of English pounds beside, than a few paltry million francs of ransom. If this were not so, I would have cut out my tongue sooner than betray him; and even now I have made you swear secrecy, so that, in spite of all, no harm can touch Francois. He has not confessed his treachery to me, but I see what is in his mind by the way his eyes refuse to meet mine, and his confusion when I question him. If he had not resolved to play some new game, he would have spoken by this time to negotiate with Mademoiselle's father for the ransom; but he has not made a move to do that. Besides, the eldest brother, who is a priest, (but not a good priest), is expected from Toulon. I know. When this news was dropped by Francois' mother, I quickly put two and two together. Somehow they will force Mademoiselle to marry him, and once she's Francois' wife, the father must make the best of it for his daughter's sake. At worst, Francois Rimaldi is one of the handsomest men you have ever seen, handsome enough to win even a great lady's admiration. Monsieur Arnold might buy a title for him if he chose, and take him over to America a nobleman. It is this, perhaps, on which Francois counts; but he counts without me. Oh, I cannot bear the misery he has put in my heart. Something must be done. Help me, Monsieur, because you wish to help yourself. Think—think how you can rescue the lady you love; but do not dream of attacking Francois, for if you do, she will not live to thank you; I warn you of that, and I know it is the truth."

I was inclined to believe 'Phrasie's story, and to believe also that her caution was not misplaced. A man who would do what Francois Rimaldi had already done, if driven to bay, would be capable of anything. Promising 'Phrasie that I would keep the secret, and that for my own sake I would not be slow in forming some plan, I sent the girl away. Then, alone once more in my studio I thought till my brain ached.

If I went to Francois Rimaldi and tried threats or bribery, he would know at once that 'Phrasie had betrayed him, and he would surely take swift revenge. If I broke my word to the girl, and gave the alarm to the police, there was little doubt that Virginia would be hidden elsewhere, or murdered before the cave could be entered. The same danger was to be feared if a private rescue-party set out in secret, for the watchers would not be caught asleep.

Suddenly, when I had built up plan after plan, only to see them tumble down again one after another as if reared on sand, a new and extraordinary idea flashed into my mind. I hardly gave myself time to develop it before rushing down the five flights of stone stairs between my studio and the street, and wiring to Manuel Cortes at Monte Carlo. I sent a telegram in cipher, which must have surprised him somewhat, though he was not easy to surprise; and an hour later it was answered by the one word—"Yes." Satisfied so far, I went to my hotel; and towards evening one of my fellow guests brought exciting news into the big hall where I and a number of others were sitting.

"That chap, Cortes, has come back with his electric flying machine. Half the town is out, watching it. He's landed on that big open space near Cap Martin. I'd been told the best feature of this machine was that it could be steered as easily as a motor car, and that, once master of the mechanism, you could do as you liked with it. But I wouldn't have believed it, if I hadn't seen the man manœuvring with my own eyes. And the thing is noiseless, except for a sound like the wind among trees."

Sea and sky had melted together in violet dusk when Cortes and I met at an hotel on the sea front as arranged in my telegram to him.

"You are a friend worth having!" I exclaimed. "You must be wondering if I have gone out of my senses. But I'll explain everything and—"

"Do that while we dine," he broke in, "if you think I've earned my dinner."

I did think so, and was forced to humour him, though I could eat nothing. Besides, we wanted darkness and night for the work I hoped to do.

When Cortes understood the strange circumstances, he agreed with me in thinking it best not to take the girl's father into the secret. Such suspense would be hard for him to bear, and then, he might be imprudent, not realising all that 'Phrasie's warning meant."

Though it would be next to impossible to find the hermit's cave by means of a hidden path, especially at night, the hole in the face of the rock, walled in with masonry, was in itself a conspicuous object enough even at a distance. The scheme which Cortes and I now elaborated together was this. He would take his electric air-ship (with me as his companion) in the direction of the cave, and as far as possible on a level with it, until, by the clear light of the stars, we should have made sure of the position. Then he would mount higher, bringing the machine to rest above the cave, and leaving it, we would make fast to the rocks a curier rope ladder which he always carried on hisserial expeditions in case of emergencies. On this ladder we would descend to the square window in the old masonry which shut in the front of the cave. We would noiselessly let ourselves down inside, and draw our revolvers on the Rimaldis before they knew that they had been attacked.

It was ten o'clock whn we started and the night was dark save for the stars. Mentone goes early to bed, except when there is a dance or some other entertainment on and the little town, so gay by daylight, was already as silent as if it lay under a spell. arrival had died down, and no one was near it save Cortes' own man, who travelled with him usually, unless he wished for another companion in his stead.

The spot chosen as a resting place for the Lig stealthy "winged dragon" (as Virginia had once named it) was lonely, and we got off unobserved. Never shall I forget that flight through the night, seeming to swim among the stars.

We flew swiftly, and the hills lay like dark, tumbled waves beneath us. Once, we missed our way, but found it again, and when the shadowed Gourg del Ora opened we saw a pale glimmering spot on the mountain face, which meant the front of the hermit's cave.

We rose above it, and alighted as if on a bird's back on a long, level space like a shelf overhanging the cave. Five minutes later our rope ladder was securely fastened and descending—we had reason to hope from the bearings we had taken—directly in front of the hermit's window. I went down first, Cortes following closely.

The night was still, save for the stirring of a light wind which had fortunately covered the whirr of our winged machine, yet had not been strong enough to alter its course. The ladder was only just long enough. Had there been three feet less of it the venture must have been vain; but we had calculated rightly. As I descended to the limit of the rope, the black square of the roughly formed window was almost in front of my face.

Stealthily I set my foot on the ledge of ancient masonry. Not a stone, not a particle of plaster fell. Clinging to the window-frame I began letting myself noiselessly down into the cave, and as I did so, Cortes reached the window to go through the same manœuvres just successfully accomplished by me.

Hanging on to the window ledge by one hand, I drew from my pocket a small electric lantern which I had bought earlier in the day for this very purpose. Suddenly the cave was lit with a strong white light, and in a flash I saw the interior, which was divided into two rooms, the rough open doorway of the further one hung with a curtain of some new, red material. A couple of men sprang up, dazed with sleep, almost under my feet. Before they knew what had happened I had dropped on top of them and Cortes after me.

In letting myself down, I left the lantern hanging from the window ledge by a hook, so that we could see what we were doing. We had revolvers, and so had the enemy, but they were confused by the unexpectedness of the attack, and we had all the advantage. We sprang on the two, and had disarmed them with scarcely a struggle when we heard a cry from behind the red curtain. It was pushed aside and Virginia Arnold ran out crying, "Save me! The girl has a knife! She'll kill me for her brother's sake."

I sprang to her, knocking down one of the men, and catching my love in my arms, as she would have fallen. Cortes had his man down also, when suddenly the one I had flung on the floor rolled towards the wall, and, to my amazement disappeared. For a second or two Cortes must have loosened his hold upon the other, for, before we could have counted three, they had both vanished in the same mysterious way. Cortes, his Spanish blood up, would have followed, but Virginia, clinging to me, exclaimed. "Let them go. It is a trap. The underground path is there, and Francois, one of the brothers, is below. Take me away, before he comes, for he is terrible."

She was right, for, once she was saved, my promise to 'Phrasie would prevent my taking revenge upon the Rimaldis. Cortes sprang at the high window-ledge, and in a moment sat astride of it. I handed Virginia up to him, then turned to defend myself from the half-witted girl, who would have crept up from behind and stabbed me in the back. With an eerie shriek of rage, as I wrested her knife away, she darted towards the underground passage, and I made no move to stop her. By this time Virginia was crying out that she could not, could not go up the rope ladder. But somehow she did go, when Cortes had mounted to the top, and while I kept guard in the window. When I was half way up, I heard a yell from below, and sent back a laugh of defiance. I have often wondered since whether the brothers believed themselves baffled by magic, and whether, watching at their cave door, they saw the winged dragon flit by. Cortes and Virginia made the flight alone. There was no room for a third passenger and I waited until dawn on the plateau when, by scrambling, I eventually found my way down. Of the Rimaldis I saw nothing. For 'Phrasie's sake they were to go free; and I fancy they think to this day that some supernatural power intervened to snatch away their triumph.

Now, without more telling, you will see how Lord Grant lost the heiress, and her father forgot ambition in giving her to me. Mr. Arnold, Cortes, Virginia and I kept the real truth of her adventure to ourselves. The story of an ordinary kidnapping for ransom and a high payment was allowed to be whispered round. It was considered natural that the Arnolds did not like to discuss the unpleasant affair; and a new sensation was given to Mentone by our marriage a week later. I am not sure that some people did not believe me the kidnapper, who had returned Virginia to her parent's arms on condition that I should marry her. But that is a detail. Cortes was my best man, and he has been commissioned to make an air ship for Virginia.

CHRISTMAS SHOPPERS

Morning shopping is sometimes alluring to the somewhat depleted purse.

Please shop in the morning or in the evening.

Articles advertised are only random examples. Hundreds more in the stores for the finding.

Men are naturally of a practical turn of mind, and the gifts they appreciate most are invariably those that contribute to their comfort.

An incomparable array of Christmas gifts of both a practical and lasting nature can be found in the stores of the merchants who advertise in the Examiner.

Every accommodation, attention and service should be given by clerks to gift purchasers. Everything boxable handsomely boxed — everything engraveable artistically engraved.

Don't forget, now, that there are many others besides yourself, who will put off buying one or two items until the last—that will congest the last few days terribly — so, do your shopping to-day.

The time for Christmas shopping is short. If you wait, you'll have to hurry, and hurry means worry. The novelties that are sold first may be the very things that you would like to have had best of all.

Don't be one of the Last Minuters the-Man-with-the-bewildered look on his face, who thought he could do all his shopping in an hour, and the Woman-who-puts-everything-off-until-the-last and goes rushing wildly around looking for something to give.

Handkerchiefs always make an acceptable remembrance for Christmas. They can be found in attractive groups at popular prices, neatly enclosed in boxes with daintily designed covers — some with holly wreaths, others with pictoral subjects, etc.

STOPS TRAIN BY WIRELESS

Successful Experiment Conducted on C. P. R.—Toronto Man's Invention

TORONTO, DEC. 9—Frank W. Prentice of Melbourne avenue, this city, has invented an electric device by which railway trains may be stopped at any point on the line and collisions made practically impossible. A successful test was made on a C. P. R. locomotive between West Toronto and North Parkdale yesterday afternoon. A train running at 60 miles an hour was brought to a stand still without the engineer even touching the throttle.

The system is worked by means of the wireless. The roadway is divided into blocks from 2,500 to 3,000 feet in length. At the end of each block is a wireless wave generator and a tran-former, which raises the voltage from 110 to 22,000. They are controlled by alternating currents and relays. The current is carried along the tracks in a wooden trucking, laid midway between the tracks. When a train enters a block it stops the wave in the block to the rear, giving the danger condition to a train entering that block. The receiving device is placed on the foot-board of the locomotive. When the line is clear there is a constant current from the line between the rails to this receiver. When the line is blocked this continuity is broken, giving immediate notice to the engineer that there is danger. In connection with the receiver is an automatic device which turns on the brake, stopping the train without any assistance from the locomotive driver.

Mr. Prentice first became interested in the wireless when he was employed as a despatcher by the C. P. R. Later, he moved to Pittsburg, where he was in the despatcher's office of the Baltimore and Ohio Railway. A collision in which a friend was involved caused him much anxiety and that night he dreamed of a train control system on the wireless principle. He went right to work, the B and O. assisting his experiments, but unsuccessfully. Later on he was more successful and perfected his apparatus. He interested Mr. J. L. Leonard, general manager of the eastern lines of the Canadian Pacific, who undertook to instal the system on a small piece of line for experimental purposes. Successful experiments have been going on for six weeks.

It is expected that the Interstate Commerce Commission of the United States will test the system some time in the spring.

FOR A LONG LIFE

Fresh air and exercise, with proper food and a sufficient amount of sleep are the essentials.

Under such a regime of living, germs cannot develop and many diseases are prevented.

Should the system require a tonic, take only such as you know their ingredients—such is Vinol, which is a delicious combination of the health-giving properties of the cods' livers, with all the useless grease eliminated and tonic iron added, happily blended in a mild, fedicinal wine.

For this reason Vinol is regarded as one of the greatest body builders and invigorators for aged people. It invigorates and builds them up and keeps them up.

We sell Vinol with the understanding that if it does not give satisfaction the price will be returned.

McDermid and Jury, corner George and Charlotte street; also Payne's drug store, corner George and Simcoe streets.

"CHRIST'S VIEW OF TAXATION AND EXEMPTION"

The Pastor of Murray Street Baptist Church will preach Sunday evening on the subject, Christ's View of Taxation and Exemption."

PRODUCTION OF EGGS

From Farm and Dairy

G. Gordon Moe, Huntingdon Co., Que.

We have had our best results in producing eggs by keeping Rhode Island Reds and White Wyandottes, about half and half of each. The R. I. Reds come to maturity earlier and lay better in November and December, also through the winter months, than the Wyandottes. The latter surpass the Reds as summer layers, and lay well in the winter as well. I do not consider the matter of breed of much importance, however.

We prefer to have the eggs hatch the last of March or April, as in this way we secure early fall layers. We house them the latter part of October in continuous houses, in pens 10 by 16 feet, with 30 hens in a pen. This allows about five feet of floor space each.

MUSLIN CURTAIN VENTILATION

These houses are double boarded inside and out with a window four by two and a half feet in each pen. The windows have only half a sash, the lower part being wire screening, over which we place a muslin curtain at night. This is our only means of ventilating. It works well except in stormy weather. Then we have to keep the curtains closed and the houses are damp in consequence. Our houses are built warm, water very seldom freezing. We do not think this any advantage, however. We have seen poultrymen have splendid success with colder houses. We intend to erect cold houses when we increase our stock. Abundance of litter is kept in the house to provide exercise.

We practise the dry feeding system altogether, having found it to be less work than feeding wet mash, and just as profitable. We follow no system of balanced rations, just placing bran, meat meal, oyster shell, and crystal grit before the fowls, and allowing them to choose their own food.

GRAIN FEEDS

Grain is fed twice a day, preferably buckwheat or wheat. In the morning about a quart of grain is fed, to every 25 hens, it being buried in the litter. This stimulates the fowls to activity. At night a quart of grain is fed to every 15 hens. This amount we vary according to the condition of the fowls. It is, however, a safe rule to follow. We feed hens all the green feed that they wish, either turnips or mangels, and keep plenty of water before them. This system of feeding gives us better results than other systems. The hen is at no time stimulated to over-work, and in this way she is not impaired for breeding purposes.

WHAT WILL GOVERNMENT DO?

From Farm and Dairy.

The residents of Northumberland and Durham counties are waiting patiently to find what the Ontario Government purposes to do in regard to reforesting the 8,000 acres of waste land in the united counties. Last spring, a deputation from these counties waited on the government and requested the government to reforest this area. The county council agreed to give the government satisfactory security for any money it expended and ultimately to repay the government for such expenditures. The government seemed interested in the proposal, but took no action at the last session of the Legislature and has not notified the county council in any way as to what it proposes doing.

An editor of Farm and Dairy recently called at the farm of Ex-warden A. A. Powers, a leader in this movement. "We are anxious to hear," said Mr. Powers, "what the government proposes to do. The waste land is a breeding ground for Bladder Campion and other weeds, which are yearly getting worse. Other areas of our farming land are being seeded by these waste areas. One of the strongest financial concerns in the United States has been making inquiries to find if this land can be purchased with the object, we understand, of undertaking this reforestration as a business proposition. A large German concern has written to Dr. Fernow, of Toronto University on the same subject.

"We feel, however, that this is a question that should be handled by the government as we would not like to see private concerns get control of such large areas of land in our united counties. We intend to stay with this question until we get it satisfactorily settled.

"Hon. Mr. Duff claims to have been the first to draw the attention of the late Hon. John Dryden to the necessity for reforesting the waste land of this nature in the province. We, therefore, hope that he will see that this matter is brought to a successful conclusion. I am satisfied that our farmers will be willing to meet the provincial government half way on any fair proposition they may make to us in connection with the reforestration of this land. We have held open meetings throughout the united counties at which strong resolutions have been passed by the ratepayers, showing that they feel that the time has come when action should be taken."

DRAWBACKS OF SUCCESSFUL OPERATION OF CREAMERIES

From Farm and Dairy.

Jas. Stonehouse, Ontario Co., Ont.

One of the most serious drawbacks to the successful operation of a creamery in many parts of Ontario is the long hauls and the large amount of territory necessary to cover in order to get a paying load of cream. The price which patrons have to pay for collecting and making a pound of butter depends largely upon the amount of cream produced in a given territory.

One and a half cents a pound of fat is usually considered sufficient to pay for collecting the cream. Two and a half cents is supposed to cover all other expenses and give the proprietor his profit. For about three months—June, July, and August—one and a half cents is sufficient, and in some localities is more than sufficient to pay for collecting the cream. The cost begins to go up after August, however, and for about six months in the year the cost is near two and a half cents. If sufficient cream could be produced in a radius of say six to eight miles from the creamery to keep two to three hands steadily employed in manufacturing the butter the cost of producing a pound of butter could and would be reduced 50 per cent.

IOWA INVESTIGATIONS

The Iowa State Dairy Commissioner has investigated this question of the cost of producing a pound of butter in different localities and he finds that the cost of production varies in his state from 1.2 cents to six cents a lb., the latter coming from a creamery that made less than 30,000 lbs. a year, while the lowest cost of production was submitted by a creamery making about 500,000 pounds a year. The following list shows the comparative cost of production according to the volume of the output:

44 creameries making not more than 5,000 lbs.	3.17c.
98 creameries making between 50,000 and 100,000 lbs.	2.36c
56 creameries making between 100,000 and 150,000 lbs.	1.99c.
28 creameries making between 150,000 and 200,000 lbs.	1.78c.
27 creameries making between 200,000 and 300,000 lbs.	1.71c.

In the large creamery who gets the benefit of this reduced cost of production? The patron, of course. And this is not all. A creamery that can collect its cream in a few hours from any given point will invariably have a better quality of butter than can be made from cream that has been all of one day, and in some cases two days, on the road. This improved quality of butter creates its own demand at an enhanced price over that made from an inferior grade of cream. There is, therefore, every inducement for creamery patrons to increase the quantity of cream and thus lessen the cost of both hauling and manufacturing.

IV.—Nursing In the Home

By EUGENE L. FISK, M. D.

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

IT is a far cry from the old type of nurse immortalized by Dickens in the character of Sairey Gamp to the modern formidable product in neat uniform, surrounded by an atmosphere of portentous dignity and authority.

Trained nurses have their faults, just as physicians and clergymen have their weaknesses, but there is no denying that the intelligent trained nurse has largely contributed to the triumph of modern surgery and medicine. Medical and surgical practice would be one sided and incomplete if the methods of treatment, however scientific, were left to careless or ignorant hands for administration.

How often we have occasion to note the rapid change for the better that takes place when a patient is removed to a sanitarium or a trained nurse takes charge, even though no item of the drug treatment or diet is changed. Regularity and system are largely responsible for this result, but undoubtedly there is a certain value in the mental suggestion that accompanies the assurance of trained care and supervision, just as the daily visit of the physician fortifies and cheers, even though he gives no medicine.

Nursing in Acute Disease.

Aside from surgical practice, the trained nurse is of greatest service in severe acute diseases, such as pneumonia, typhoid fever, etc., when constant watchfulness is required and prompt administration of remedies ordered by the physician in certain emergencies.

Some people are born nurses, which means that they have clear heads, good nerve control, presence of mind and good temper, patience and sympathy. If a trained nurse is not obtainable and some member of the family can rise to these requirements good results will follow if the physician's instructions are carefully written, clear and accurately followed. Printed blanks can usually be obtained of druggists on which to keep a record of the temperature, pulse, nourishment given, etc., or a blank may be constructed for this purpose. The haphazard administration of nourishment and medicine should be avoided.

THE TRAINED NURSE HAS LARGELY CONTRIBUTED TO THE TRIUMPH OF MODERN SURGERY AND MEDICINE.

Nursing in Chronic Illness.

In chronic diseases it usually falls to the lot of some member of the family to do the nursing. Here is where the physician should keep a watchful eye open and see that the fearful tyranny of chronic invalidism does not exact an unnecessary sacrifice. The chronic invalid becomes self centered, lives in a world apart, where the bodily processes or infirmities fill nearly the whole field of consciousness. This self absorption and introspection are often unduly fostered and encouraged through tender hearted sympathy on the part of family and friends.

There are few diseases that justify the slavery that is so often imposed by the chronic invalid. It is the physician's duty to bring about a more normal relationship and lift his patient out of the rut of weak self pity and selfish tyranny over others.

Chronic disease is indeed a pitiable condition, and the physician should be the last to withhold sympathy or comfort, but his influence should be exerted to develop courage, patience and self denial on the part of the sufferer, to the end that other lives may not be needlessly sacrificed.

Persons who are called upon to care for invalids should be compelled to take proper exercise and rest. Many a nervous, ruined life can be traced to the exacting demands of some chronic sufferer. But the blame rests at so much upon the partly responsible invalid as upon those who permit such exactions.

General Measures in Sickroom.

The sickroom should, of course, be of sunny exposure and well ventilated. It should be bright and cheerful, but not incumbered by carpets, upholstered furniture or curtains. In the grave crises of disease the slightest confusion may turn the tide against the patient.

As a rule, the bed should not be placed against a wall, but in the center of the room, so that access to the patient may be had on both sides and a free circulation of air be permitted.

In pneumonia the room should be ventilated freely. The pneumonia patient cannot catch cold. Cold air seems to be a specific for the disease, and it is now the chief reliance in treatment.

In acute bronchitis or laryngitis, however, cold air appears to be irritating, and, while the room should have a constant supply of fresh air, it should be warmed.

Taking the Temperature.

The temperature is best taken in the rectum for accurate results, although a five minute exposure in the armpit or groin will usually give an accurate register unless the surface of the body is affected by an acute chill. If the temperature is taken in the mouth the instrument should be placed deeply under the tongue and the lips tightly closed and kept closed until the thermometer is removed. No matter what style of thermometer is used, it should be left in the mouth three to five minutes. Never take the mouth temperature immediately after administering cold drinks.

Bathing the Invalid.

A great deal of comfort is afforded the invalid by a daily bath where the condition warrants it. When the patient is feeble one part of the body at a time may be quickly and gently bathed. Alcohol and water, equal parts, with gentle massage, is often refreshing and restorative.

The hot pack, cold pack and cold bath for reduction of temperature should be used only under the advice and direction of the physician. In mild fever, however, sponging the body with cold or tepid water or alcohol and water will prove grateful and often reduce fever.

Diet in Fever, Etc.

People are often at a loss what to give a fever patient to eat. In acute fever caused by indigestion or bowel trouble, especially in children, it is better to withhold food until the system has been cleared of poison. Some persons fear starvation if food is not given within twenty-four hours. A little barley water or plain boiled water is better than food, which will only remain undigested and add fuel to the fire. "An empty house is better than a poor tenant."

In protracted fever there is a great waste of tissue, and albuminous food is required to make good this loss. This is supplied by broths, soups, milk and eggs. Carbohydrates (starches, sugars, etc.) are also needed, as they supply energy and lessen the waste of nitrogenous tissues. These may be given in the form of strained rice, strained oatmeal, crushed wheat and barley, partially predigested if necessary.

Beef tea cannot be relied upon for nourishment, but is a good appetizer and of some value as a stimulant.

Useful Invalid Foods.

Albumen Water.—Cut the white of one fresh egg in numerous directions with scissors, shake it up in a bottle with six ounces of pure cold water and a pinch of salt and strain through muslin. Useful for infants with acute gastro-intestinal trouble, when milk must be withdrawn.

Barley Water (Thin).—Add a teaspoonful of barley previously washed in clear cold water to a half pint of boiling water with a pinch of salt. Allow it to simmer by the fire, stirring occasionally for one hour; then strain through muslin.

Imperial Drink.—Pour a pint of boiling water on a heaping teaspoonful of cream of tartar; add a little sugar and lemon peel; strain when cold. This is cooling and lessens the activity of the kidneys.

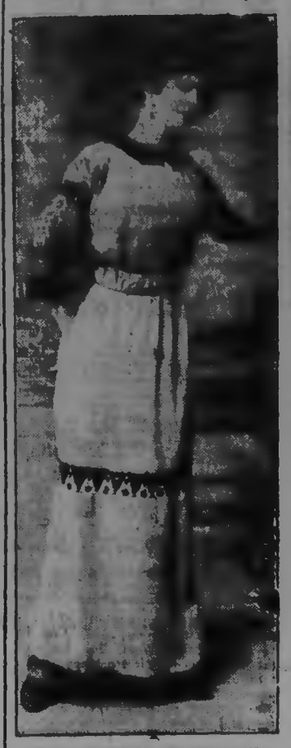
HOW'S THIS FOR STYLE?

Fur Trimmed House Gowns the Very Latest.



OF OLD ROSE SILK AND OTTER FUR.

Fashion says that house gowns this winter are to be fur trimmed. But what will the specialists say to the low cut bodice edged about the throat and finished with a fur Dutch collar. These collars are the height of style, by the way, and are fascinatingly becoming when fastened in front with cute little animal heads.

The gown illustrated has such a neck finish of otter fur, which pelt also makes the band at the bottom of the skirt and edges the sleeves. The design of the gown is very simple, a peasant bodice joined to the skirt with a shirred girdle. But the sleeve and skirt trimmings give color and distinction to this model, which stamp it Rue de la Paix. These trimmings are of the new Turkish embroidery picked out with bits of mirror and colored glass used in combination with colored silk. The gown is a Paul Poiret model, a Parisian dressmaker who delights in touches of brilliant color on his creations.

Queen's Curious Perquisite.

King George has the right by statute to the head of every whale caught on the coasts of the kingdom. The tail of the whale is Queen Mary's perquisite, the object of this curious division being that her majesty shall always be well supplied with whalebone, although, singularly enough, the whalebone is the king's half.

Dainty Nightdresses.

Here are three examples of dainty nightdresses. The first will probably be found the easiest to make. The bodice part is entirely formed of embroidery by the yard. The edges of the two pieces of embroidery are joined up the back and part of the way up the front, the sleeves put in and the whole joined to the skirt by a broad band of beading through which a soft wide ribbon is run.

The second example is much plainer in appearance and is made with lace motifs buttonholed to the material and the muslin cut from under them. The neck, sleeves and waist are finished off with beading and ribbon.

In the third illustration there is a good deal more embroidery in eyelet hole design. The flower sprays are, too, formed of eyelet holes, the stems and leaves being in stem stitch, and a band of dainty work divides the yoke of embroidery from the skirt of the gown. The neck and sleeves are edged with buttonholed scallops through which ribbon is run.

Milady's Mirror

If you would keep your looks beyond their natural limit practice self control. Nothing so quickly wrinkles the nerves, hence the looks, as letting oneself go.

It may be easier to fly into a rage at trivialities, to pucker the face with worry or to shake with fear, but the woman with regard for keeping young learns to quell these emotions in the interest of nervous force.

Have you ever stopped to consider what unchecked anger takes out of you? Leaving consideration for your victim or a regard for conventions out of the question, "getting mad" weakens one physically and mentally, and nerves suffer.

Have you never said "I feel as weak as a rag" after indulging in a temper? The next time you make that remark put the blame in the right place. Learn that rage is weakening and aging and you will have taken a long step toward self control.

Cowardice as an emotion is debasing to the soul. It is also wrinkling to the flesh and destructive of nervous force. The woman who lives in a tremor of fear, getting into an equal panic whether she sees a mouse or a murderer, who lies awake half the night listening for possible marauders, who gets pleasure in nothing through her inseparate fear of horse, motor, canoe or yacht, is the woman who will soon look her years—and more.

If nervous peace is to be yours keep a grip on your emotions. Love not nor hate not, fret not nor fear not, envy not nor rage not—to excess. Better a colorless character than a wornout body—if the choice must be made. The mistake lies in thinking emotions controlled are emotions lacking. One makes for strength so surely as the other is a sign of weakness.

A White Throat.

At this season the girl who has gone collarless the summer through is beginning to be anxious about the state of her throat. The day of drastic treatment is at hand if her neck is to look well in winter. The skin is browned from exposure to the sun.

To whiten it rub it each night with lemon, letting it stay on all night. If there are rough places in the skin it can be gone over with a fine pumice stone dipped in lemon juice.

In the morning rinse off with warm water in which a little almond meal has been dissolved. This whitens and smooths the skin.

A more decided bleach is made from eight ounces of alcohol, four ounces of rosewater and a teaspoonful of tincture of benzoin. Saturate a thin piece of linen in the liquid and pin around the throat and let it stay on for an hour. Then massage with a good cucumber cream.

Take It For What It's Worth.

Pork is not commonly reported to be a hygienic food, and assuredly it has no aesthetic associations. It is therefore somewhat surprising to hear a diet of pork recommended to the beauty seeker. Such is the latest dictum, however, and in proof of its wisdom we are asked to note the clear, velvety skins of the country girls with whom pork is a staple article of diet. Pork is supposed to produce this velvety effect by supplying oily matter to the skin. It acts as a sort of natural cosmetic and is much less expensive than the creams city women employ to counteract the harshness and dryness of their complexions. In the absence of pork bacon is recommended.

The Curse of Red Hair.

Even Titian did not succeed in removing the curse from red hair, for it is variously accused of causing anything from temper to freckles. And now comes an English scientist who is trying to blame it for shortness of stature. By a system of statistics all his own he has figured that among boys and girls at the age of fourteen the shortest invariably have red hair. Among girls those with black and blond hair take first place in height, and among boys the light browns are easy winners. The figures look conclusive, but those who do not like them may reflect with Mark Twain that all statistics are watched stock.

Use a Medicine Ball.

A medicine ball is a good possession for any one shut up in an office all day. A few minutes spent in throwing it will send the blood coursing through the veins. Fencing and bowling are both admirable sports for those who need exercise, and every office worker should seek out some opportunity of practicing them. And in any case she ought to do all the outdoor walking she can get into the day without overwearying herself.

To Restore Fair Hair.

When fair hair begins to lose luster it is a good plan to apply olive oil liberally, comb the hair thoroughly and then to expose it for some hours to the direct rays of a warm sun. The exposure may be repeated on the following day, and on the third day the hair may be washed if deemed necessary with warm soap lather and be rinsed.

English Sensations.

For a long time in English society white hair has been fashionable, the country belle considering it quite the thing to have white resources when in full dress.

For the Children

How to Photograph the Frisky Squirrel.

The photographer in search of a comparatively rare and fascinating subject would be well advised to combine his or her hobby with that of the naturalist and, in addition to securing permanent records, will derive much pleasure from spending a few hours or even a day with that semi-wild, attractive little animal, the gray squirrel.

Some precautions are necessary until you have gained the confidence of these shy and reserved pets, as on account of their somewhat diminutive size they should be photographed at not less a distance than four to six feet. The camera should be used as near the ground as conveniently possible, and the writer has found a kneeling position the most generally desirable.

It will be found that the camera is viewed with a certain amount of distrust, especially when advancing to the subject, and whenever possible the subject should be induced to approach the camera. Avoid all semblance of hurry or sudden movements, as the squirrel once frightened means an opportunity lost instead of gained. Do not be in too great a hurry to employ the camera, and the time spent in making observations will enable the photographer to decide what positions to take and what to avoid wasting his plates on.

"Comic Concert" Game.

Every one in the company chooses an imaginary musical instrument. One may be a violin, another a piano, a harp, and so on. The leader of the band also chooses one, say the flute. He begins to play this imaginary instrument, running his fingers up and down it and tooting away in representation of the real instrument. As soon as he begins the other players must follow suit. The piano player begins to strum an imaginary piano, the violin player to wield his bow, and so on. Not only must the players imitate the actions, but also the sounds which proceed from the various instruments.

During the concert the leader will suddenly cease playing his flute and commence playing the violin, when the violin player must take up the leader's discarded flute playing. Presently the leader will change again. Any player who fails to take up the leader's instrument must take the leader's place and likewise pay a forfeit.

Fairies in Kaffir Land.

There are fairies of all kinds in Kaffir Land—so at least you would be told by the merry little children whose dark skins gleam like satin as they romp and play in the sun. When the long happy day is over and dusk comes on they gather around the open fire in a wide circle, and some old woman of the tribe stands up and tells them weird stories of elves and goblins, of grim inimita, or ogres, who do most dreadful things to boys and girls who come under their spells. Fortunately, however, there is always some good genius at hand in the shape of a "rabbit prince" or a "fairy bird" to come to the rescue, and monster serpents have a most encouraging way of turning into noble kings with gorgeous palaces.

The Goat Itched.

In October last a Swiss boy had a number of goats on the side of a mountain to pasture. One of the animals felt an itching and walked up to a large stone to have a good rub. As he rubbed away the rock was dislodged and started down hill. It took others with it, and soon an avalanche was started that swept a path down the mountain and carried away a church and a summer hotel. No lives were lost, but the damage was about $16,000.

The Swallow.

Swallows have great powers of flight, now soaring to great height, now skimming the surface of the ground and of the water and wheeling with great rapidity. They prey on insects which they catch in the air.

Uninvited Guests.

I wrote the invitation, and I pinned it to the tree.
It said, "Dear Mrs. Robin, bring your family to tea."
Then I made the table ready in the orchard's pleasant shade,
The cloth a pleplant leaf, the cups of acorn shells were made.
Some cookies and some breadcrumbs, and the party was complete.
How happy would the robins be, with such good things to eat!
So then behind the largest tree I hid as best I could
And watched to see my company come bobbing through the wood.
When there, all in a moment, down swooped upon the ground
A host of greedy sparrows and took everything they found.
As off I drove these sparrows, all dressed up in their best,
I saw the robins coming, each in his neatest vest.
I almost cried I was so vexed to invite those birdels to stop
And have some other people come and eat the party up.

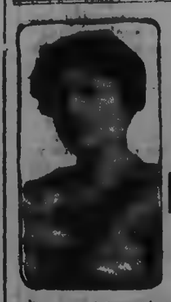
Points for Mothers



The use of "soothing syrups" is much more general than is supposed. Ignorant mothers are the worst offenders, especially those who must go out to work and who resort to these deadening drugs to quiet the children during their long absences. While it is pitiful enough to hear the wails of a neglected child, it is even more pitiful to see the stupefied child sleeping off a drug debauch provided by its own mother.

The children of the rich often suffer through the practices of their nurses, who wish to secure exemption from their care and so put them into an unnatural sleep. Once found out, instant discharge should follow without a recommendation.

No offense can be more contemptible in the eyes of the law or of society than making drug inebriates of little children. It is simply a process of slow poisoning, which at the same time establishes a habit, affects the mentality and injures the baby. A child brought up on "soothing syrups" is dull and lethargic. Many a mother who complains her child doesn't "get on" in school is herself responsible in that she fed him on these compounds to keep him quiet while she worked, a dear bought freedom. Under the food and drug act the United States courts are making it evident that a label accurately stating the contents of a "medicine" does not imply liberty to advertise it as not injurious and recommend it as remedy for ills it cannot cure. A man recently was fined $100 for selling a "toothing sirup" containing morphine and chloroform, though the label indicated these drugs and the amount. Dr. Wiley declared the stuff mislabeled because the label declared no bad effects would follow its use and that it was "a sure remedy for all ailments incident to babies from one day old to two or three years." The federal court sustained the chemist, and the proprietor will have to take his "sure cure" off the market or continue to pay fines.

It will not hurt the baby half as much to cry as it will to dose it with "soothing sirups." Crying is lung exercise. Opium is deadening and deadly.

Mother's Value.

This happened years ago, but it is worth repeating. In a certain home was the overindulgent mother of three daughters. You can just imagine what the week's washing was with dresses for all of those girls, each with three or four petticoats, besides many other articles. This mother did the washing, ironing, cooking, baking and about everything imaginable, and the daughters—well, they were "cultured" and did not do very much of anything except eat the good meals and wear the clean clothes. One day the father called the mother aside. The two had a long talk, and he admitted he was not able to hire a domestic. The next day the usual complaint was made by the girls about the poor dinner, and the mother quietly got up, went to her room, dressed and came downstairs. She carried a heavy suit case and stopped long enough to tell the children that she hoped they would have a better meal the next day. Their father took her to the station, and she was away from home one month. Every one of those girls learned to cook, bake, scrub and look after the house, although they admitted that for a week they lived on baker's bread, lemonade, quince preserves and either salmon or sardines. It was a hard lesson for them to learn, but they knew the value of their mother.

Postures of Children.

In a recent lecture to mothers and teachers on incorrect postures of children the speaker spoke of inturning feet and the means of correcting them. But turned toes and feet, she said, are the result of training, and if the mother finds a tendency on the part of her child to turn the toes in she must resort to training to remedy it. This consists in developing the outer muscles by proper exercise.

Of the physical training of the child from birth the lecturer said that, excessive crying being accepted as harmful, the average mother therefore assumes that all crying is harmful and should be suppressed. This is faulty reasoning. The natural crying of a baby is really a means of development, as by crying the lungs are expanded and the relations between circulation and respiration are thus established and strengthened.

For Baby's Comfort.

The baby's basket and the bassinet are things a young mother loves to have of the daintiest. The new basket, with movable parts on the order of drawers, is one of the most convenient styles. A plate warmer with metal bottom and porcelain top is useful for keeping the baby's dinner hot.

Other convenient accessories of a baby's outfit are tiny clothes racks and trees, ribbon covered coat hangers, miniature washstand sets and swinging hammocks for outdoor naps.

Electric Shocks.

Volt for volt the direct or straight current is more deadly than the alternating. There is always tiny bleeding in the brain in bad electric shock, so it is a mistake to lay the shocked ones with the head low, for this increases the many little deadly bleedings in the brain.

Rice and Salt.

To prevent salt in salt bottles from becoming damp and lumpy when filling them put in ten or twelve pieces of rice. This will not come through the holes in the cover of the saltcellars, but will break the lumps and gather the moisture. Thus the salt is always dry and fine.

BUSTER BROWN'S WHEEL OF WOE.

RESOLVED

THAT EACH ONE OF US IS RIDING AND GUIDING HIS OWN WHEEL OF FORTUNE. THE FIRST PRINCIPLE OF THE SPORT IS THAT EVERYTHING WILL GO RIGHT SO LONG AS ONE KEEPS ON THE LEVEL. THE WAY DOWN HILL IS SWIFT AND EASY, BUT IT'S MOSTLY THERE THAT THE TROUBLES OCCUR. IF ONE BREAKS DOWN ON THE LEVEL THERE'S A CHANCE FOR GETTING OFF SAFELY. BUT WOE BETIDE HIM WHO FALLS WHEN HE'S DOING FAST WORK ON A STEEP GRADE. MORAL — STAY ON THE LEVEL, IT'S THE BEST POLICY. Buster Brown.

JACK and JILL in FAIRYLAND

1—When one little pig went to market (with his mother, of course) and another little pig stayed at home, with the third little pig (which had some bread and butter)—

Said Jack to Jill, "Why not Take one little piggie straight off to the pot?"
"And the other one's breakfast?" said Jill, "Why not?"

2—So in spite of all the "wee-wees" and the wriggles and the squeals,
First they took what they were after, then they both took to their heels—

3.—But, unfortunately for them, the old mother pig had forgotten something. She came back and—

Expressed a matron pig's surprise,
Her temper was quite hot.
"If I should catch you both," said she,
"I'd dress you down quite merrily,
And put you in the pot!"

4—Well, Jack and Jill had a terrible time. Instead of being the Diners, they expected to be the Dish. To make matters worse, the old mother pig was gaining on them, just grinning—

"What's this," said Jill, "in the distance there?
The Beanstalk Jack planted, I do declare!—

The big fat pig jumped too [illegible] just in time!

5—"Oh," said Jill, with a cunning little smile,
"Aren't we lucky once in a while?"

Then they looked down, and the old mother pig was laughing at them. "I can wait," said she; "but remember, when you come down you're going to be made pies of!" So Jack and Jill had to stay up that beanstalk for three weeks, eating nothing but beans!

6—Then the old pig laughed and she told them to come down.
"Now, go home, Jack and Jill," said she.
And both stared at her with wonder-stricken eyes.
(They were very, very thankful that they were not pies!)
But nice, big frights for greedy little mites
Are better by far—you [illegible]

Some Seasonable, Suitable, Sensible Christmas Gifts At H. LeBrun & Co's

Young man, have you purchased your Christmas gift to your father, your brother, or any of your friends, yet? If not, have a look at LeBrun's Christmas presents, and you will doubtlessly see just what you want. You have a variety of articles to choose from at prices to suit you. Mr. Le Brun has been in business for over 37 years in this city, and since the beginning, his business has been steadily increasing, simply because he did business 'on the straight.' He has now three stores in one. He always enjoyed a big trade with both the city and country people, and a man who can suit both has earned credit.

This well-known store faces two streets, both George and Hunter street. The Hunter street branch is devoted almost exclusively to ready-to-wear clothing, both for men and boys. One of the strongest features in this line is the Presto Convertable Collar Overcoat. LeBrun's is the only firm in the city that handles this line, and it is becoming a favourite. It is specialized in made-to-order clothes. After two years' experience in made-to-order suits and overcoats, it is found that the better results have been realized from the utility overcoat manufactured by the House of Hobberlin, L'td., tailors to the Canadian Gentlemen, Toronto. LeBrun's make this a special because it is a leader and always gives thorough satisfaction. Made-to-order clothes are clothes of character. Clothes that any man, no matter what is his position in life, can be proud to wear. Clothes that will lift a man up and away from the ordinary by giving him an appearance and bearing of taste, dignity and good judgment. In a word they offer you the finest tailored clothes in the world. Garments that not only look well when you buy them, but as long as you wear them, because everything in the making is looked after with the greatest care that not a solitary thing be left undone that is vitally important in making them the clothes that satisfy. They are made by the House of Hobberlin Co., Toronto, and you can buy them at LeBrun's at right prices. Some men do not buy them because they are expensive, but as a matter of fact they are the cheapest clothes in the world, if you consider all that you get for the money. Any man who wears them will tell you so. Always ask for the five-in-one coat. LeBrun's can furnish you with this coat and give you one that will fit.

Ladies, how about that Christmas present you are going to give your gentleman friend? Have you decided what it shall be? Here is a suggestion—a pair of gloves, an umbrella, a crochet silk tie, silk scarf or cravat, a fancy vest and a hundred more such articles. Any of the above are presents a gentleman would appreciate. Now, you should always purchase the right thing in the right place, and in the present instance a walk through Le Brun's Men's Furnishing Store will convince you that you have happened on the right place. All the above mentioned Christmas gifts are prepared in neat boxes, especially for the purpose emphasized here. And all the articles are at moderate prices.

All kinds of hosiery and underwear are for sale—a splendid variety to choose from. In the Glove line, LeBrun's carry an extensive line. The following are some of the prominent makes: The tan and grey, lined and unlined, Suede, and the chamois, tan, cape, wool-lined, silk-lined, and fur-lined. Mitts—mocha, cape and fur-lined. Handkerchiefs, as souvenirs. Some splendid lines are shown. Go and have a look at LeBrun's line of goods and you will make a purchase there.

"ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL"

"Isn't your decision to leave tomorrow rather sudden? I thought you were to remain another week at least," and the speaker looked questioningly at hr companion. There was silence in the canoe for a moment and Robert Winton's voice was not quite steady as he replied, "I did intend remaining longer, but unforeseen business matters have arisen which necessitates my immediate departure."

It was one of those summer evenings when the beauty and grandeur of night is undeniable. The sky was resplendent twith myriads of stars, twinkling in their mystic radiance, while the moon, casting its soft light over all the earth, was brightly reflected on the water. The couple in the canoe, however, seemed to have no eyes for all this scene tonight. Agnes French noted the tense look and troubled expression on her companion's face, accompanied by a manner strangely quiet and morose.

Suddenly he dropped the paddles, looked intently at the girl, then spoke sin low earnest tones, "This has been a happy month for me, and, yet, the beginning of unhappiness. I, have always been more or less of a recluse; aside from my business I have been content with my books and dogs. Girls have never formed a part of my life. Since meeting you, some magnetic force, as it were, seems to have been at work drawing me towards you, until I have come to the realization that I love you. Your conversations, your manner, your every action shows the true soul beneath and you have appealed to me as nobody else has or ever will. You will always be the one love of my life, and it is for that reason I am leaving to-morrow. I could not any did control my feelings, yet I must not forget my duty. O, Agnes, dear—"

"But, why must you go away?" The girl's voice quivered painfully. Up to this juncture she had sat motionless, with face averted. Now, as she turned and asked the question, the man looked at her and read the truth in her eyes.

"Let me finish my story," he said. "I am not free—I am engaged to be married; she is practically alone in the world, living with a distant cousin of her mother. In sympathy for the forlorn little creature I asked her to marry me, and, although I did not love her, I found her congenial and vowed to do what I could to make her happy. I felt no regret until I met you; now, hard as it may seem, I must keep my promise." He ceased speaking, grasped both her hands and scanned the flushed face before him.

In tones shaking with emotion and pent-up feelings, the girl replied, "We must both be brave about this, and it is better that we see each other no more. Be loyal to that lonely little girl, as I know you will. The fact that I love you must not be considered; my love for you is such that I would not ask you to break your word or neglect your duty." Then, with a brave little smile, she added, "Le tns paddle back to the shore now, as it is getting late."

As they drifted back no words were spoken; each was busy with thoughts—now and then a half smothered sigh burst from the man and the girl forced back the tears which welled up in her eyes. They left the canoe and walked slowly homeward. Each waited for the other to speak and finally, with an effort, the girl said, "You must go now; again I say we must both be brave and God will bless you for your devotion to duty." Robert Winton drew the sobbing girl into his arms, murmured some incoherent words in her ear, then vanished into the darkness.

* * * * *

He arose in the morning after a sleepless night and made all preparations to leave on the noon train. Carelessly he glanced through his mail and found a letter from his fiancee. Indifferently he opened it, and found the following:

"Dear Old Bob.—Now, don't be cross and don't feel badly, but it is just this way: I cannot marry you because I am in love with Betty Moore's cousin Dick, and he wants me to marry him. Will you please release me, Bob?

"Wire your answer, as Dick and I are anxiously awaiting same. Sincerely your friend, NAN."

A look of unspeakable joy passed over Robert Winton's face as he read it. With hurried steps he made his way to Agnes and placed the letter in her hands, noting with joy the happy light that dawned in her eyes. With a contented little sigh she went into the arms waiting to receive her, and a few minutes later the following message went speeding over the wire:

"Congratulations to you and Dick; don't consider me."—Boston Post.

FACES NO LESS THAN 50 CHARGES

TORONTO, DEC. 9.—"The public like to be done, and woul dbe disappointed if they were not done."

"I like to do them, and would be disappointed if I did not do them."

This was the unique way in which Joseph Aiken Mears admitted his guilt of defrauding people in the city out of various amounts of money. Mears is also a unique crook. He has the mistaken idea that the world owes him a living, but if the world puts him away he does not consider he is abdl yused. When he is caught the joke is on him, and if he is not caught the joke is on the people. Either way he smiles.

He came to Toronto a month ago and started to clean up. He posed as a book agent, and collected about two hundred dollars, claiming at different times he represented Colliers', the Lady's Home Journal, and other publications. He also tried his hand as a cheque artist, and so successful was he that the police have now in their possession a stack of about 200 bogus cheques, of which many are alleged to be forgeries.

Mears was arrested by Detective Murray, and appeared in the police court this morning, with fifty charges of false pretences against him. He was remanded for a week for further investigation.

When asked how much money he obtains dby these methods he said that he had no idea, but it must have been hundreds. He is only 21 years old, a native of Oldham, England, but has served tim ein Ogdensburg, and Saskatchewan, and was remanded for sentence in Smith's Falls recently for a similar offence.

Police Find Girl Chained To Wall

BOSTON, DEC. 9.—A white girl of 23 years, nearly nude and fastened to a wall with a chain about her neck, her hands tied behind her back and her face and body a mass of raw bruises, was found in a room at 58 Middlesex Street, late last night, by the police, when they forced their way into the house of J. H. Taylor, a negro, against whom they had a warrant in connection with the sale of cocaine.

Taylor is said to have threatened the police with a revolver when the door was opened, but he was overpowered quickly. Entering the room, the police found the young white woman lying on a couch with a chain about her neck, fastened to the wall. When asked why she was so confined, Taylor, according to the police, declared it was because she would run awa yif he did not chain her. He was ordered to release her, and when he did so, she rushed to an ice chest and ravenously devoured a loaf of bread.

According to the police, the girl said she was married to Taylor last September. She declared she had been chained down for eight days, and in that time had eaten but once. That was three days ago, when she was given some bread and tea.

TELLS THE PUBLIC THE REASON WHY

Quebec Man Cured by Dodd's Kidney Pills

Of Rheumatism, Gravel and Diabetes says he wants other sufferers to have the benefit of his experience.

Rousseau Mills, Portneuf Co., Que., Dec. 9.—(Special.)— "Tell the public Dodd's Kidney Pills cured me of Gravel, Rheumatism and Diabetes." These are the words of Seraphin Carpentier, of this place.

"For ten years I suffered," Mr. Carpentier continues. "Then I heard of Dodd's Kidney Pills and decided to try them. Almost from the first they relieved me and now all my Gravel Diabetes and Rheumatism have entirely left me.

"I want others to know what cured me, because I do not want them to suffer as I have suffered."

There are thousands of just such living proofs in Canada that Dodd's Kidney Pills always cure Kidney Disease. If you take the disease early they will cure it easily and quickly and you will be saved much suffering. If you have neglected it and let it reach its more dangerous stages, such as Gravel, Diabetes or Bright's Disease, Dodd's Kidney Pills will cure it. They never fail.

Man Confesses To Having Been Witness Of Murder

NEW YORK, DEC. 9.—The mysterious murder of John C. Warner, a young civil engineer of Highwood, Conn., who was stabbed to death at Eleventh Avenue and Thirty-sixth Street on the evening of October 31, was solved to-day when four witnesses confessed that they had seen Warner killed. They gave the police the name o fa fifth man as the murderer, and claimed that the killing was a result of the express strike.

The murderer killed the young New Englander in a fight, thinking him a strike-breaker. The four men and the alleged murderer were doin gpicket duty at the time of the strike. Deputy Police Commissioner Flynn declared immediately after the confession that the man charged with the murder by his companions would be placed under arrest immediately. The police refuse to divulge the names of the men who confessed.

THE NATIVITY.

Mary brought forth her first-born Son and wrapped Him in swaddling Clothes and laid Him in a manger; because there was no room for Him in the inn

And there were in the same country shepherds abiding in the field, keeping watch over their flock by night.

And lo! the angel of the Lord came upon them and the glory of the Lord shone round about them; and they were sore afraid.

And the angel said unto them: Fear not: for behold I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people.

For unto you is born this day, in the City of David, a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord.

And this shall be a sign unto you; ye shall find the Babe wrapped in swaddling clothes, lying in a manger.

And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host, praising God and saying:

Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men.

And they came with haste, and found Mary, and Joseph, and the Babe lying in the manger.

Some Appropriate Xmas Gifts For Holiday Shoppers At Stenson's

Very often in one's choice of Christmas presents, there is a tendency to choose articles that are of little use or service to the recipient. It is therefore, essential in the choice of Christmas gifts to combine attractiveness with usefulness, and in this regard what would be more appropriate or more sensible than a fine pair of shoes, of the style and workmanship, such as is sold at the up-to-date store of J. T. Stenson's. The shoes sold here are in every sense of the word, high-class, and never fail to give satisfaction. Here can be found presents for the men, ladies, boys and girls. Everyone can be pleased at this store and no gift will be more appreciated, no matter who it is, than attractive footwear.

For the ladies there are numerous things at Stenson's that they would be delighted ot receive, for there is nothing a lady likes to have more than neat, attractive footwear. Stensons have a splendid stock of women's shoes in Bluchers, Balmorals, Pumps, Oxfords and Slippers; also all styles of Felt House Shoes. Suede shoes are much admired by the fair sex, and would make a suitable gift at this season of gift-giving. There is also at this store a magnificent display of ladies' handsatchels, in all the latest and most up-to-date makes. They have them in various shapes, some small and some large; also music cases in the finest leathers.

A pair of nice shoes for the young man or old man would no doubt be gratefully acknowledged, and for style and quality the place to choose them is at the J. T. Stenson store. For the boy and girl there are also gifts that would be serviceable. This store has a splendid stock of gaiters, and for the youths of the city these would make a most desirable and suitable reminder of Christmas. The best lines only are handled by this firm and it would be well to pay them a visit before choosing.

DECEMBER SITTINGS OF THE COUNTY COURT WHICH OPEN ON TUESDAY WILL HAVE ONLY A SMALL DOCKET

One Criminal Case and One Non-jury Action---Resident of Apsley is Charged With Burning Down His Neighbour's Barns in June Last.

The December Sittings of the County Court of Peterborough will open before His Honour Judge Hayeke on Tuesday next at one o'clock. There is a comparatively small court this time, there being at present only one criminal case on the docket and one Non-Jury case. The criminal case, which will be tried by a jury is a charge of arson preferred by Edward McFadden of Apsley, against Joseph Wilson of the same township. Wilson is charged with burning down the barns of McFadden, on or about the fourth of June last. Since that time he has been out on bail.

The only non-jury case is that of W. R. Morris versus Frost & Wood Co., Ltd., to receive $179, interests and costs of the action, the claim being money due from and payable by the defendants to the plaintiff for work done and services rendered by the Plaintiff as a chartered accountant in making special investigations, examinations and reports upon matters respecting the business of the defendant at the request of the directors of the company. Bennet and Goodwill for the plaintiff and H. A. Lavell of Smith's Falls for the defendant.

CHRISTMAS TURKEYS ARE SELLING AT TOP NOTCH

To-day's market was rather smaller than usual, but it was well stocked with beef and other meats. The upstairs market was crowded and the demand for fowl, butter and eggs far exceeded the supply. The prices were as follows:

Potatoes—80c. a bag.
Apples—$3.00 per bbl.
Beef—7 1-2c. and 8 1-2c.
Pork—11c. and 12c.
Turkeys—$2.00 to $3.50, according to size.
Tamarack—$5 cord.
Butter—25c. per lb.
Hardwood—$5.50 a cord.
Eggs—35c. per doz.
Geese—$1.25 each.
Chickens—80c. pair.
Loose hay—$10 per ton.
Baled hay—$17 per ton.
Farmer's hides—7c.
Butcher's hides—8c.
Dressed hogs—$8.50.
Live hogs—$6.40.

The supply of live and dressed hogs were heavy. Hay was also in abundance. No change in the price of hay. Dressed hogs are gone up 50c. during the week, and live hogs dropped 10c. The supply of potatoes was small. No ducks were on and eggs were in small quantities. A larger attendance is looked for next Saturday.

LEFT CAR BY THE WRONG DOOR AND ARE ARRESTED

TORONTO, DEC. 9.—That "Leave by the Front Door" notice tacked up on the street cars has got two passengers into difficulty, though they invited it themselves. They are Joseph Darville, aged 50, of 902 Ossington avenue, and Thomas Chatfield, aged 22, of 322 Salem avenue and the affair happened last night on a Bloor street car at the corner of Dovercourt road. The men had persisted in leaving by the rear way, so when brought before Magistrate Ellis for disorderly conduct they were fined $5 and costs each. Their rough actions had gone to the extent of wrestling with the conductor, being put off and falling into the hands of Constable Hamilton just outside.

Conductor Joseph McLaughlin told his story. "I asked these two gentlemen to go out the front door as there was a lot of passengers to get on the back. One replied that he had gone out the back way and would do it again. Then he took hold of me and in the scuffle a window was broken. Chatfield had hold of me and the other fellow came back to the rear of the car but didn't do anything to interfere with me, though it seemed he was looking for trouble. I thought they both were a bit drunk."

Officer Hamilton stated that when he arrived on the scene both men were struggling with the conductor.

Magistrate Ellis read the older man a lecture on the inadvisability of interference. "You see what it sometime means to be too busy. If you had attended to your own business you wouldn't have been here this morning."

WILL GO OVER FALLS TO-MORROW A CIGAR-SHAPED CRAFT

NIAGARA FALLS, DEC. 9.—"Bobby" Leach says he is going over the Horseshoe Falls in a patent lifeboat. He has fixed Sunday afternoon as the time "providing he can make the proper terms with some moving picture concerns." The boat, which arrived at the Grand Trunk Railroad station from Rivers, Manitoba, was unloaded yesterday afternoon upon the arrival in the city of the designer, James Mitchell, a man past 50 years old.

The craft is cigar-shaped, 24 feet long, and is entirely enclosed and water tight. It is propelled by a low power gas engine, and will bafflasted, so should it overturn it will right itself immediately. Leach has no fear but that he will make the trip in safety.

He says he will make the start from Chippewa, and only stormy weather will prevent him from making the 168-foot dive in the boat on Sunday afternoon, starting at two o'clock. Leach has figured the whole thing out and says he will steer the craft so that it will make the leap somewhat toward the west of the apex of the Canadian Fall. Here the water is deepest and there are no rocks at the bottom. On September 24 last, Leach made a trip through the Whirlpool Rapids in a barrel.

PHOTOGRAPHS IN THIS ISSUE ARE BY ROY STUDIO

No doubt, before you read this article you will have glanced over the illustrated section of today's Christmas annual, and have admired the magnificent photographs that adorn its pages. The Examiner is proud of this section: proud because of its artistic excellence, but prouder because the photographs are those of Peterborough children, and because this splendid photography is the work of a local institution—the Roy Studio—whose finished work frequently is seen in the Examiner. No better endorsation of the firm's skill could be given than the photographs which appear in to-day's Examiner, which will be admired by everyone. Not only the children's photographs, but other pictures throughout this edition were done by Roy, including the beautiful coloured picture, entitled "Fireside Companions."

The firm make a specialty of Christmas photography. Next year it is the intention of the Examiner, in its Christmas edition, to publish a full page of children's pictures, made up of the photographs of every child photographed by the Roy Studio during the coming year.

45 MEN ENTOMBED IN WESTERN CANADA MINE AS RESULT OF TERRIFIC EXPLOSION

At Midnight Twenty Men Had Been Removed, Seven of Them Dead and Remainder Badly Injured.

ALL WERE FOREIGNERS

Special Wire to The Examiner.

CALGARY, ALB., DEC. 10.—A terrific explosion occurred in the Western Canada Collier's mine at Bellevieu, on the Crow's Nest Pass, last night and forty-five men were entombed. The fire was extinguished and the mine entered. At midnight twenty men had been removed, of whom seven are dead, the remainder badly and some fatally burned. Some are still in the mine. All the men involved are foreigners, Italians or Swedes. The cause of the explosion is unknown.

STANDING OF THE PARTIES

Special to the Examiner.

LONDON, DEC. 10.—A Liberal gain of three seats from the Unionists, on the returns announced to-day, once more equalized the tally. The Coalitionists and Unionists have each captured twenty-one seats from the other. The total number of seats thus far secured in the new parliament are as follows:

Coalition—207.
Unionists—284.

The Coalition aggregate is made up of Liberals, 175; Nationalists, 54; O'Brientites, 7; Labour members, 31.

CAUGHT IN THE BELTING

Special to The Examiner.

BELLEVILLE, ONT., DEC. 10.—Caught in belting at the cement works, Grevin Cheriota, an Assyrian, twenty years of age and unmarried, while oiling machinery, was whirled around in the wheel and instantly killed.

DOUBLE TRAGEDY

Special to The Examiner.

SHERBROOKE, DEC. 10.—The east townships are aghast over a tragedy last night. It is surmised that while James Houston a grocer, and his son James were working in the furnace room, the son suddenly struck his father on the head with a hammer which he was using, then took his own like, by hacking his throat and body. Both were found dead. The reason for the rash act is unknown.

CHINA SHOWER

Given to Miss Ida Rehill, Who is Leaving the City

A number of the friends of Miss Ida Rehill, who is leaving the city shortly, surprised her last night by giving her a "china shower" at the residence of Miss Mabel Brown, corner of Charlotte and Park Sts. Miss Rehill was also presented with an eulogistic address. Refreshments were served and a pleasant social hour spent.

ANNIVERSARY SERVICES

Of the George Street Methodist Church To-morrow

The anniversary services in connection with George Street Methodist Church will be held on Sunday and Monday, Dec. 11th and 12th. The pastor, Rev. Isaac Couch, M.A., B. D., will preach both morning and evening.

One striking feature about the services will be the musical part. The officials have secured the services of the Imperial Male Quartette of London, late of the Chicago Lyceum, who have attracted so much attention in various cities upon the continent. They will render selections both morning and evening. Miss Gott of Toronto, soprano soloist, will also be present and sing at both services. On Monday evening a sacred concert will be held, when Miss Grace Merry of Toronto, one of Canada's gifted readers, will be present. Abundance of music. Silver collection of ten cents. Chair taken at 8 p.m.

THE OPENING OF THE NEW KNOX CHURCH

HISTORY OF GROWTH OF KNOX CHURCH CONGREGATION NEW CHURCH OPENS TO-MORROW

Development of the South City Presbyterian Body from its Commencement as a Small Mission to its Present Flourishing and Prosperous Condition---Those Who Are Responsible for Advancement.

For speedy growth in Towns and Churches we usually turn to the West. We do not look for it in the East, since so many are flocking from East to West, depleting country and towns and likewise Churches. There is one striking case at least where in spite of the trek Westward a small city has made rapid strides, and its Churches no less than its stores illustrate it. The City of Peterborough is now one of the best known in Canada, known for its alertness, aggressiveness and progress. It will soon be known also as a City of Churches. These reflect the growth of the City, and its aggressiveness. One of the first to be established to meet the growing need is the one now known as Knox Presbyterian Church. When the two ladies who suggested the commencement of the undertaking first had the vision of the growth of the City towards the South, and saw the need of work in that section of the City there was no Church south of Charlotte Street. Now there are five other Churches, most of them in new buildings.

In 1872 an interdenominational Ladies' District Visiting Association was formed in Peterborough, at the suggestion of Mrs. Renaud. Two ladies, the late Mrs. James A. Hall and Miss Charlotte Dickson, were appointed to the district South of Charlotte Street. In the faithful discharge of their work, they found that many children were not attending any Sabbath School. The parents were anxious that provision should be made to meet the need. Accordingly these ladies sought for assistance and invited two young men in the Bank of Commerce, Mr. James A. Hall and Mr. T. W. Nisbet, to help them in this new undertaking. The young men consented.

The next thing was to find a building suitable for a Sabbath School. After a diligent search, the only unoccupied building they could find was a stable on the east side of Aylmer Street, between Charlotte and King Streets. They had to use this or do without. Much to their surprise and gratification, they were informed by the owner that this very building was originally the first Presbyterian Church in Peterborough, and it had been used as such during the early ministry of the late Rev. Mr. Roger. The owner allowed the use of this interesting building for a Sabbath School. It was cleaned up and prepared, and benches were provided by the Committee. This School was opened in May, 1872, with Mr. T. W. Nisbet as its first Superintendent and a roll of nine scholars. Mr. Nisbet had the idea that the Y.M.C.A. might become responsible for the work, but this was found impossible. Unfortunately, that same year Mr Nisbet was removed to Montreal. Mr. W. W. Johnston succeeded him, and continued as Superintendent until 1892. Under his leadership the School grew until its average attendance reached one hundred. In the meantime, new quarters had to be found, for in 1873, one year after its foundation, the School had outgrown the place of its birth.

A vacant lot was found on Dalhousie Street, between Stewart and Rubidge Streets, and the owner, Mr Walter Patterson, granted the trustees a lease of the property for twenty years at the nominal rental of one dollar a year. A building was erected for Sabbath School purposes on the property. Mr. T. W. Nisbet showed his continued interest in the work by sending a donation of $100. The balance, $300, was raised by local subscriptions, not more than $50 being given outside of St Paul's Church. The building has now lost its original appearance. The School made great strides in its new and more suitable quarters, under the leadership of Mr. W. W. Johnston. It was the intention of the founders to keep it undenominational, but with the exception of one or two Baptists, it was conducted by Presbyterians. Some of the ladies who assisted in the work as teachers at that early period of the School's history, were Miss Baptie, Miss Grundy, Miss Gilmour, Miss Veals, Miss Patterson. The infant class was taught by Miss Moffatt. The late Mr. Wm. Fairweather, Mr. Alex. Gillespie and Mr. J. W. Bennet showed a deep interest in the work and assisted as teachers. Mothers' Meetings were started by Miss Veals, which were well attended and proved a means of great helpfulness. After Miss Veals left this work was carried on by Miss Gilmour. Later on St. John's Church made a request for the use of the building, which was granted, and as a result of their work in that section of the City, All Saints' sprang up. Park Street Baptist Church also made use of the building for its earliest efforts.

Mr. W. W. Johnston continued as

MUNICIPAL ELECTION GOSSIP NO OPPOSITION TO MAYOR MORROW PRESENT COUNCIL NON-COMMITTAL

Canvassed by the Examiner, Only a Few of the Aldermen Will State Their Intentions---"Not Decided Yet" is the Favourite Reply When Asked if They Are Going to be Candidates Again.

With Nomination Day coming two weeks from Monday, one would naturally expect the municipal pot would begin to simmer, but apparently there are no signs of any great interest in the coming elections.

That Mayor Morrow will be returned to office by acclamation would seem to be evident as there is no talk of any opposition to His Worship. So far at least, no name has been mentioned of a possible opponent to Mayor Morrow and it is not likely that any candidate will come along at this late stage.

There is plenty of gossip about a host of new candidates for the council, but while people say there will be a large field, it is hard to obtain the names of any new blood that there may be in the running. The members of the present council, at least the majority of them, do not seem very certain as to what their intentions are. The Examiner has made a canvass of the council, with the exception of Ald. Turner, who is out of the city. Only in a few cases were the aldermen positive as to whether or not they were going to be candidates again. Most of them will have to be marked down in the "doubtful" column just now, until they make more definite statements.

"I have not decided yet whether I will be a candidate or not," was all that Ald. Gillespie would say to the Examiner.

"I have nothing to say at the present time as to my intentions," was Ald. Hicks' statement.

There was nothing backward about Ald. Butler. "You can say that I will be on the job all right in the south ward" he said emphatically, when the Examiner called him up last night.

"I don't really know myself," said Ald. Metheral when a representative of this paper called on him. "I can't say now whether I will be a candidate or not."

"I have nothing at all to say about it just now" was all that the Examiner could obtain from Ald. Phelan.

"Yes, I will be a candidate again," Ald. Morgan announced when interviewed. "I will run in the east ward."

"I am undecided," said Ald. Graham. "I think of retiring, but a good many people have asked me to be a candidate again. I can't say yet just what I will do."

"It is likely that I will be a candidate and in the Central Ward," Ald. Bradburn said, "but I have not decided definitely. That is all I can say at present."

"I will not run again," said Ald. Hatten to the Examiner. "I am superannuated from the Council".

Ald. Duffus was not prepared to state his intentions. "I have not decided yet," was his reply.

The same was true of Ald. Duncan who could not give a definite statement of his intentions.

Capital Punishment For Twenty-Six Conspirators

Special wire to The Examiner:

TOKIO, DEC. 10.—The first trial in which anyone has been charged with designs against the life of the Emperor of Japan, opened to-day, in that of Denkiro Kotoku and twenty-five associates, including his wife. The special court, which first examined them, found all guilty of conspiracy against the Emperor, recommending capital punishment. It is expected, however, that the death sentence will be refuted when the case is finished.

EXCITING RUNAWAY IN WHICH GIRLS WERE THROWN OUT

An exciting runaway took place on Hunter street this morning when a horse, driven by two young ladies, the Misses Switzer, residing near Otonee, became frightened and bolted. In front of Roy's studio the cutter slewed into the pavement and threw the two occupants out into the road, while the horse went gaily on its way. The Misses Switzer escaped unhurt. The horse ran along Hunter street to Aylmer, up Aylmer to McDonnel and out that street almost to Jackson Park, before it was rounded up. It was evidently heading for home.

TWELVE BELOW ZERO.

Last night the thermometer marked twelve degrees below zero, from ten o'clock, all through the night to seven this morning. Homes in warmly-built houses, with plenty of fuel, can hardly appreciate what this means—what would have been the condition of the dozen children rescued and last night comfortably ensconced in the Shelter,—the suffering if these children had remained in the fireless, squalid, filthy, breadless homes from which they were rescued. Every one who gave even a five-cent piece on tag-day can rejoice that he or she did something to provide the funds that made possible the rescue of these poor children. Twelve below zero, instead of chilling our hearts, should kindle in them the warm glow of love and charity, of thoughtfulness for those who are deprived of the comforts that help us to laugh at the despondent thermometer, and defy its lowest malice. The cold weather, joined to the Christmas spirit, should lead us to help lessen the suffering, and anticipate the conditions, produced by cold weather. We can do this in many ways—give employment where there is enforced idleness, pay what we owe to those who most need the money. If you have "stood off" a charwoman, or a poor sewing woman, if you owe her only a few cents, pay what you owe. A few cents look like a few dollars in homes where the coal bin is empty, the woodshed bare, and the larder in the "Mother-Hubbard" class.

Nobody would have believed, but for the revelations made, that such conditions could and did, exist, as were shown to exist in Belmont. We have these things right at our doors, and yet we are bled white to get money to send missionaries to foreign heathens, leaving our own severely alone.

And if the kind-hearted would become thoughtful and serious, they might find conditions of suffering, if not, degredation, in this blessed city with its twenty, or more, churches, which they would not have believed could exist. Let twelve below zero perform a paradox; let it kindle the fire of charity in your hearts, and lead you to do your share; let it lead you to seek out and relieve suffering, even if you have to discount your own comfort a little to give relief. Something in this way is possible in many ways. If you haven't ready money you can have the will, and the will find a way of some kind. In every house to a greater or less extent, there are, in attic and garret, cast-off clothing, frayed blankets and quilts, left to the tender mercy of the moths. Fish them out and put them to use to clothe the naked and cover the shivering. Thoughtfulness may have made you indifferent, but remember that in effect, thoughtlessness is hard-heartedness. Remember to-night, when you are sitting in your snug, warm home, and listen with indifference to the cold cracking your verandah floors, like pistol shots, that that spells suffering and shivering, and perhaps, death, to some neighbour whom you, out of your abundance, might relieve.

THRIFT AND SENSE.

He that has thrift has sense, and sense begets and suggests thrift. Thrift is one of the most logical things imaginable. Thrift is the conservation of useful things, for future use. The man or woman, young man or girl or child who spends the useful thing called money, for objects and for purposes not only useless but positively injurious, may possess, but does not exercise, common sense.

One day in Toronto, a tattered and disreputable junk dealer, called at the back door of a house in quest of "rags and bones." The housewife gave him a curt, not to say uncourteous, even rude reception—she was busy and did not want to be bothered. A few minutes later, another rap at the front door demanded her attention. There was the same junk dealer, but not so humble this time. "Go 'way; didn't I tell you I had no rags or bones for you." "I don't want them now—I'm your landlord and your rent is raised from $30 to $40 per month.

This revision of rates, illustrates the result of thrift—per haps in this case meanness — which is nevertheless thrift, as a rotten apple is still an apple—a good thing gone wrong—not a condemnation of this noble fruit.

This junk dealer is an example of how even a despised industry like junk-mongling can be used to exploit and demonstrate the value of thrift. Here we have a man who by the exercise of industry and thrift became a real estate owner, a power, that could make its object, which flouted it in one capacity, cringe to it in another. If the tenant woman or her husband had had as much thrift as the junk man they might have owned the house they paid rent for, instead of being under the thumb of a hard task master.

Money is power and in general money, so as to be a power, cannot be amassed except by thrift—the denial of wishes for unnecessary objects or luxuries or empty pleasures and the careful saving of all income not essential to decent living.

A young man, employed in a city grocery, in order to save his money, denied himself the "pleasures" such as pool, billiards, theatres to excess, cigarettes and beers, which took all the spare money of his shop mates. He lived decently and comfortably and saved money. In time the proprietor died, the business was for sale, the thrifty young man bought it and grew wealthy. At the psycological moment the money derived from his thrift made him a prosperous business man and a respected citizen.

Young men and young women will say—"but look at all the fun he missed — what a good time he missed." That odious phrase, "a good time" has the maximum of danger and damnation in it. It is empty and idiotic chatter for the most part. It generally spells debasing pleasures, wasted time, wasted means, wasted life, wasted opportunities.

Why can't or why won't the young use their brains, and see that the hard-earned wages they scatter, buy only empty pleasures, and lead to an empty purse, an empty life, an empty stomach and an empty place in the ranks of reputable and respected manhood, which they might have occupied. Is not such a course purely idiotic? They would so describe the action of a man who would burn his money instead of using it to buy frivolous and ephemeral indulgence of animal appetites, misnamed pleasures. Yet, in effect, they do as bad a thing.

Not only is money wasted in these senseless pleasures that leave nothing but a sting behind them and lay the foundations of shambling, decrepit and diseased old age, but they waste time enough in the course of a year to learn a language or stenography or typewriting or some accomplishment that will be a lasting asset of value and cost nothing for up-keep.

If the people, especially the young, could be educated to be thrifty and saving, and be brought to realize how serious is the problem of life, especially in its old age, they would have power to resist the disposition to squander their earnings, either in the barroom or pool room, or on many equally useless and unsatisfying expenditures. The strength and vigour of youth should be made the prop of a comfortable and independent old age. That is a lesson our teachers and preachers should impress.

The Dominion Government Annuity Act, gives to the young man who saves and pays into the government from the age of 20 years to 60 years only 20 cents a week, an annuity at that age of nearly $200 a year—a perpetual annual income for the rest of his life; and a larger pension in proportion as he pays a larger weekly amount.

Now and where are the young who are too giddy to think, to learn to be thrifty? At the same place they get their education—in the school. Our schools cost us $40,000 or $50,000 a year to teach children how to succeed in life, how to make money, but never a lesson how to make the best use of money, how to practice thrift. Our schools teach children how to pass entrance and other examinations; but they do not teach them how to pass the examination for entrance into the university of practical life, how to save, and not waste, their capital.

Penny savings banks for schools are not only a means to an end, but an end in themselves. They are a means because they inculcate the lesson of thrift, which practised, becomes an end, the establishment of a capital, small perhaps, but one bound to grow, if the lesson learned lasts them into real life.

Thrift and habits of thrift make good citizenship. The habit of waste, or its equivalent—expenditure upon senseless and vain pleasures—makes bad citizenship, pauperism, indigence, loafing, tramping and incalculable unhappiness. Are not thrift and sense companion qualities?

Cigarette Heart And The Moving Picture Eye

It is a startling story, says the Toronto Globe, that comes from Ottawa in the form of a report on recruiting for Canada's naval service. Of the young men in Nova Scotia and British Columbia—fine lusty fellows in appearance—who wished to join the naval service, seventy-five per cent. failed to pass medical inspection. In most cases rejection was due to cigarette heart or moving-picture eye. The cigarette heart is something with which the medical men and all interested in the athletic training of the youth o fthe country are familiar. Nicotine poisoning, and especially the variety of nicotine poisoning following the use of cigarettes, is steadily on the increase. In every factory, store, and office, one may see lads with the tell-tale yellow stains on the first two fingers of the right hand. Not for them are Marathon triumphs, the fierce joy of a Rugby championship game or a place in the Henley eight. The stains on the fingers are but the outward signs of the havoc wrought by the cigarette habit, havoc so great that a few days ago it was suggested in the House of Commons that a bill to prohibit the use of cigarettes was almost as necessary as one to forbid the smoking of opium.

The moving-picture eye is a new peril of civilization. The effect upon the sensitive nerves of the eye, of frequent attendance at moving picture shows must be very great. Many people say that they have a headache after keeping the eyes fixed for a time on the constantly changing points of light that produce a moving picture, but the headache, like the tobacco stain on the fingers, seems to be only evidence of more serious trouble. The moving picture eye must be a rather dangerous thing when it leads to the rejection of otherwise healthy young fellows who want to serve in the navy. The man behind the gun must have no defect of vision. His life depends upon his ability to see the swirl on the distant water that betrays a hidden submarine, to catch in an instant the outline of the destroyer as revealed by the rays of the searchlight, and to shoot straight when the battle is joined.

Canada's naval force may be small at first, but it must have men of the best available quality. The cutting out of rations of grog and the weeding out of the youth with the cigarette heart and the moving-picture eye afford evidence that the personnel of the service is to be maintained on the highest possible standard. But what about the seventy-five per cent. of the unfit who come back to civil life? Are we going to go on producing the cigarette heart indefinitely? Is the moving picture eye to take a permanent place among the diseases of the modern world? It may be all right to make war impossible by raising a race unfit for its hardships and exacting tasks, but peace also has its duties and its dangers. Every good Canadian should set himself against the growing use of cigarettes by the youth of the country and the undue multiplication of a species of amusement that seems to be scarcely less hurtful physically to its votaries than it is asserted to be in many cases morally.

BANK OF MONTREAL.

In this issue of the Examiner is to be found a summarized report of the 83rd annual meeting of the Bank of Montreal, held on Dec. 5. In this report are revealed and emphasized the prosperity and importance of one of the greatest banks in the world, which has for nearly a century held a dominating position among the financial institutions of Canada. A little reference to the financial statements presented goes to show that the bank is still holding its rank as the most intimate and potent financial factor in the industrial, commercial and developmental life of the country. The profits earned during the year, including with the balance of $893,706.36 carried over from last year, make a total of $2,401,789.11. This enabled the management to pay a dividend of 10 per cent. and to carry forward nearly a million dollars — $981,789.11—to profit and loss. The total assets of the bank are $239,892,330. This is a huge sum, and speaks of strength, solidity and an enormous business. The capital stock is $14,400,000 and the rest is $12,000,000. The deposits bearing interest exceed $154,000,000, while the non-interest deposits are nearly $43,000,000. That the bank is sharing in and promoting the prosperity of the country is indicated b yan increase of $21,000,000 in its loans and advances. With a capital and rest fund, combined of more than twenty-five million, with deposits double the annual contributions of the people to the Dominion revenue, and touching the business life of the country at every point, the Bank of Montreal may be ranked as a national possession and an indispensably important element in national progress.

WHAT END HAS BEEN SERVED?

It might be reasonably inquired what end, good or bad, has been served by the attitude of Mr. Borden, leader of the Conservative party and his following, in antagonizing the Canadian naval policy. The policy was adopted by Parliament, and all the attacks upon it have represented so much waste of ammunition. Mr. Borden and his friends have accomplished nothing in the interests of the country, no mater what they may have aimed to do, or think they have done, for the party. They have shown their inconsistency. They voted in a body for the principle of the establishment of a Canadian navy. In 1909 Mr. Borden waxed eloquent in favour of a Canadian navy—to be built, as he expressed it, "of Canadian materials by Canadian workmen and Canadian skill." He denounced the idea of a contribution with equal eloquence. At the beginning of last session he took the same ground in his speeches, but before the end of the session changed his course and demanded the giving of $3 or 35 millions to Britain and the submission of the question of a navy to the people—but the gift of 35 millions of the money of the people of Canada to be spent by old country workmen, was to be voted by parliament, without submission to the people. This session Mr. Borden and his followers joined hands with the "Nationalists" of Quebec, the empire wreckers who carried Drummond and Athabaska on the cry, "Down with the Canadian navy!" "Down with England and the English!" And what good end was served? The Canadian navy still remains, for the tactics employed could not affect it. What was gained was a reputation for shifty and inconsistent attitudes upon the naval question; what was gained was credit for a show of zeal for party interests. It was also showed that to advance party interests the leader of the great Conservative party was willing, as he and his following showed by voice and vote, to ally themselves with empire-wreckers and declared enemies to "England and the English"—to gain a little party advantage. After all the fuss, after all the bitterness, after all the damage to national harmony of citizenship Mr. Borden has not gained—as he had no hope to gain—an inch in destroying the policy of the Canadian navy. He has only destroyed his reputation for consistency and patriotism.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

We were under the impression, says the Brantford Expositor, that the members of the present Conservative Government, when out of office, were in favour of making Niagara power "as free as air," to all private companies which might desire to make use of it, and that it was the Liberal Government which first made the Niagara power companies pay tribute to the Provincial treasury, and afterwards passed legislation paving the way for municipal ownership.

CANADA'S WONDERFUL TRADE.

(London Advertiser)

The latest report of the Canadian Department of Trade and Commerce is a cheerful document. The remarkable growth of grain production is reflected in the export figures. Ten years ago the exports of animal products exceeded the exports of primary agricultural products by more than double, the figure for the former being upwards of $366,000000, while the latter amounted to about $27,000,000; last year the position was reversed, with $190,000,000 in round figures, for agricultural products, to $64,000,000 for animal products. Of the total of $144,000,000, Great Britain purchased $113,000,000.

The products of Canadian mines amounted to only $8,000,000 in value in 1896; last year they amounted to $40,000,000, of which $33,000,000 went to the United States, and $4,000,000 to Great Britain. Fishery products amounted last year to $15,000,000, of which Great Britain and the United States each purchased $8,000,000 worth. Of the exports of animals and their products, including meats, butter and cheese, which amounted last year to $54,000,000, the bulk was purchased by Great Britain, the United States having reached last year the high-water mark of their purchases of such products since Confederation, the figure being $10,629,614, which is $7,000,000 more than the figure for 1899.

Ten years ago Great Britain's purchases of Canadian products totalled $90,000,000, and the purchases of the United States $53,000,000. Last year the figures were: Great Britain, $130,000,000; the United States, $104,000,000. Last year our imports from Great Britain reached a record-breaking total, $80,000,000, as did also our imports from the United States, $227,000,000.

Survivor of Robinson Immigration Tells Of The Struggles Of Pioneers

Mr. Thomas Sullivan Came to Peterborough in 1825, when but Two Years Old—Experiences of First Settlers.

INTERESTING MEMORIES

Eighty-five and three-quarter years ago in May, 1825 a band of two thousand and twenty-four emigrants, men, women and children set sail from Cork, Ireland to come under the direction of the Honourable Peter Robinson to settle in what is now Peterborough County. Of the members of this large and important immigration, which was the true foundation of the City of Peterborough and the true cause of the rising prosperity of the surrounding townships, only one is living to-day as far as can be learned. The only known survivor is a resident of Peterborough, Mr. Thomas Sullivan, who resides with relatives at 284 Murray Street and an Examiner reporter had a most interesting interview with him this week in regard to early conditions in this district.

Mr. Sullivan is a fitting survivor of the men who settled Peterborough. Although 87 years of age, he is in splendid health and has full possession of all his faculties. His memory is as keen as his blue eye and he recalls without the least difficulty the incidents of his boyhood days.

BORN IN IRELAND

Mr. Sullivan was a son of the late Michael Sullivan and was born in the County of Tipperary, Ireland, in 1823. When he was but two years old his parents decided to come to Canada and formed part of the Peter Robinson emigration. Sailing in May, 1825, the 2,000 emigrants, closely packed in the hold of the ship suffered grievously during the outward voyage, although fortunately for them the passage was accomplished in what was then a remarkably short voyage of twenty-one days. Landing in Quebec the immigrants were forwarded to Kingston and there spent two weeks in tents. On August 11, 1825, their journey into the wilds of Ontario was re-commenced. They were brought in a small steamer to Cobourg, driven across to Rice Lake and brought up to Peterborough in large flat-bottomed boats propelled by long oars or in shallow water shoved along with great labour by poles.

Mr. Sullivan's father who was then thirty-four years of age with his wife and six children settled on the east half of Lot 9 in the ninth concession of Douro and there set up his home.

BUILDING THEIR HOMES

Mr. Sullivan of course does not remember this voyage or the settling of his family in Douro as he was only a babe of two years then but he is able to give some graphic illustrations of the difficulties the pioneers had to contend with.

"Our people did not know anything about wood-craft," he remarked to the Examiner, "or of building houses as the Government had to help them out. Up around Toronto the country had been settled for some time earlier and some of the young men from there who had grown up in Canada and had learned how to use the axe properly would come down into our settlement and show the settlers how to build. There were no horses or even oxen at that time and so only logs that could be carried could be used. Seven or eight settlers would have a bee and with the assistance and direction of the more experienced colonist would build the little cabins of logs."

NO ROADS AT THAT TIME

There were no roads into the little village of Peterborough at that time; nothing but a blazed trail through the woods. When we raised our first

LAST SURVIVOR OF THE ROBINSON IMMIGRATION

MR. THOMAS SULLIVAN

Born in Tipperary, Ireland, in 1823, who arrived in Peterborough at the age of two years wheat and Indian corn my father and mother had to carry it on their backs to a little mill on the river bank where it was ground. I can remember my mother crossing the river on the ice with a big bag of wheat on her back."

"Each of the settlers was given 100 acres of land and was given a cow, an axe, a handsaw, hammer and other tools and enough provisions to last them a year. We had no brooms or anything of that kind but the house was swept by means of two cedar twigs tied to a stick."

"For light for a while we had nothing but pine knots. After a while we got settled and owned a pig or two. We got grease for candles and these we used until coal-oil came along. I remember quite well buying a gallon of coal oil in Peterborough here for seventy-five cents and paying seventy-five cents for a lamp. And we were a little afraid of coal oil in those days too."

"We had no tea but used instead a kind of coffee which we made by burning a crust of bread. Our sugar was made from maple syrup. We soon learned to tap the maple trees and get our sugar in that way. The flint and steel were the only means of obtaining fire and often I remember being sent to get a "seed of fire" from the nearest neighbour a couple of miles away. A "seed of fire" was the name we had for a live coal and we used to borrow from each other when our fires went out. This did not often happen in the winter as we used big Log logs but in the summer when a big fire was not needed it would sometimes go out and then it would be necessary to get fire from the neighbours. We had to carry it in a pail covered over with ashes."

NO WAGGONS USED

"I did not come into Peterborough much until I was ten or twelve years old. We had no way of getting in at all in the summer except walking as we had no waggons and of course it was not possible for the oxen to drag the sleighs over the bare ground. We did not get horses for a long time and it was quite a while before we even got oxen. At that time the man who owned a team of oxen was considered well off. The road was of the worst possible variety twisting in and out in all directions."

"The early settlers were very frightened of wolves and bears and I remember my father telling me of something that gave him a bad scare the first winter we were in Douro. One night a couple of hoot owls lit on the roof of our cabin and commenced yowling. My people had never heard anything like that before and were sure that the wolves had come to carry them off. My father placed mother and us children in the corner farthest away from the door and picking up his musket pointed it at the door and waited the approach of the enemy. Of course none came."

"There was not much of the present City of Peterborough then. When my father and mother came there were only three log houses about where the market is now, two of these being used by the Government."

THE FIRST CHURCH

The first church that I remember was a small log building on Hunter Street about where the Review Office now is and Father Crowley was the first priest." "Schools?" There were no schools for some time and most of the children of that time grew up without learning to read or write except in some cases where their parents taught them. A man who could read and write fairly well would come along and if he could get enough people willing to pay him to have their children taught he would open up a little school but there were no government schools for a long time."

Mr. Sullivan has been a resident of this county continuously since 1825 with the exception of twelve years in the United States. He returned to this county in 1865 and has been here ever since. He is undoubtedly the last survivor of the Robinson emigration. There were six two years ago but five of these pioneers have passed away since then.

To Grow Hair on a Bald Head

By a Specialist

Thousands of people suffer from baldness and falling hair, who, having tried nearly every advertised hair tonic and hair grower without results, have resigned themselves to baldness and its attendant discomforts. Yet their case is not hopeless; the following simple home prescription has made hair grow after years of baldness, and is also unequalled for restoring gray hair to its original colour, stoping hair from falling out, and for destroying the dandruff germ. It will not make the hair greasy, and can be put up by any chemist: Bay Rum 6 ounces, Lavona de Composee 2 ounces, Menthol Crystals 1-2 drachm. If you wish it perfumed add half to one teaspoonful of To-Kalon Perfume, which unites perfectly with the other ingredients. This preparation is highly recommended by physicians and specialists, and is absolutely harmless, as it contains none of the poisonous wood alcohol so frequently found in hair tonics. Do not apply to the face or where hair is not desired.

DID NOT BUY THE REVOLVER

Witness Swears That Hattie LeBlanc Was Not Woman Who Bought Gun Which Killed Clarence H. Glover

OTHER EVIDENCE

Special to The Examiner:

CAMBRIDGE, DEC. 9.—One of the most dramatic moments in the trial of Hattie LeBlanc for the murder of Clarence H. Glover, of Waltham, came to-day, when Thomas J. Coffey, formerly a salesman in a Boston sporting goods store, testified that he had sold the revolver with which Glover is said to have been killed by a woman, and then as he gazed upon the smiling face of the 17-year-old defendant, he said slowly, and with positiveness, "No, that is not the woman."

Mr Coffey, who is now studying for the priesthood at the College of the Holy Angels, Buffalo, N.Y., was unable to give a good description of the woman who purchased the weapon further than to say that she was 25 or 30 years old and spoke English.

Other evidence went to show that Seymour Glover told the District Attorney that he came to Mr. McFarland's office to see his mother personally, and that he did not intend to make any statements at the time which "might injure a certain party."

In response to a question, he said that Mr. Elmore, Mrs. Glover's counsel, was the "certain party."

At this point, according to the transcript, Arthur Glover, a brother, said:

"Seymour, do you remember telling me of lots of occasions when you wished to punch her (Mrs. Glover's) head?"

"Yes," responded Seymour. He said that Elmore had told him to keep quiet, although he admitted that Mr. Elmore had not instructed him not to talk to the District Attorney.

A PETERBOROUGH BOY

Is Mr. W. J. McQuinn, Local Representative for the Buffalo Bill Pictures

Mr. W. J. McQuinn, the local representative of the Buffalo Bill Far West and Pawnee Bill Far East moving pictures, which are being shown at the Crystal Theatre this week, to crowded houses, is an old Peterborough boy, with a host of friends in this city, who are glad to renew acquaintances with him. Mrs. McQuinn was also a resident of Peterborough. The pictures, which are of course, actual photographs of the Big Wild West Shows, are remarkably clear and life-like, and have been greatly admired by all who have seen them.

EAT AND GET THIN

This is turning an old phrase face about, but modern methods of reducing fat have made this revision possible.

If you are overfat and also averse to physical exertion and likewise fond of the table and still want to reduce your excess flesh several pounds, do this: Go to your druggist (or write the Marmola Co., 833 Farmer Bldg., Detroit, Mich.) and give him (or send them) 75 cents. For this modest amount of money the druggist will put you in the way of satisfying your ambition for a nice, trim, slim figure. He will hand you a large case of Marmola Prescription Tablets (compounded in accordance with the famous Marmola Prescription), one of which you must take after each meal and at bedtime until you begin to lose your fat at the rate of 12 to 16 ounces a day. That is all. Just go on eating what you like; leave exercising to the athletes, but take your little tablet faithfully and without a doubt that flabby flesh will quickly take unto itself wings, leaving behind it your natural self, neatly clothed in firm flesh and trim muscles.

"LOAFERS"

Will be Subject of Address at the Princess Theatre

There are many kinds of "loafers" in this world. They are not all "out of work"—there are some who might be called "busy" loafers. For further consideration of this subject of "Loafers" we would advise you to be present at the Princess Theatre tomorrow afternoon at 3 o'clock. The St. John's Guild of Good Fellowship will welcome all men of 18 years or over to this meeting. A full discussion follows the address, and every man present is given an opportunity of expressing his own views on the subject. Do not forget to-morrow, in the Princess, at 3 o'clock.

Superintendent of the Sabbath School until 1892. At that time the workers were informed that the lease had run out, and that the owner of the property wanted it for other purposes. In the summer of that year, the property now occupied by Knox Church was purchased for $1,250. The cost was provided for by a donation of $500 from Mrs. Nicholls, the proceeds of the old building, and funds given by the Managers of St. Paul's Church.

Arrangements were at once made for the erection of a School on the new property, and tenders were asked for. At this stage Presbytery was approached with a view to stay proceedings. The Presbytery thought the objections raised were reasonable, and the scheme was abandoned. The result was that the School disbanded, and the scholars became scattered among other denominations.

Ten years later, in 1902, after a previous investigation by a Committee representing the Session, Board of Managers and Sabbath School of St. Paul's Church, the subject was brought up in Presbytery again. This time no opposition was manifested, and permission was given to proceed. The building now in use was erected in the fall of that year by Rutherford Brothers, at a cost of $4,037. The work was under the direction of a Committee appointed by St. Paul's at the annual meeting of the congregation on the 5th of February, 1902. The Committee was as follows: Messrs. R. E. Wood, Chairman; W. G. Ferguson, T. A. S. Hay, Wm. Madill, J. W. Bennet, Robt. Harrison, Adam Hall, James Gillespie, G. M. Roger and J. H. Conmal. Fixtures were added at a cost of $681. The Ladies' Aid Society of St. Paul's Church bore the expense of furnishings, providing chairs, carpets, railing and piano. The funds were provided for as follows: Subscriptions, $1,840.30; Century Fund, $815.23; St. Paul's Sabbath School, $138.88; St. Paul's Church, $1,817.77; Ladies' Aid, $500.

It was now St. Paul's Mission. On the first of February, 1903, it was opened as such. Rev. J. A. Wilson, Assistant Minister of St. Paul's Church, preached in the morning on the text, "What mean ye by these stones?" The Rev. E. F. Torrance, D.D., preached in the evening. On Monday evening there was a social gathering provided by the Ladies' Aid of St. Paul's Church. To this were invited the resident ministers were invited. From this time on, services were conducted twice each Sabbath, the Minister and Assistant of St. Paul's conducting them. In addition to Dr. Torrance, Rev. J. A. Wilson, now of Hamilton; Rev. H. H. Ketchen, also of Hamilton; Rev W. M. MacKay, of Harriston; and Rev. A. Bright, now of Ingersoll, had a prominent share in the work.

The Sabbath School, under the leadership of Mr. Jas. A Hall, made rapid progress, increasing at the rate of 10 per cent. a year, until it has now an average of 250.

The first communion service was held in the new building in March, 1903. Rev Dr. Torrance conducted the service. Those who sat down at the first communion were as follows: Mr. Louden, Mrs. Louden, Mrs Pogue, Miss Bennet, Mrs. McCannan, Mrs. George Scott, Mrs. Preston, Mrs. F. W. Davidson, Mrs Thomas Tully, Mrs. Stewart, D. Downey, Robt. Logan, Mrs. Logan, Miss Jennie Hamilton, Miss Kate Hamilton, Mr. W. E. Laing, Mrs. Laing, Robt. Mulligan, Mrs Mulligan, James Brownlee, Thos. Brownlee, Miss Margaret Brownlee, Mr. George Campbell, Miss Winnifred Anderson.

The next step in the progress of the Mission was in November, 1904. At that time the Session of St. Paul's Church applied to Presbytery to have "The Mission" set apart as a Mission Station. St. Paul's undertaking to supply services and guarantee expenses. Presbytery directed that the Session of St. Paul's should confer with St. Andrew's Church. As a result of those steps a meeting was held in the Mission on the 6th June, 1905, for the purpose of organization. Rev. Geo. Yule, who had been appointed Moderator, was in the chair.

Certificates of 11 were presented by those who were to become members of the new congregation. These were as follows:

Mr. O. H. Savigny, Mrs. O. H. Savigny, Mr. H. E. Seely, Mrs. John Merrin, Miss Jean Menzies, Miss Kate Menzies, Mrs. T. W. Gillies, Mrs. Geo. Scott, Mrs. McCannan, Mrs. Wills, Mrs. F. W. Davidson, Miss E. M. Moffatt, Mrs. John Philloch, Mrs. Margaret Stewart, Mr. Jas. Louden, Mrs. Jas. Louden, Rev. Wm. Bennet, Mrs. Bennet, Miss Amy Bennet, Mr. J. W. Bennet, Mr. E. Webb, Mrs. E. Webb, Mr. D. Hamilton, Mrs. D. Hamilton, Miss Jennie Hamilton, Miss Kate Hamilton, Mr. Thos. Anderson, Mrs. Thos. Anderson, Miss Winnie Anderson, Mr. Stewart Anderson, Mr. John W. Byers, Mrs. John W. Byers, Mrs. F. Alexander, Mrs. Wm. Clemm, Mr. Wm. Watt, Mrs. Wm. Watt, Mr. Robt. Mulligan, Mrs. Robt. Mulligan, Mr. J. F. Morrison, Mrs. J. F. Morrison, Mr. Wm. Shea, Mrs Wm. Shea.

It was decided to call the new congregation Knox Presbyterian Church. A Session of five was elected, consisting of two representatives from St. Paul's, Mr. Sheriff Hall and Mr Wm. Madill, and three from the new congregation, Mr. J. F. Morrison, Mr. J. W. Bennet, and Mr. Wm Shea.

At a meeting held in the Church on the 25th October, 1906 the recommendation from Presbytery to become independent was considered. After full discussion a unanimous resolution was carried in favor of becoming an independent congregation. The resolution read as follows: That this congregation heartily comply with the expressed wish of the Presbytery of Peterborough to become an independent congregation, so that more effective work may be accomplished in the neighborhood, provided necessary funds for the support of a minister and payment of current expenses can be obtained. It was expected at this time that assistance to the extent of $400 could be obtained from the Augmentation Committee.

At a subsequent meeting of the officers of the Church appointed to settle the question, the financial outlook appeared so bright that it was decided to recommend that the congregation become independent on January 1st, 1907.

In November, 1906, a joint meeting of the Sessions of St. Paul's and Knox Churches was held in conformity with the direction of the Presbytery, and at that meeting a unanimous resolution was adopted to the effect that the Session of St. Paul's Church acquiesce in the proposed separation of Knox Church from St. Paul's, to take effect on January 1st, 1907, and earnest wishes for the success of this child of St. Paul's were expressed.

The step was made easier by the announcement that the Trustees of the Nicholls Estate had donated $5,000 to the new congregation, the interest of which was to be used until a new church should be erected. In such event the $5,000 was to assist in the building of the Church.

After the first of January, 1907, candidates were heard, and at a meeting of the congregation held on March 3rd, 1907, Rev. Henry J. Keith, B.D., M.A., was called as the first Minister of the new Congregation. He was inducted on April 11th of that year.

The two Elders from St Paul's Church, Mr. Wm. Madill and Mr. Jas. A Hall, continued to act until the fall of 9107, when other Elders were elected from Knox Congregation. The number has since increased to nine. Mr. Hall continued to act as Superintendent of the Sabbath School until September, 1908 He won a warm place in the affections of teachers and scholars, and showed deep satisfaction at the growth of the School. It was only the desire of St. Paul's to have him in his own Sabbath School, and his humble desire to give place to others, that induced teachers and officers of the School to allow him to give up active service. He is now Hon. Superintendent of the School, an office the School desires him to retain for the rest of his life.

The Congregation has made rapid progress, and is now thoroughly organized in every department. The membership is nearly 400. The quarters provided soon became too small to accommodate School or Church, and at the congregational meeting held January, 1909, encouraged by a bequest, and promises of several large donations from generous friends of the work, it was decided to erect a new building.

SILVER MEDAL

Hon. Mr. Stratton received today the silver medal awarded by the Canadian Hackney Horse Society for the best mare in harness shown at the Montreal Horse Show this year. The handsome prize was captured by Mr. Stratton's mare "Shawhill Princess".

Winter Races Here Jan. 18th; Big Purses To Be Hung Up

At a meeting of the directors of the Peterborough Industrial Exhibition last night it was decided that if sufficient encouragement is forthcoming from the citizens to hold a winter meet at the Driving Park about the 18th of January. It is proposed to have four races, two each day, and to hang up purses to the amount of $800, if enough interest is displayed in the event by the people of Peterborough.

The meeting was to have been a joint one with the Peterborough Turf Club, but owing to a little dissention in the ranks of the latter organization, the Exhibition Directors went ahead with the business on their own account.

PLAN FOR BELMONT MINSTRELS WILL BE OPENED ON MONDAY

The rehearsals of the Belmont Club Minstrels are going with a swing that is delighting Mr. Shepard, and he looks for one of the best entertainments he has ever conducted, next week. The general public seems to be anticipating the same results, also, if the way the tickets are being snapped up is any criterion. The plan will open on Monday morning for ticket-holders, and to the public on Tuesday. There will, undoubtedly be a big rush for seats, and those who have already bought their tickets are advised to be on hand early on Monday, in order to get a chance to secure good seats. The dates of the entertainment are Thursday, Dec. 15 and Friday, Dec. 16th.

—Main Floor, Rear—

IT matters not what you give so long as the right spirit is the incentive which promotes the giving. You may give the most meagre or trifling article to some people and it will be treasured as much as if it had been a most valuable one. There is a tendency however to measure a person's feeling for you by the value of the present—which is decidedly wrong. You know best what you can afford. We know our stock and are ever ready to offer suggestions, no matter whether you have decided on gifts of the useful kind or not. Anywhere, everywhere throughout our store you will find gift suggestions. The counters, cases, shelves, tables, etc., are all aglow with hints for the Christmas shopper—gifts any person would appreciate as something useful—gifts of low price—gifts as magnificent as you wish. Always buy gifts that will be useful as well as ornamental.

TORONTO'S PROTEST AGAINST P.A.Y.E. SYSTEM HEARD BY BOARD

Session has Been Delayed But the Citizens Have Gained Two Points---Commissioner Ingram Says Board Wil Depend Upon Expert Evidence.

Toronto, Dec. 10.—The Ontario Railway and Municipal Board yesterday adjourned the city's application for a discontinuance of the P-A-Y-E system until Monday, Dec. 19.

One point gained by the city is that exit by the front doors of trailers will be permitted, but no ingress. H. S. Osler, for the company, proposed this, and a bylaw was enacted on the spot.

It was also announced that instructions had been given by the company to conductors to permit passengers to leave by the rear door of trolley cars if not interfering with persons boarding the car.

Remarks made by Chairman Leitch and A. B. Ingram indicated that they have not changed their views, but, on Mr. Ingram's suggestion, the board asked the railway to furnish statistics showing why the change was desired.

Absolute refusal met the urgings of the mayor and Corporation Counsel

H. L. DRAYTON, K.C.

Drayton that the new system be suspended pending the further investigation.

Commissioner Ingram declared that no meeting of any kind would influence his decisions, and that he would absolutely rely on expert evidence.

Mr. Osler charged that the disorders of Wednesday night were directly attributable to inflammatory speeches at the Massey Hall meeting.

Indications were not lacking that the indignation meeting in Massey Hall on Wednesday night was not a solitary in effect on the board, and court was the reception given the mayor's pleadings that the regulations be suspended. His worship's attitude was most conciliatory and he ended by throwing himself upon the generosity of the board, but only to meet with persistent rebuff.

The commissioners were candid in their statements that they attached little weight to the evidence of W. K. McNaught, M.P.P., W. D. McPherson, M.P.P., John Shaw, M.P.P., and others who spoke as citizens. "Common chatter of the streets" was Commissioner Ingram's characterization of such testimony.

Interest in the proceedings was shown in the crowded court-room during the entire session, which lasted from 2.30 p.m. until nearly 6 p.m.

Congratulations were freely extended Corporation Counsel Drayton, whose handling of the city's case was strikingly effective. Mr. Osler for the company made a strong presentment of its side and, incidentally, scored the mayor and council severely for alleged inciting of the public to lawlessness.

Cuban Congressman In Duel.

Havana, Cuba, Dec. 10.—Severo Moleon and Gen. Sanches Figuera, both members of the House of Representatives and the latter a negro, had an impromptu duel with revolvers yesterday in a crowded street in the rear of the palace.

Moleon received a bullet in the neck and died shortly afterwards in an hospital, while Figuera was wounded in the stomach, probably fatally. Two passers-by were struck with bullets.

Moleon had just left the palace, where he had been in conference with President Gomez, and, meeting Figuera, immediately opened fire. A long-standing political feud was the cause of the duel.

Met Death While at His Work.

Midland, Dec. 10.—Angus Crossan was suffocated by gas while engaged in preventing the clogging of the ore and coke in the cupola at the blast furnace, leaving a widow and three children. An Italian helper was revived in time. A coroner's jury exonerated the Canada Iron Corporation from responsibility.

Wanderer Identified.

QUEBEC HOLDS OUT.

Refuses More Federal Members to Maritime Provinces.

Ottawa, Dec. 10.—The conference of provincial Premiers, or their representatives, to consider primarily the question of representation in the Federal House, met yesterday, when it was unanimously decided to postpone further consideration.

The conference resolved itself into Quebec against the rest of the provinces, except Saskatchewan, Premier Scott being on the fence. Manitoba was expected to be against the contention of the Maritime Provinces, but supported them.

Sir James Whitney was elected chairman yesterday morning, and others present were: Sir Lomer Gouin and Hon. Messrs. Taschereau and Mackenzie, representing Quebec; Hon. J. J. Foy, Attorney-General of Ontario; Premier Hazen and Hon Mr. Fleming, representing New Brunswick; Hon. A. K. McLean, Attorney-General and acting Premier of Nova Scotia; Premier Hazzard of P.E.I.; Hon. Robert Rogers and Hon. Colin Campbell of Manitoba, and Hon. Walter Scott, representing Saskatchewan, and incidentally Alberta.

The Maritime Provinces desire to protect themselves in the matter of Federal representation, and if this is to be done action must be taken before the next census is taken and the redistribution, based thereon, adopted by Parliament. The representatives of these provinces would be pleased with an agreement which would restore to them the number of members they had at Confederation, but failing that, would be content with no further reduction.

Reached an Agreement.

Guelph, Dec. 10.—At a conference with the officials of the G.T.R., the long standing dispute between the corporation and the city over the erection of a new station and the price for the Jubilee Park site were settled. The price for the park immediately to the west of the present depot, is $9,000, the company to construct a foot passage way under the tracks at Neeve street. The city wanted $15,000

Train Sideswiped Station.

Cincinnati, O., Dec. 10.—Two persons were seriously hurt and several others slightly injured when the rear car of a fast passenger train, eastbound on the Norfolk & Western Railway left the rails and "sideswiped" the depot at Batavid, Ohio, 18 miles east of this city yesterday.

The side of the car was torn out, the building wrecked and the track torn up for many feet.

Shot Dead By Small Boy.

St. Thomas, Dec. 10.—At South Lane, Norfolk County, James Pickersgill, aged 16 years, was instantly killed by being shot through the neck by a child four years of age. He was shot at the home of William Williamson, a friend, when the latter's baby brother took a gun from the mantel and pointed it at Pickersgill.

ENTHUSIASM DECREASING

Vote Falling Off in the British Elections—Tim Healy, Nationalist Member is Defeated in North and is Mobbed.

THE RESULTS

London, Dec. 10.—Over two-thirds, or over 460 members of the new House of Commons, have been elected, and the political parties stand practically as they were at the dissolution of Parliament. The Unionists, who last week expected to gain at least twenty seats, thus far have actually gained but three. To date the changes of constituencies shows these votes cast so far:

Unionists	1,462,213
Liberal	1,330,308
Labor	248,774
Socialist	6,606
Nationalist	29,351
Independent Nationalist	13,667

The cause of woman's suffrage is making a pitiable showing in the elections. Thus far they have had but two candidates, and these have polled but 32 and 35 votes.

Outside the defeat of Timothy Healy, Nationalist, in his old constituency, Louth, which he has represented for 18 years, which is attributed to Cardinal Logue's prohibiting the priests to participate in the election, yesterday's results did not provide any surprise, unless it was in the failure of the Liberals to recapture Denbigh. The result in this Welsh borough is characteristic of the whole election. W. Ormsby-Gore won the seat last January by 8 votes and yesterday increased his majority by one vote, although the polling on both sides fell off.

Mr. Frewen has offered his seat for Cork to Mr. Healy, but Healy has declined it, as he intends to try to upset the election at Louth of Richard Hazleton, Nationalist, alleging illegal practices on the part of his opponents.

The Redmondites brought all their forces to bear in turning out the man who may be said almost, to be a more bitter opponent of the Irish leader than O'Brien himself. Healey is known as the Ishmael of Nationalist politics and has followed an independent course since the downfall of Parnell, to which he largely contributed. The successful candidate, Hazelton, who Thursday also was returned unopposed for the north division of Galway, tried to send Healey into retirement in January, but failed by 99 votes. Exciting scenes marked the polling. Throughout the day there were free fights and incidentally considerable damage to property. Healey himself required police protection.

Riotous scenes are also taking place in many of the Irish towns. As the result of a riot at Thurles last night, John Dillon was unable to leave town and had to remain hidden, as a crowd waited in the road leading to the railroad station to waylay him. The trouble began at a meeting addressed by Mr. Dillon, which the O'Brienites tried to break up. The police had to make several charges to quell the fighting.

Other interesting developments last night was the capture of the only Nationalist seat in Belfast City (west) by Joseph Devlin, and the return of Sir Edward Grey, the Minister of Foreign Affairs, for the Berwick division of Northumberland by a majority of three more than he obtained in January.

Two members of the Cabinet, Premier Asquith and Reginald McKenna, First Lord of the Admiralty, were involved in yesterday's contest, but the outcome in Mr. Asquith's constituency will not be known until to-day. Mr. McKenna secured a re-election at Monmouthshire North.

The most optimistic of the Unionists now have no hope of making serious inroads on the Government's majority. Their leaders persist, however, that the election was unnecessary, that the result practically amounts to a vote of lack of confidence, and that with the Nationalists and the Laborites exacting the fullest price for their support, it will be impossible for the Cabinet to remain in power.

The Unionists' successes in Lancashire caused great satisfaction to the Unionist weekly newspapers. They bemoan, however, lack of Unionist success in London. The Saturday Review says London City was carried by corruption. Such charges are seldom made concerning British elections.

Wales yesterday named its last candidates and England and Ireland will follow suit to-day, leaving but two Scottish districts, Wick and Orkney Shetland, to choose members. The polling to-day will be brief. Only 13 constituencies are to be called on to choose members and in only half of these will the result be known to-night.

Heavy Fines.

Toronto, Dec. 10.—Hunting on Sunday is expensive. In the Parry Sound district, R. Burt, H. Richardson, A. Cotton and R. Standfield were all fined $5 and costs for so doing. Daniel Bottrelle, who killed two deer out of season, was assessed $40 and costs. Joseph Ellis, who hunted without a license, was fined $20 and costs. E. W. Debolt was fined $170 and costs, Edward Taylor $71 and costs, and W. C. Goldsit of Orillia $140 and costs, for having mink, beaver and muskrat skins during the close season.

Long Terms For Burglary.

Montreal, Dec. 10.—William Wiseman and his son William, found guilty of burglary, were each sentenced to four years in the penitentiary, while two other members of the gang received four and three years. The quartette buried their loot in a cave.

HOUSE GOES INTO SUPPLY

Large Part of Estimates for Civil Government Voted—E. N. Lewis Would Make Killing Men for Deer Manslaughter

YESTERDAY'S SESSION

Ottawa, Dec. 10.—In the Commons yesterday a discussion was begun by Maj. S. Sharpe regarding the right of the Deputy Minister of Justice to take outside legal practice.

Hon. A. B Aylesworth said he had not made it his business to enquire, but he had noticed only two or three instances since he became Minister that Mr. Newcombe took outside cases. These were before the Supreme Court, and had not in the least interfered with his official duties.

Maj. Sharpe replied Mr. Newcombe was frequently called upon to make reports on cases in which the Government was concerned. It was obviously improper if the Deputy Minister had previously acted as counsel for a man who later on had a dispute with the Government, that he should be called upon to pass upon the claim for the Government.

Mr. Aylesworth was certain, however, that his deputy had so delicate a sense of honor that if there was the remotest chance of a clash with public interests, the private brief would go.

Whereupon Major Sharpe pointed out that Mr. Newcombe last summer had acted for the Bank of Montreal before the Privy Council. The Bank of Montreal had large transactions with the Government, and might easily have large disputes.

Mr. Aylesworth said this was a dispute between the Bank of Montreal and the liquidators of the Ontario Bank. The Government was not concerned.

Hon. Mr. Foster argued that no man could serve two masters. If one deputy could do this, all the deputies would have the same right.

In this connection Sir Frederick Borden was asked if the Deputy Minister of Militia would have the right to accept fees from the Ross rifle people.

"Certainly not," was the reply.

E. N. Lewis objected to the regulations of the Militia Department that no one can enter the Department unless provided with a pass. It was an effort to copy the militarism of older countries which would not be approved of here. Sir Frederick Borden defended the regulation as designed to promote the efficiency of the staff. A great deal of time was wasted by canvassers and loafers. There would be no desire to inconvenience any one who had legitimate business.

Col. Hughes, however, seemed to think that it was undignified for a member of Parliament to have to produce a pass, and Hon. H. R. Emerson objected to one or two of the Departments being hedged around with a sort of divinity which made them not approachable. Some other method should be devised.

After spending two hours discussing comparatively unimportant matters, the House of Commons went into committee of supply, for the first time this session, and voted a large portion of the estimates for civil government before adjournment.

E. N. Lewis (West Huron) introduced a bill providing that a man, while hunting, who shoots another in mistake for a deer or the like, is guilty of manslaughter. Another seeks to have all vessels on the great lakes over a certain tonnage equipped with wireless telegraphy.

Haughton Lennox (South Simcoe) called attention to the fact that Hon. Wm. Pugsley had stated that he had not attended a meeting of the public accounts committee in 1908, when a row had occurred over sub-target gun accounts. He read from reports to show that the Minister had been there and had obstructed proceedings. Mr. Pugsley replied that when he made the statement, he believed it to be true, because he never attended the committee except when matters affecting his own Department were being discussed. In this case the committee had met to consider dredging affairs, and he had forgotten the circumstances. He denied obstruction.

Selling Liquor Illegally.

Brampton, Dec. 10.—At Streetsville Magistrate Taylor found James Farrell guilty of having liquor on his premises and of selling it, and sentenced him to six months in the county jail. He has been found guilty of several infractions before.

At Prescott—J. Knight, proprietor of St. Lawrence Hall, was fined $100 and costs for selling without a license.

At Midland—Inspector Ayearst and Inspector Fisher have been making enquiries and several charges of illegal liquor selling will likely be laid.

German Army to Be Enlarged.

Berlin, Dec. 10.—In the Reichstag yesterday Gen. Von Heeringen, Prussian Minister of War, described the Government's plan of enlarging the army.

Some of the Prussian and Bavarian divisions, he said, did not have full quotas of artillery and these gaps must be filled. "In view of the thorough re-organization and increase in the artillery of our western neighbor."

The Minister added: "Modern coast defences require specially trained artillerymen. Heavy guns also must be added to the field artillery. Foot artillery must be increased by five battalions.

"The organization of an automobile battalion is required. The modern army cannot be led and supported without automobiles. The progress of aerial navigation demands the organization of three aeronautical battalions of two companies each."

Five Years For Juror.

New York, Dec. 10.—Not less than five years, not more than eight years and six months, in Sing Sing State Prison was the sentence yesterday imposed by Justice Blanchard upon George W. Yeandle, the juror in the Rosenheimer case, who solicited a $500 bribe from James W. Osborne to queer the verdict.

Sold Burglars.

St. Thomas, Dec. 10.—Safeblowers got $150 from the safe of McPherson & Co., general merchants, at West Lorne Thursday night. The rear door was forced open and the robbers piled heaps of clothing and bolts of cloth around and on top of the safe "deaden the sound of the explosion."

Carnegie Well Pleased.

Montreal, Dec. 10.—William Dow-dale, who has just returned from New York, stated yesterday that he had an interview with Andrew Carnegie, who is very much pleased at the turn of affairs in connection with the sum which he devoted to aiding deserving Scotch students. Mr. Carnegie stipulated in the gift that if any of the young men succeeded in life and felt like returning the amount received, they were at liberty to do so. In fact, his agent in Scotland informs him that no less a sum than $60,000 have been returned so far by those who have been able to do so.

Mr. Carnegie is so well pleased with the thrift of these young men that he is preparing a letter to each one, expressing his great appreciation of their independence of character.

Extradition Granted.

Washington, Dec. 10.—United States Secretary of State Knox yesterday granted the request of Italy for the surrender of Porter Charlton, charged with the murder of his wife at Lake Como, Italy. The Secretary holds that the fact that Italy refused to surrender her citizens to the United States for trial does not relieve this country from the obligation of the extradition treaty to surrender to Italy fugitives from justice from that country.

The question of the insanity of Charlton, it is suggested, is one for the courts, and not for the department to determine.

North Bay's Hospital.

North Bay, Dec. 10.—The formal opening of the enlarged Victorian Order Hospital here yesterday was marked by the presence of Hon. Frank Cochrane, Minister of Lands and Mines; Hon. W. J. Hanna, Provincial Secretary, and J. L. Englehart, chairman of the Government Railway Commission; George Graham, M. P. for Nipissing, and H. Mortel, M.P.P., all of whom delivered addresses. The improvements cost $15,000.

Dear Bill, I takes me pen in hand
To drop a line to you.
Hopin' dis finds you healthy and
Enjoyin' freedom too.

Would say to you I ain't no more
Out on de same old lay.
I cracked me last crib week before
Last, Independence day.

I now make speeches every night
Fer them Salvation folks,
A-pleadin', tearful, for the right
An' warnin' these young blokes

Never to tread the downward road
That these here feet has walked,
But cast aside their sinful load
An' all that line o' talk.

"Reformed?" I thinks I hears you say.
Well, no—me mind ain't clouded—
I'm scarin' these here guys away.
Our graft's a-gittin' crowded.

Nuts.

An old guy asked a shy new guy—
'Twas on the plains, this interview—
"Oh, have you heard the news today?"
The new guy trembled. "Where are they?
Noise frightens me!" and fast he fled.
The old guy heavily laughed and said:
"Well, if that isn't too absurd!
I thought the meaning of that word
Even a new guy knew."

"The teacher of one of the classes in a school in the suburbs of Cleveland had been training her pupils in anticipation of a visit from the school commissioner," said George S. Wells. "At last he came, and the classes were called out to show their attainments.

"The arithmetic class was the first called, and in order to make a good impression the teacher put the first question to Johnny Smith, the star pupil.

"'Johnny, if coal is selling at $5 a ton and you pay the coal dealer $25, how many tons of coal will he bring you?'

"'Three,' was the prompt reply from Johnny.

"The teacher, much embarrassed, said, 'Why, Johnny, that isn't right.'

"'Oh, I know it ain't, but they do it anyhow.'"—Washington Post.

When money knocks, by sun or plan,

"I suppose you talk dialect to amuse the summer boarders?"

"I used to," answered Farmer Haw, "but not now. I call the farmhouse a bungalow in this year's prospectus, and everything will be on a high brow plane."—Philadelphia Bulletin.

"'Twas ever thus since childhood's hour,"
The poet sang so sweet.
Whenever I plant a garden flower
It proves to be a beet.
Tomato plants with care brought out
Far from the climate rude
When in the sunshine set about
Are only outworm food.

The sweet corn and the cabbage sprout,
Now cherished with such glee,
Will furnish dainty food no doubt,
But not for you and me.
That market basket once despised
We'll carry as of yore.
The place where hopes are realized
Is in the grocery store.

Locusts in Algeria.

Locusts in Algeria have a dangerous enemy in a fly which follows them and lays its eggs where they lay theirs. A larva issues from the egg of the fly and devours the locust eggs. When it has become a perfect insect it follows the flight of the locusts, repeating the same performance.

SPORTING NEWS

Fred Whitcroft announces his retirement from hockey game-16 deaths in prize ring in year-Sporting news

SIXTEEN DEATHS IN THE PRIZE RING IS THE RECORD SO FAR THIS YEAR

AN APPALLING LIST

In all the history of the prize ring, from Tom Cribb's time down to the present, there has never been recorded in a single year anything approaching the number of deaths directly due to boxing contests that have occurred thus far this season.

The death at Presque Isle, Me., last week, of Billy Dunning, one of the few boxers who could point to a draw with Jack Johnson, the world's heavyweight champion, made the sixteenth fatality of the prize in 1910, while there are, at least, two other boxers now lying at death's point in hospitals, one being the veteran Andy Daly, fomaus ten years ago.

These fatalities of the prize ring have extended from the eastern coast of Maine to the Pacific Ocean and as far South as Bluefields, Nicaragua, where a corporal in Uncle Sam's service met his death in a friendly contest with the gloves. In the past, two or three deaths in a season from boxing have been sufficient to attract general attention, while many years not a single prize ring fatality has been reported. The total of sixteen to date in 1910 is unprecedented.

MANY WERE EXPERIENCED BOXERS

In the majority of instances the victims have been experienced boxers whose injuries were received in scheduled bouts before recognized "fight clubs." One of the deaths occurs din a ring contest in which Owen Moran, the English lightweight who knocked out Battling Nelson in San Francisco a few days ago, was the principal. Tommy McCarthy, a San Francisco boy, was Moran's opponent. In the sixteenth round of their battle in Dreamland Rink, in San Francisco, April 28, McCarthy was knocked down by a heavy swing to the jaw, dying at St. Mary's Hospital the next day without regaining consciousness.

Two of the deaths were the result of bouts in Philadelphia rings. In one Frank Cole, a negro, who had attained quite a reputation as a lightweight, was the victim. He was sparring at Jack O'Brien's club against Stanley Rodgers, when he received a solar plexus blow in the third round, sending him to the mat with terrific force. The crowd began cheering the apparent knockout but when the club's doctor failed to restore Cole to consciousness the spectators were dismissed, and subsequently Cole died in a Quaker town hospital.

The other Philadelphia death was that of Frederick Castor, aged twenty, in the sixth and last round of a bout at the Frankford Athletic Club in that city against "Spike" Sullivan. Castor had been having all the better of the argument and was striking for a "K. O." punch in the final round, when he suddenly fell unconscious, and, although rushed to a hospital, never regained consciousness.

DEATH OF HUGH GRANT

One death occurred in Mineola, L.I., last July, when Hugh Grant, of Tuckahoe, a twenty-year-old bell boy in the Garden City Hotel, engaged in a bout at 116 pounds against Tommy Welch, another pugilist of Grant's own weight. He went to his corner when the bell rang at the end of the sixth round apparently all right, but a moment later fell unconscious and a half hour later was dead. A few weeks ago in Buffalo Lyner, died as the result of a bout before the Marquette Club of that city. Hyland was knocked down in the seventh round and hemorrhage of the brain resulted. The Buffalo police officials immediately placed a ban on all further boxing in the Bison city.

One of the saddest of all the accidents was that of Max Landy, a Boston boy, whose ring engagements were the only means of support of a widowed mother. Landy had a bout in Brockton, Mass., early in the year, and after the fight, in which there was no knockout, Landy was one of the party chartering a special electric to take them back to Boston. Landy chaffed and fooled on the homeward trip, having apparently experienced no ill effects from the battle. The next morning his mother found him dead in bed. Overexertion the night before was attributed as the cause of his death.

In the case of Billy Dunning, the latest victim, he was in the best of health before the bout, and less than two weeks ago, while Jack Johnson was doing a week of one-night stands in Maine towns, had entertained the heavyweight champion, the two living over their battle of September, 1906, in the little town of Millinocket, when Johnson gladly accepted the $75 offered him to appear against Dunning in the main bout of a Labor Day card.

COMPLETE LIST TO DATE

Max Landy, twenty-two, of Boston; knocked out in bout at Brockton, Mass., and the following morning was found dead in bed; died Jan. 21.

John V. Heflin, twenty-three, private Tenth Company, Coast Artillery; head injured by straight-arm blow; died March 19 at Presidio Hospital, San Francisco.

Frank Cole, twenty-four, of Philadelphia; skull fractured in falling to floor while boxing before Jack O'Brien's club in Philadelphia; died April 19 in Philadelphia hospital.

Tommy McCarthy, twenty, of San Francisco; skull fractured at base of brain from fall in bout with Owen Moran; died April 30 at St. Mary's Hospital, San Francisco.

Gilbert Terhun, seventeen, of Hackensack, N.J.; injured in bout with Frank Keiser; died April 30.

A. D. Russell of Fresno Cal.; fell unconscious in bout with William J. King; died May 17.

Frederick Caster, twenty, of Philadelphia; falls unconscious while sparring at Frankford A. C. in Philadelphia; died at Philadelphia Hospital August 21.

W. H. Brinkmeyer, thirty-one, corporal in U. S. Army; died at Bluefields, Nicaragua, from injuries received in bout; died September 1.

"Kid" Fisher, thirty-two, of Lahoma, Okla.; died in eleventh round of bout at Mono, Okla.; died October 15.

TWO PETERBORO BOYS WHO ARE STAR RUGBY PLAYERS

BEN SIMPSON

ROSS CRAIG

Here is Ben Simpson, the Peterborough boy playing with the Hamilton Tigers, and still, although a veteran, one of the cleverest halfbacks in Canada. The following tribute from the Toronto Telegram, will give a great deal of pleasure to Mr. Simpson's friends in Peterborough:

On Saturday week at Hamilton there was one man in the last great football contest of the year who was playing in his last game, and a great game he played. That player, Ben Simpson, of Hamilton Tigers, has done more for football in the Ambitious City and in this country than probably any other gridiron artist.

Ben has been and is, judging from his performance last week, one of the greatest players the game has produced. He has been a true lover of the sport and has given his best to it. He has been a credit to the gridiron, his play has been clean and his influence for the highest sporting ideals. These principles and ideals he has radiated so that Hamilton has become a true amateur sporting centre and has never been mixed in questionable transactions.

There is no doubt about the good work Mr. Simpson has done for the sport. Isn't it about up to those connected with the game on his retirement to do him honour in some way, and show him that his work has been appreciated. It has been suggested that Toronto might show her appreciation of the great work done by him by giving him a great banquet. At least he should be given a place of high honour in the reception tendered the Varsity men, and some tangible token of the high esteem which his good works have earned for him in this amateur sporting centre.

Hamilton has been the great producer of Rugby players, mainly because Ben Simpson mixed Rugby with mathematics. He has rounded the love of the game and taught the best sporting principle by his own good example.

Canada is in need of more just such men as Simpson. In order to impress these ideals on the youth of the land, recognition must be given to the men who have exemplified them. Ben Simpson has certainly done this in the highest degree.

Ross Craig is a son of Mr. J. T. Craig, East City, and was captain of the Dundas Senior O.R.F.U. team this year. He is recognized as one of the best inside wings and one of the finest line plungers in the game at the present time.

WELLS THE ENGLISH FIGHTER IS DECIDEDLY CLEVER

Great Boxer Has Won Place as England's Best Heavyweight Boxer—The White Man's Hope.

SPLENDID PHYSIQUE

LONDON, DEC. 9.—Take it from one who has seen him fight, when the time comes—if it ever does—for Bombardier Billy Wells, "England's best," to meet Jack Johnson for the championship of the world, that large and capable colored pusson will have to go some to hold the title.

Wells licked the whole bloomin' British army, one by one, in India, before he bought himself out of uniform and came to England a few months ago, to be a pro.

He wen tto Wonderland, in Whitechapel and begged fer a chance in a preliminary. The audience laughed at the tall, thin boy with curly hair and the face of a scholar, whose name they had never heard. He was matched with Corporal Brown, a burly, heavy, rough-and-tumble fighter, wit hmore ring experience than boxing science.

Brown went to sleep in the first round.

Eugene Corri, the referee of the National Sporting Club, heard of Wells, who boxed several times for him in private. Then Corri said:

"We have found at last in England a heavyweight worthy of the name. Wells is England's best."

Since then Wells has fought three times in the "elimination series" promoted by Hugh McIntosh and Jimmy Britt, to find "the best white man." His opponents were Sergt. Sunshine (whom Sam McVea made short work of a little later), Private Voyles, champion of the army, and last, Seaman Parsons, champion of the navy and conqueror of Voyles.

I saw those three battles, and Wells won them all. He has never been beaten.

He knocked out Sunshine in the sixth round.

Upon both occasions he was suffering from nervousness and stage-fright. It was the general opinion that Parsons, the strongest man that could be brought against him, would give Wells a tougher contest than did either Sunshine or Voyles, and probably defeat him. But the Lombardier did not suffer from stage-fright the third time.

And Parsons lasted 2 minutes 14 seconds.

Wells has won all his fights by knockouts.

He is 22 years old.

He is 6 feet 3 inches tall.

He weighs 190 pounds, but can carry 220 without being fat.

His reach is 79 inches.

He spars as daintily as a bantam, but hits the way a mule kicks.

His next opponent will be Bill Lang, champion of Australia. If he defeats Lang he will go after Tommy Burns. If Burns is disposed of, he will challenge Jack Johnson.

Fred Whitcroft Says He Has Finished With Hockey

Veteran Has Played With Peterborough, Midland, Kenora, Edmonton and Renfrew.

GOING INTO BUSINESS

The Edmonton Capital says: Another famous hockey player has put away his skates for good and claims that he is finished with the game for ever.

Yesterday afternoon, Fred Whitcroft signed a contract with Fred C. Lewes, of Calgary, Edmonton and Lethbridge not to play hockey, but to sell real estate. Where Fred's conversation used to be sprinkled with expressions like "Bore in on that goal," "Centre the puck," and "Shoot them high and fast," henceforth he will talk about the "N.W. corner of 32," "High and dry lots," and "The balance in 5 yearly payments at 6 per cent."

Fred Whitcroft has been playing hocke yever since he could toddle, and they tell in Peterborough how he used to play "hookey" at the early age of three, in order that he could play shinny on a little pond.

His name is always mentioned in the same breath as Edmonton's hockey prowess. It was under his management that a professional team was gathered together which made the whole of Canada sit up and which did more for Edmonton in an advertising sense, than 20 tons of printed matter.

Last year he went East as rover on the Edmonton Stanley Cup challengers, and while the team was not successful in winning the cup, Whit's work was commented upon as being the best on either team. He was thought to be all in when the trip commenced, but showed the Eastern critics that he could "come-back."

A sketch of his career makes interesting reading and the writer, who has known Fred since he started in with the Peterborough colts as a simon-pure amateur in 1901, will endeavour to fill it in from memory.

1901—Peterborough Colts, Junior Champions of the O.H.A. 1902—Peterborough Intermediates. Won their district in O.H.A. and also won the championship.

1903—With Peterborough Intermediates. Peterborough was going nicely but Belleville lodged an injunction and the championship was not decided.

1904—Was with Midland in the Intermediate O.H.A. Tied Victoria Harbour, but lost out in the play-off.

1905-6—Peterborough Intermediate champions of the O.H.A. At the end of this season, Tom Hooper of the Kenora team, holders of the Stanley Cup, was injured and Whitcroft was engaged to fill his position. Fred led the Kenora team for two goals scored in the series with Montreal Wanderers.

1907-8—Came to Edmonton to take charge of the hockey team of this city. Started the Stanley Cup idea and brought a few professionals to the city. Edmonton won the Inter-Provincial Championship this year.

1908-9—Managed the Edmonton hockey team which played Montreal Wanderers for the Stanley Cup. The challengers lost the first game by 7-4 and won the second, 6-5. The Eskimos had a very successful season, only losing one game.

1909-10—Played rover on the Edmonton hockey team, which was defeated in two straight games for the Stanley Cup, by the holders, Ottawa. Whit scored the majority of the Edmonton goals.

Fred finised the season with the famous Renfrew Millionaires. He played four games with the Creamery City team and was badly injured in Cobalt, being confined to the hospital long after the hockey season was over.

Whit., who also plays baseball and lacrosse, and is a fair hand at bowling and billiards, will probably confine himself to the two latter pastimes in the future.

ONLY ONE CHANGE IN BIG LEAGUE MANAGERS

As matters now stand at present there will be only one new major league manager in the field when the curtain rises in April next for the season of 1911. The only certain switch will be made in the make-up of the St. Louis Americans, from whose management "Peach Pie Jack" O'Connor was deposed last fall at the instance, it is said, of an official higher up in the councils of the American League than President Bob Hedges of the Browns.

O'Connor signed a two years' contract with St. Louis last spring. His management was not a glittering success, but it was on the cards for O'Connor to manage the team next year until the last day of the season rolled around. Then Napoleon Lajoie punched out eight safe hits in eight times at bat. This brought about criticism on all sides in the American League. Third baseman Corridon, who was "afraid that one of Larry's hits might break his leg," was cleared and so was Manager O'Connor. Johnson gave out a statement that O'Connor was in no way to blame for Larry's eight hits. At the same time President Hedges announced that O'Conner had been unconditionally released.

President Hedges has announced that he will name the new manager of the Browns before the American League meets here next week. It is understood that Willie Keeler and Rolby Wallace are the first choices with Hedges. It is doubtful if Keeler cares to don the managerial toga with all the troubles that go with it, but his friends are urging him to negotiate with Hedges.

Who Will Peterborough Teams Be Grouped With?

The question of what teams the Peterborough Intermediate and Junior O. H. A. teams will be grouped with is one that is causing the fans considerable speculation just now, and will continue to do so until after the O. H. A. has done the grouping at its meeting next Wednesday night.

It looks as if the Intermediates will be placed in a group with Cobourg, Belleville and Trenton, which seems to be the only possible arrangement, unless the Kingston-Frontenacs enter an intermediate team, in which case Belleville may be grouped, with Kingston to play home-and-home games, as one half of the section and Peterborough, Trenton and Cobourg will form the other half the winners to play off for group honors. A four-club group would suit Peterborough nicely although the railway connections with the three teams mentioned are not the most convenient. However, it is better than a double schedule with Lindsay such as in force last year as it will provide the fans with more home games.

It is hard to say just now how the juniors will be grouped. Lindsay will have a junior O. H. A. team, and the local Colts may find themselves up against the Bengay combination.

Baked The Ball And The Hits Came Thick

"There never was a quainter, odder character in baseball," says Fred Pfeffer, "than old John Brown, whom the veterans of the game will remember as treasurer of the Chicago ball club for some thirty years. During all those seasons it was Mr. Brown's task to count the money and to pull the gong. From April to October he served in those capacities, and as soon as the season ended he fled to some hot climate—India, China, or South Africa. He couldn't be induced to winter in a chilly clime.

"Mr. Brown in early life was an engineer on a southern railroad. He was a left-handed man, and the throttles in his cab were constructed to match. One day his engine was taken off for repairs, and John was put temporarily on an engine with right-handed throttles. John took his train into the depot at Atalanta through the door and came out through the wall. Then he resigned and became a baseball man.

"Only one thing seemed ever to worry the disposition of John Brown; the chance that somebody might steal his accumulated coin. He used to come out among the players, give us all cigars, which would explode with a crash if you dropped them on a hard pavement, and then muse about his currency. 'Money ain't safe, nowhere,' John would say. 'Keep it in the bank—cashier lights out with it. Keep it at home—burglars get it from you or house burns up. Invest it in stocks and some son-of-a-gun waters the stock. Put it in cattle and they die. By gum, there ain't but one place where money's safe, and that's in a safety vault. And, by gum t'ain't safe there no more. Along comes an anarchist with one of these here bombs, puts it into the vault building, and where's my money?'

"None of us ever suspected old John Brown of having a sense of humor, but he pulled a trick, late in his career, that had us going some. To this day I don't know whether John really played a joke, or was interested in a scientific experiment. As he afterwards confessed, without a smile or snicker, he took a dozen league balls artistically soaked them out of the boxes, and baked them for three days in the oven. Then he replaced them in the boxes, and waited his chance. On the afternoon that he selected for the trick, he tossed out one of the baked balls to start the game with, and, after that, whenever there was need of a new ball, he sent in another of the same batch.

"All afternoon the teams batted like madmen. The pitchers were all at sea, and couldn't imagine what on earth was going wrong. Smash, smash, smash, up to the wall or over the fence—everybody killing the leather. The score was something like 21 to 19—one of the hardest hitting games in the past twenty years. We won by belting the life out of a specially baked leather in the last inning.

"Perhaps that game might have been protested; or a scandal raised, but nobody knew, and old John never told till two years later, and by that time it was too late for a protest to be made. And he never cracked a smile while he explained the trick—just told us in his dry old way, while we rolled off the bench with glee.

"A great card was old John, and the veteran players will never forget him."

ATHLETICS' STRING OF SOUTHPAWS

More good left-handers will be seen together on the Philadelphia Athletics this season than have ever been known in one team in the history of the game. They are Eddie Plank, Harry Krause, Clarence Russell and Frank Atkins. When it is considered that two classy Southpaws on a club is the exception, and that some clubs have not even one, it will be seen how well the Athletics will be fixed for port side flingers.

Manager Connie Mack has always had a great partiality for left-handers. He had one on his original staff when he came to Philadelphia, an din his ten years as manager of the Athletics he has never lacked at least one southpaw. Eddie Plank came to the team in 1901 fresh from Gettysburg College and has given better and longer service to his club than any southpaw in the history of the game. Plank picked up many points from the veteran, Matty Kilroy, who was in his time along with "Toad" Ramsey, the champion left-hander.

SOME HOCKEY HAPPENINGS

Looks like nothing doing in the City League. At least the Secretary has heard nothing from any of teams as to their intention of entering. If there is to be a junior league it is up to somebody to get busy and organize as the season is ready to open.

As already announced in the Examiner negotiations are under way for a game with St. Michael's of Toronto here on New Year's night.

LINDSAY, DEC. 9.—At the close of the town hockey league meeting last evening matters pertaining to Lindsay Junior O. H. A. team came up for consideration.

It was felt that there was plenty of material for a fast septette, that under capable management would bring distinction to the town.

It was decided to retain the name "Midgets" and stick to their club colours of blue and white. Arrangements were made to forward the entry fee to the O. H. A. as well as securing the rink.

Considerable enthusiasm was manifested over the prospects for hockey this winter. There is no lack of material for the junior team, and all that is necessary in order to make the season a successful one is the hearty co-operation and support of the citizens. The juniors will go on the ice to uphold the reputation of the town and this ought to appeal to all classes.

The following is a list of players from which a junior team might be selected: M. Knowlson, W. Knowlson, McMullen, Dennison, Wilson, Dougan, McMahon, Henley, Scott, Cote, Heenan, Stewart, Callaghan, Begg, Greer and Newton.

Judging by the bunch of juniors who turned out at last night's meeting called by the management to talk over the prospects, the outlook for a successful year for the youngsters seems to be of the brightest. Among those who turned up at the meeting were Arthur Reynolds who played point for the Trenton Junior O. H. A. team last season, Rolly Weir, the fast little Keene forward who gave such a good account of himself in the City League last winter, Frank Heffernan, of the T.A.S., who made a name for himself with the Peterborough Intermediates last winter, Bill Pratt, Art Hall, Jack Coughlin of the T.A.S., Jimmy McMartin, Dan Anderson, Grant Latimer, Allan Wade and other likely men. The first practice of the season is called for Monday night between 7 and 8 o'clock when the juniors and intermediates will work out.

Lindsay Post: The Stratford Herald in a recent issue stated that they were glad to see Lindsay enter a team in the junior O.H.A. as there was no town in Canada that they would sooner beat than Lindsay. Stratford has evidently not forgotten the trimming that the Lindsay Midgets gave them two years ago on their own ice for the intermediate championship.

Kingston Standard: A number of junior Frontenacs have been getting into shape on Anglin's Bay, and although nothing has been arranged yet "Father" Jim Sutherland will have the boys out in the covered rink as soon as the ice is in any shape for practice. Waught, the young player from Whitby, who is attending Queen's was out with Jim's proteges on Anglin's Bay and showed himself to be a speedy skater, kure shot and splendid stick handler.

Goderich, Dec. 9 — The Goderich Hockey Club has organized for the coming season, with Capt. Ed. Robinson as manager. A team will be entered in the intermediate series of the O. H. A. With the exception of Belcher the well known cover point, all of last year's team are available.

Brantford Expositor: Although Berlin, Waterloo and Galt have got together in a three-cornered "pro" hockey league, there has not been much disposition shown in Brantford to join the league, and this city will no doubt be absent this year. There has been talk of Mr. Pietro Cancella securing the franchise, but the managerial troubles of last year's ball team have not been forgotten by Mr. Cancella and it likely he would not tackle the proposition single-handed. At the same time, Cancella has been offered the franchise, his services last year as trainer being recognized to this extent. However, with no manager, no players, and no money in sight, how is Brantford going into a trolley cat "pro" league, where there never was any money and never will be?

SOLAR PHYSICS

Rev. Dr. Marsh, Secretary of the local centre of the Royal Astronomical Society, lectured before the Hamilton Centre of the Royal Astronomical Society last night, taking as his subject "Solar Physics," and using the sun as a typical star. Mr. Jenkins, the president of the Hamilton Centre, occupied the chair, and Rev. Dr. Marsh was given a warm welcome by his former associates in Hamilton, a very large audience attending the lecture, which was illuminated with lantern slides.

SHOP EARLY.

The Bitterest Tears Shed Are For Deeds Left Undone.

Who was it you forgot in your hurried shopping the last week before Christmas last year?

How many times did you resolve between Christmas and the New Year that in 1910 you would do your shopping early?

Why not begin now? Let the little household duties go until afternoon, shop in the mornings, while both you and the sales people are bright and fresh.

—The Christmas Shopper.

Ben Franklin Would Shop Morning.

It was he who said, "The early morning hath gold in its mouth."

He would be quick to realize the advantages of doing one's Christmas shopping early and doing most of it mornings.

Every day brings Christmas nearer. Every day, the pretty things in the shops are being picked up by Mrs. Early Buyer and her sister Miss Late A. Crowd. Why don't you join these?

THE COLDEST OF THE YEAR

To-day saw the thermometer reach the lowest level it has managed to attain this winter, the mercury getting down to the 14 below zero mark. It remained steadily 12 below throughout the night, there being very little variation throughout the dark hours, according to Mr. Walter Peters, the government weather observer. This morning it took another drop. The probabilities indicate a big snow storm, followed by still colder weather to-morrow. The lowest mark previous to last night was 11 below zero.

The Members of Sherwood Forest Comp, No. 50, are urgently requested to attend the regular meeting on Monday evening, December 11th, Business of importance and Election of Officers. 2d-136-3w58

FEW DEMANDS SO FAR FOR CHARITY THIS WINTER

"The number of demands upon the City Charity Board is not excessive this winter, so far," said Relief Officer Miller to an Examiner reporter this morning. In comparison with some past winters the number of applicants for assistance is very small. Of course there are some who regularly receive aid from the Charity Board, but these are old people. During this week—the coldest this winter—and it is in the cold weather that the applications are most numerous, Mr. Miller had only two requests. One was a very deserving case in the East Ward, where a wife and six children were depending on a husband and father, who was unable to secure work. They were without sufficient fuel to keep them warm and food, too, was a scarce article.

CHARLOTTE STREET CAMPAIGN FOR FUNDS

The campaign to raise funds for the new Charlotte Street Methodist Church was very successful. Up to 8 o'clock last evening the total amount subscribed was $37,911.00, and additional funds were promised by parties who did not care to sign the subscription list. It is therefore assured that the total amount required for building the new church, $40,000, will be on hand before operations are commenced.

The new church will seat 1,200 people, the present building seating only about 500.

The success of the campaign is largely due to the splendid organizing ability and leadership of the pastor, the Rev. C. W. Henderson.

The congregation responded heartily to the call made upon them and a very pleasing feature of the canvass has been the voluntary subscriptions from members of other churches and other denominations.

During the evening a couple of duets, which were greatly enjoyed were rendered by Miss Pringle and Mr. R. F. Downey.

A hearty vote of thanks was tendered the Ladies' Aid Society for their services during the campaign, and their contribution of $2,000 towards the building fund, and also to the Rev. Mr. Henderson.

The meeting closed with the singing of the doxology.

DEMONSTRATIONS ON THE TELEGRAPHONE

Mr. C. K. Fankhauser, of New York, is in the city giving demonstrations on the telegraphone. Mr. Fankhauser is the co-inventor of the telegraphone and the organizer of the Canadian Company. This wonderful device has only been perfected three months and only after a very heavy expenditure.

The Telegraphone is a little instrument which easily reports and most perfectly reproduces the human voice from the faintest whisper of mere aspiration to the highest notes, and with equal faithfulness the finest strains of the violin or the full tones of an entire orchestra. And the record is not made in a mechanical way on a wax cylinder of wax disc, but magnetically on a fine steel wire or thin steel disc.

The reproduction of the record is not an imperfect imitation of the voice or musical notes but a perfect reproduction of it—no tone, no inflection, no modulation is lost or distorted. And the record can be made and reproduced with the machine near the operator or far away. The machine may be in one Province and the operator in another and still make the record easily and perfectly—using the ordinary telephone line to talk over.

Two one may carry on a telephone conversation with some one a thousand miles away and record not only what you yourself say, but what the other party says and do it easily and perfectly. This record is so clear and natural that on hearing it again from the machine, one easily recognizes the voices, for the reproduction is perfect.

This record may be preserved indefinitely or repeated any number of times and does not lose its clearness or quality by time or repetition. Or it may be erased from the wire or disc as easily as chalk marks from the black board. In fact, it automatically disappears if one uses the same wire or disc again—which one naturally does from day to day if the record is not of sufficient importance to keep for a longer period of time and this is generally unnecessary after the stenographer has same transcribed.

Imperial Quartette At Crystal Theatre

The Imperial Male Quartette, that splendid organization which was heard with such delight at the Conservatory of Music on Friday night will be heard at the Crystal Theatre on Sunday evening at the church services are over. Those who have not heard this quartette will do well to take advantage of the opportunity which is thus presented by the Y.M.C.A. The quartette will sing two selections, "Remember Now Thy Creator" and "Mother is Praying For You." There will of course, be a big crowd, so come early and get a good seat. The singing will be more than usually good, for the large crowd makes good singing possible. You will enjoy it if you come. This meeting is for men, but the ladies may come if they bring a man with them.

Men are cordially invited to join the Sunday morning Bible Study Club. The lesson is studied by the whole class, led by the general secretary.

The Mechanical Drawing Class will meet to-night at 8 o'clock. The attendance at this class is splendid.

E. N. McWILLIAMS HIGH CLASS FURRIER 374 GEORGE STREET

THE PRESUMPTION OF SOME PEOPLE

BY DECHNAND

Mayor Geary of Toronto, has written a letter to the Mayor of Peterborough, asking that this City send representatives on a deputation that will shortly visit Ottawa, with a view to urging upon the Dominion Government the advisability of enlarging the present Welland Canal, or building a larger canal across the Niagara Peninsula.

For downright impudence this takes the cake. The communication was read at a meeting of the City Council the other evening and it was referred to a committee consisting of the Mayor and Alderman Gillespie to deal with it. What might have been done was to write Mayor Geary and the City Council of Toronto forth with, that they may fight their own battles just as Peterborough has had to do.

For over seventy years the people of this district have been urging on successive Governments the advisability of building the Trent Canal. They have spent a good deal of money in literature and in sending deputations to Ottawa, with a view to hurrying the project along. What assistance did the people of this district ever get from Toronto in the matter? None whatever. The only move that Toronto ever made in this connection was through their press, which continually knocked the undertaking and endeavoured to hold it up to ridicule. Now the Mayor of that city has the presumption to ask that Peterborough send representatives on a deputation to urge the building of a second Welland Canal. What Peterborough should do is organize a deputation to impress upon the Government the advisability of not doing anything towards building a second Welland Canal until the Trent Canal is completed. If Mayor Morrow and Alderman Gillespie make any move in any other direction, there will be wigs on the green.

However, it must be admitted that the early completion of the Trent Canal is in sight and the present Government is certainly doing splendidly by this district in this respect. A handsome sum is being asked for by the Minister of Railways and Canals this Session with a view to rushing the work to completion. It will be only a few years therefore, until the entire fleet that has been bottled up on these waters, can steam out of the Trent Canal at Trenton, steal up to Toronto Bay and give them a salute of defiance. That the Trent Canal is nearing completion is not due to any exertion on the part of the City of Toronto, nor in fact, to any Dominion Governments, its representatives have supported.

With the arrival of the extreme cold weather, the hockey clubs of the Province are organizing and soon the various rinks will re-echo with the clash of sticks and the enthusiastic shouts of the supporters of the different teams. Hockey, in this district, may be said to be in a fairly prosperous state but it is doubtful if the small villages of this district are enjoying the same degree of enthusiasm as existed six or eight years ago.

For many years the old Trent Valley Hockey League performed a most useful service in the hockey sphere of this district, from which the organization appropriately obtained its name. Fenelon Falls, Bobcaygeon, Lakefield, K. ne. Millbrook, Norwood, Marmora and other villages in this district were afforded a good measure of enjoyment. Keen and sportsmanlike competition was the order of the day and some of the best players that were in action in the O. H. A. and professional leagues, looked back with pleasure to the fact that they learned the game in the Trent Valley League.

What citizens of the above mentioned villages is there, who cannot find a good half hour's pleasure, even yet, in talking over the many exciting games in the Trent Valley League. Any citizen of Norwood will tell you in perhaps pathetic tones how the team from that village never landed the championship, but were the runners up for five or six years. Any citizen of Fenelon Falls will point out with pride to the championship days of their "huskies." And certainly Fenelon Falls did have a splendid team. The enthusiastic support given by the T. A. S. of Peterborough, assisted their team in winning the championship on more than one occasion, while Keene, with its limited stock of material to draw from, made the best of the hustle. Campbellford, too, was always in line with a good strong seven. There was, in fact, more genuine enthusiasm, better hockey, and more good sport in these towns during the winter months, than there has been since the Trent Valley League went out of business.

The League had its stormy periods. It was organized at a meeting held in the National Hotel on December 23, 7899, and played an important part in the athletic life of the district until 1906. The first year's membership consisted of only five clubs, viz.: Keene, Lakefield, Norwood, Campbellford and the Lakeviews of Peterborough. Tom Wallace, who was the village school master at Keene, was President, and Melville Strickland of Lakefield was Vice President. The old Lakeviews practised on Little Lake and had on its line-up such men as Billy Crowley, Bill Meagher, and others, who were later shining lights on the Peterborough Senior O. H. A. team. The League flourished and grew beyond the expectations of the original promoters. Fenelon Falls, Bobcaygeon, the Belleville Bankers, Deseronto, Napanee, Madoc and Marmora were soon knocking at the door, seeking admission, and one year a total of 21 clubs competed for the championship. The membership fee was low—only two dollars—and the size of the rinks did not count. The result was that many villages that could not afford the expense of maintaining a team in the O. H. A., or did not possess a rink sufficiently large to meet the requirements of that Association, found ample scope for their winter's enjoyments in belonging to the Trent Valley League. To-day there is perhaps greater scope in this district for a League similar to that of the old Trent Valley. There is a number of villages to-day that have hockey teams, where hockey did not exist 8 or 10 years ago, but they have no scope for development. They belong to the League. The O. H. A. is beyond them and they have nothing that affords competition.

Roy Schooley, Chaucer Elliott, and other referees of national and international reputation figured in championship matches of the Trent Valley League, which gives one an idea of the strenuous contests that frequently took place. Enthusiasm of a like nature in hockey circles can be aroused again in this district, and flourish.

TIRED, ACHING FEET

How annoying to have the feet tired and aching, sore and chafed about the time you want to take a good long walk. You can get a world of comfort by using Dr. Chase's Ointment when the feet give you trouble. It heals and soothes the skin, makes it soft and natural and prevents corns and bunions.

Rather Odd Combination

Since the office of Town Clerk and Treasurer of Lindsay has become vacant, a great deal of interesting discussion has been going on in the Lindsay papers as to whether the two offices should remain combined, or whether they should be filled by two persons. With a view to furnishing the citizens with all posible information in this respect, the Lindsay papers have been receiving replies to letters fro mvarious small cities and towns throughout the province. It is interesting to note the combination of offices in many municipalities. For instance it is found that in Belleville bte offices of clerk and treasurer are separate. The clerk is also city solicitor and he is paid $1,200 per annum for both. The treasurer receives $700 together with $300 from the water works, and $100 from the gas works.

The City has municipal waterworks the manager receiving $300. They have also municipal lighting, the secretary or manager receiving $1,200 per annum.

Shiloh's Cure

THROUGH WILDERNESS TO CANADA ATLANTIC

The indications are that the Central Ontario Railroad will soon have connection with the Canada Atlantic Railroad at Whitney. Considerable construction on the extension of this line has been going on during the past three years and Central Ontario Railroad cars now come puffing into Manooth, a hitherto isolated valley in the wilds of Hastings county. An inspection of this newly constructed extension was recently made by some Government officials. The General Manager of the road, Mr. George Collins, invited Messrs. J. W. Johnson, J. W. Pearce, representatives in the Ontario Legislature of West and North Hastings, and Sir Mackenzie Bowell, to accompany these gentlemen on their tour of inspection in order that they might see and learn what had been done and what was being done in extending and improving the line running through that portion of the County of Hastings which these gentlemen at present represent in Parliament, two of them in the Ontario Legislature and one in Ottawa. The invitation was accepted and the result of the trip proved highly interesting and satisfactory.

On Wednesday morning at 7.30 the party left Trenton, consisting of Mr. Collins, manager of the road, and Messrs. O. A. Hone, superintendent J. D. Evans, chief engineer; A. B. Ingram, a member of the Railway and Municipal Board of Ontario; E. V. Johnson, Inspector of Railways of the Department of Railway and Canals, Ottawa; J. W. Johnson, M.P.P., J. W. Pearce, M.P.P., and Sir Mackenzie Bowell, left for the northern end of the road, which now has a firstclass roadbed, extending from Picton via Trenton to Maynooth, of 132 and a half miles, and is now being extended from Maynooth northward to Whitney, a point on the Canadian Atlantic Railway, which extension will be complete next year, and when so completed will form a connection with the Canada Atlantic Railway, enabling passengers to reach the Pacific coast westward and eastward to the Atlantic

The manager of the road and his chief engineer are pursuing a commendable course in all repairs they are making and in the construction of the extension of the road, in the constructing of all culverts and bridges of steel and cement, thus giving them a permanent character. In addition to this policy, many of the platforms at different stations are constructed of cement, as are also some of the newly erected station houses, an example which might be followed with advantage by some of the older railway engineers and managers. There is a solidity about these improvements that at once strikes the eye of the passenger, though he may not be an expert in railway building.

The extension north for a number of miles runs through a dense forest of magnificent pulp and other woods of great value, and construction is being pushed with vigour, with a view to completion early next season. A number of gangs of men are upon the work

The inspectors did not hesitate in expressing their high appreciation of what had been done in the construction of new culverts and improving the old portions of the road. Of their views of the character of the work on the extension one could only judge by their silence, their duty being to express no opinion until they reported to their respective governments. The character of their reports the officials of the road have little to fear.

The manager and his officials are to be commended for the business ability which they have displayed in making the Central Ontario Railway a first-class property, which, in addition to the opening up for settlement, mining and lumber purposes, will, there can be little doubt, prove a paying investment to those who have invested their money in it.

It must not be forgotten that the country which this road is opening in the north is a game paradise, inviting the hunter to follow the deer runs, and seek for the moose haunts. That they exist in that locality the party had evidence in the exhibition of three deer and what the hunter termed one "bull moose" lying upon a flat car at the station, ready for shipment, being the result of one or two days' hunting.

Fined For Selling Booze

On Tuesday two cases came before P. M. Boggs, of Cobourg, William Francis Griffis, druggist of Colborne, was summoned by the Government detective for unlawfully keeping liquor for sale, barter and traffic without a license. On this charge he was fined $50 and $1.25 cost.

He was also charged with selling liquor on the 28th day of October and the 28th of November. On this charge he was fined $150 and $1.35 costs.

Colborne has been a local option village for nearly three years, and the number of cases of infraction of the law has been few. In the present case a barrel of whiskey and several cases of the same goods were found on the premises, which goes to show that the people of Colborne have not suffered for want of the glass that cheers as well as inebriates. The druggist was allowed to ship the liquor back to the man who sold him.—Port Hope Guide.

Umpires To Train In The Spring

CHICAGO, DEC. 3.—Spring training for umpires is once more to be proposed in baseball. Secretary-Treasurer Charles G. Williams of the Cubs is behind the idea and President Murphy will be asked to press at the motion before the annual session of the National League, Dec. 13, at New York.

"The players are requested to put in five or six weeks of hard practice in the South every spring," said Williams yesterday, "and if the club owners deem it proper to send their athletes away for the purpose of brightening up their batting eyes, why wou kin't it be a good idea to give the umpires a like course of treatment. It stands to reason the men who handle the indicators are bound to be a little "off form" as regards the judgment of balls and strikes, especially after idling through the months of November, December, January, February, March and a good part of April.

HERE'S A CHANCE

Tacoma Girl Makes an Offer to Bachelors —Will Wed One if Is One of 10,000 to Put Up $1

Examiner Special.

TACOMA, WASH., DEC 9. Not satisfied with resting on her laurels as one of the prettiest girls in Tacoma, Miss Labone Livingstone, who is twenty years old, made an announcement to-day which places her in the front rank of Philanthropists. Basing her announcement on the assumption that there are at least 10,000 men in the United States willing to be married if they could get wives for $1 each, Miss Livingstone has arranged a "chance marriage" for these 10,000 for the not exorbitant price of $1 each. Foreigners will not be permitted to enter.

Miss Livingstone will also reserve the right to reject the selection if he drinks too much, does not go to church, eats with his knife, uses perfume, thinks he is the best poker player in his set, saves letters girls have written to him, or knows nothing about that part of the United States lying west of the west side of Broadway.

If an acceptable candidate gets her he will take her and $5,000. If the selection is so ungallant as to decline to marry, he will forfeit his $5,000. On the other hand, if he is not up to the plans and specifications favored by Miss Livingstone, she thinks release from the agreement for $5,000 will be a bargain and she will forfeit her $5,000 and let the man go out and pick his own wife.

She has many commendable qualities aside from her pulchritude She does not gossip. She'll let her husband choose his own clothes. She has no large family of professional guests. She can cook and keep books. She wears her own hair and does not criticise women who don't.

Her friends think $1 is cheap for her, but she believes in doing the greatest possible good for the greatest number.

MASCULINE ATTITUDE TOWARDS CHRISTMAS AS SEEN BY A WOMAN

Watch the Christmas crowds. Who is it that carry home the bunches of mistletoe, the gay holly wreaths? The women—always the women.

Watch the crowds of Christmas shoppers [illegible] The women every time. They outnumber the men ten to one.

Bless them! (And I am not saying it because I am a woman.) But it seems to me, if it were not for the women there would be precious little celebration of Christmas.

Can you imagine the average man bringing home, unasked, holly wreaths, garlands of laurel and pine? Can you imagine him smilingly, cheerily, and of his own initiative, going about the house tacking up the greens? Hardly. He may do it if coaxed, but even then he does it none too graciously.

Gift-buying is done in much the same spirit. A man finds real pleasure in getting a gift for The girl. A husband enjoys selecting something for his wife, possibly for the children. But that is about as far as it goes. Other gifts are bought with much groaning of spirit and inward protests against the foolishness of the whole thing. If their buying can be delegated to somebody else, it usually is. When the Christmas bills come in there is apt to be a row. Gift-giving in general does not appeal to the average man. He can't see why, on one day in the year, he should rush around excitedly and buy handkerchiefs and neckties for Tom, Dick and Harry, and hand them over to them. It strikes him as a nonsensical performance. He enjoys the Christmas dinner, he doesn't mind seeing the house in festive garb, he even likes to get a few presents himself. But if it was up to him to see that all these things were accomplished in honour of the day, the celebration of Christmas would soon be numbered with the strange customs of past and gone peoples.

This is not as it should be. A wife likes her husband not only to help, but to take a genuine interest in the festivities she is planning, to make suggestions, to bring home of his own accord decorations to make the home pretty. What a joyful surprise for the wife if the husband would come home some night weighted down under a load of green and say cheerily, "Thought I would bring these out for the house. We'll get to work after supper and fix it up."

What a treat to the children if they could climb on father's knee, cuddle down in his arms and talk over the question of their childish gifts, sure of his sympathetic interest. But if they attempt it, the evening paper is grudgingly laid aside, if it is laid aside at all, or he says he is going out and to run and tell mother about their plans.

Christmas would be cheerier for many a woman if the men of the family warmed up to it a little more. They enjoy the day itself enough, but if they took a more active interest in the preparations for it, entered a little more heartily into the spirit of it, the joy of its celebratic nwould strike down deeper in many a home.

WEYBURN, Sask.

THE TOWN WITH A CITY FOUNDATION

A Few Facts Concerning WEYBURN

WEYBURN is one of the most important C. P. R Divisional points in Southern Saskatchewan.

THE GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC

is building a line through Weyburn to the International boundary. This line is completed to within a short distance of the Town to-day.

THE CANADIAN NORTHERN has surveyed two proposed lines to within a short distance of the Town. With all these Railway lines running into the Town, Weyburn is bound to become a great Railroad centre, consequently a great distributing centre.

WEYBURN'S IDEAL LOCATION as a natural distributing point for Southern Saskatchewan, is recognized by the large wholesale houses, many of which have already located there

THE WEYBURN DISTRICT has been blessed with good crops this season, and can still boast of never having experienced a crop failure. Last year nearly a million and a-half bushels of wheat were marketed in the seven local elevators, and that amount is confidently expected this season. The Weyburn District lies about 1,500 feet above the sea level. The average rainfall is about twenty-seven inches.

WEYBURN lies in the centre of Southern Saskatchewan, and is surrounded by the most fertile and productive wheat belt in the Canadian West, and now has the reputation of producing more wheat than any other point in Western Canada; yet only about 25 of the land around Weyburn is under cultivation. What will it mean when it is all cultivated?

THE FIVE CHURCHES are all splendid edifices, and a feature of the town.

WEYBURN HAS A SPLENDID system of waterworks and sewerage, and owns its electric lighting system. The supply of drinking water is inexhaustible.

OF THE FIVE HOTELS in Weyburn, three are among the finest in the Province.

NEXT Spring McKinnon & Company will erect a departmental store in Weyburn. The building alone will cost $250,000

NO BETTER Criterion of the Town's growth, and prosperity, could be desired than that of the building and local improvement expenditure this season. It is conservatively estimated that this total will not be less than $475,000.00.

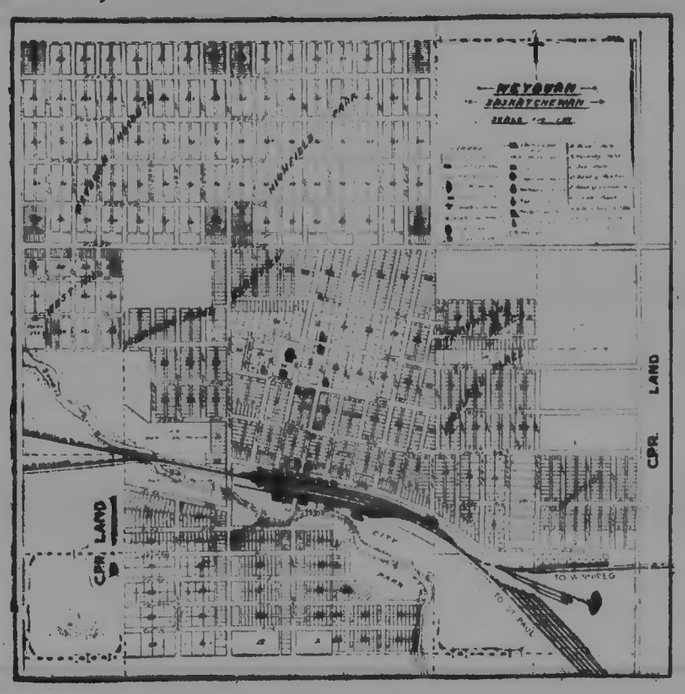
WEYBURN offers a Safe and Paying Investment to Those Who Buy at Present Prices

WEYBURN enjoys the distinction of being the only town in the Canadian West to possess its own CHARTERED BANK. It is named the WEYBURN SECURITY BANK, and has opened branches in several neighboring Towns. Among its financial institutions, Weyburn numbers three of Canada's greatest Banks, namely, the Canadian Bank of Commerce, the Union Bank of Canada, and the Bank of Montreal. The WEYBURN SECURITY BANK is the only Bank operating solely in Western Canada. The Weyburn Security Bank is erecting its Head Office building in Weyburn, it being three storeys high, with a handsome, white terra-cotta front, and will cost $80,000. The fact that this Bank takes the name of the Town, and considers Weyburn the best Town in the West to make its headquarters, should be sufficient information to induce a man to, at least look into the Weyburn Real Estate proposition.

MANY RESIDENCES, costing from $5,000 to $8,000, are nearing completion, and in every part of the Town new cottages and houses, costing from $1,000 to $5,000, are under construction.



Highfield Park

BUILDING LOTS offered for sale range from $125 upward, according to location.

THESE LOTS are all within the Town limits at an average distance of one half mile from the centre of the Town. They are located within three quarters of a mile north of the C. P. R. station, in which direction the town is rapidly growing, and which is certain to become the finest residential district.

ALL THIS LAND has been inspected by clients, who increased their holdings after viewing it, and every lot is absolutely guaranteed to be high, dry land, splendidly situated for building purposes.

Ask to see photographs taken in Weyburn, which illustrate the direction in which the town is growing.

CONCRETE SIDEWALKS have been laid and water pipes, sewer pipes and electric lights have been installed as far north as Highfield Park.

The Local Scouts Are Very Enthusiastic

The Boy Scout movement has taken a very strong hold up Peterborough and it is doubtful if there is another city of its size in the Province, in which the Scout movement is so strong. A great deal of the success of the Peterborough Scout movement is due to Mr. W. J. Neale, a member of the Central School teaching staff, who has entered into the work with commendable enthusiasm. As a matter of fact, the Peterborough Boy Scouts, under Mr. Neale as Scout Master, number 90, being made up of 10 patrols of 9 boys each. These young chaps take a great deal of interest in their work and are receiving splendid training in various useful lines. They have quarters at the Peterborough Armouries and each Friday evening they put in an hour or more drilling, whilst on Saturday night they attend lectures. The boys are all uniformed and when on parade present a decidedly good appearance This particular corp is known as the "Peewit." There is also a detachment of Scouts connected with the Y.M.C.A.

Mr. Neale is to-day at Warsaw organising two patrols and it is the intention to have patrols organized in all the nearby villages.

The local regiment is carefully looked after by a Board of Management, consisting of His Honour Judge Huycke, Messrs. J. H. McClellan, D. O'Connell, F. D. Kerr, H. R. H. Kenner and Lieut.-Col. Arthur Stevenson. The boys are already planning a big two weeks' camp for next summer.

It may be of interest to many outside of Boy circles to hear a little of the history of the movement since its inception in Canada. It has spread from coast to coast, from the most northerly limits of civilization down to the border, and has invaded the United States until there are probably now well over one hundred thousand Boy Scouts on the continent of North America. The Canadian organization is, of course, distinct from that in the States, but the objects are similar, and what perhaps is one of the best points in both, is they are all son an equal footing, no matter to what nation, country or class they belong.

Toronto was the pioneer city of Canada in Boy Scout work. It is now nearly two years since a number of boys formed a small troop under Scoutmaster C. J. Corless. At that time the Scout was considered almost a freak, but these boys felt they had something good, and with true British pluck persevered with their work. They soon attracted the attention of people interested in boy work, the outcome of which was that just over a year ago the first Boy Scout Council in Canada was organized under the Presidency of Capt. R. S. Wilson.

KIDNAPPING BAND OF SIX MEN AND A WOMAN ARE TO BE ARRESTED SOON

NEW YORK, DEC. 3.—The Brooklyn police predict that they will be able shortly to allay the fears of children and parents in that borough by the round-up of the band of kidnappers, consisting of six men and a woman, who have stolen three little boys in the last three weeks and who still are holding the children.

Lieut. Carrao, Chief of the Brooklyn Italian squad, told a reporter yesterday that the end of the bold gang's activities were very near He said that the next few days would find them all, including the woman, behind prison bars and the stolen children restored to their parents.

He scouts the idea that the band will dare to carry out the threats made in letters to the boys' parents, demanding a ransom and threatening the murder of the children if the money is not forthcoming.

PARENTS ATTEMPTING NEGOTIATIONS

The kidnapped children are eight-year-old Michael Fritzi of No. 720 Fifth Avenue, seven-year-old Giuseppi Longo of No. 186 First Street, and Carlo Caliette, three years old, of No. 124 Roebling Street, Brooklyn. Naturally the parents of all the children are distraught and do not think as the police do, that no physical harm will be done their children. In fact, they have been most anxiously attempting negotiations with the kidnappers over the heads of the police.

But Lieut Carrao said to a reporter:

"The parents of these children may be assured that their little ones will soon be restored to their arms. Arrests are to be made very soon. We have definite information regarding the members of this gang and their whereabouts. The clues obtained by my men in Williamsburg and South Brooklyn all lead to the same band of men as having kidnapped the three little boys who have been lured from their homes in the last three weeks.

"We are only waiting the picking up of some essential bits of evidence before swooping down on the gang.

"The kidnappers talk loudly of killings, but I have never knew one yet that was not an arrant coward Letters have been received by the parents of these boys and other overtures have been made to them, I know, about which they have kept us in ignorance. If they would take us more fully into their confidence it would go a long way toward shortening the restoration of the little boys to their homes.

INFORMATION FROM POLICE

"The father of Giuseppi Longo received two letters from the kidnappers. On Monday last he also got a postal card. This he tore up and refused to give any information about. The father of the Fritzi boy has received one letter which he also refused to let me read. In fact, in clearing up these kidnapping cases, we not only have the child stealers to look after, but also the parents.

"Unquestionably there is a woman in this present gang. We know who she is. There is always a woman in the kidnapping gang, usually one of the wives of a member of the band, and always one with children of her own.

"The kidnapped little ones are taken in with the other children. Then if they cry a great deal nothing is thought of the sounds by neighbors, since they are used to hearing children's squalls coming from those rooms.

"But as I said before, this particular gang is pretty well rounded up at that minute. Every member of it is being watched and any attempt that any of them might at this minute make to flee from the city would be instantly followed by arrest."

Says Ragtime Music Is Cause Of Many Crimes

Belmont Minstrels Look Out

MACON, GA., DEC 9. In an address to the students of Wesleyan College to-day, Dr. Dingley Brown, director of music, declared that ragtime music caused more crime in this country than liquor drinking. He said that ragtime music was a menace to the younger generation, inasmuch as it is allowed and encouraged in the home, but that its influence for evil was being particularly felt by the older people.

He deplored the fact that in the theatres, at the parks, on the streets, and in the homes ragtime rather than "pure" or classical music was played. He said that more crime was committed in Chicago and New York in any given period than in all of Great Britain, and that the number of felonious acts perpetrated in this country surpassed the criminal record of entire Europe. Being attributed indirectly, if not immediately, to the fact that in this country ragtime music flourishes, while in Europe it is unknown.

He cited quotations from philosophers, from Confucius and Plato, to Shakespeare and Cowper, to show that music had an ennobling, uplifting, moral influence, and arguing thusly declared that "ragtime, which is an abortive, decadent, perverted, hysterical form of music," possessed corresponding powers of evil.

His views on this subject created no little comment among the faculty and student body.

It was a moonlit night, warm with the languid steaminess of the tropics, when trader Henderson lounged on the verandah of Don Manuel Reina's house in an island of the Philippine archipelago. He was a reckless young Englishman or he would have remained safe in his own factory across the straits, but Beatriz Reina was fascinating, and her father owned his firm a good many dollars. Don Manuel was a genial Spaniard who hitherto had managed to avoid complications with either the Filipino generals or the Americans, which said a good deal for his diplomacy. Tall sugar cane amongst which fire flies sparkled, stretched round the building, and the lights of a neighboring pueblo blinked across among its dew wet blades. There were no Filipino troops in the pueblo just then so far as Henderson knew, but he guessed his companion, Captain Deering, of the U.S. infantry, had risked his life for the ostensible purpose of interviewing its Alcalde. Henderson wondered whether he would have done so but for the bright eyes of Beatriz Reina. The Filipinos had a black account against Deering's company.

A guitar hung by gaudy ribands round the lady's neck, and touching it lightly she sang a Castilian ballad of love among the vines. Beatriz was not yet twenty, and looked dangerously pretty when with a smile at Deering she laid the guitar aside while her father passed a flask of wine across the table. A vault of velvety indigo, spangled with luminescence, hung over the hacienda. There was no sound to break the steamy stillness save the moan of the ground-swell that pulsed drowsily on a beach hard by, and Henderson felt the hot spicy air was filled with the essence of rest. The smoky British town, with its pounding of mighty hammers and clang of roaring mills, in which he had left somebody whose photograph still hung in his factory faded to a hazy memory of things that belonged to a wholly different world.

"It's a pretty song," said Deering, who in no way resembled an army officer in the big Spanish sombrero, with a black sash rolled about his waist. "I don't quite know what it's all about ,but the music makes me homesick and sets me longing for green Vermont. There's only one good thing in this worn-out country, and it's rough on me—I can't tell her so in Castellano. Henderson, couldn't you put it neatly for me?"

"Isn't it rough on me," said Henderson with a laugh; and Beatriz, who glanced at them archly, broke in, "You two conspire something I don't understand—eh?"

"No," said Deering ruefully. "Sail in, Henderson. Confound it! She understands—you—well enough."

"The Senor Deering considers your voice makes all the night musical," explained Henderson in his best Castilian. "It reminds him of the nightingales in his own country. Do you raise those birds, Deering, down Vermont way? He will miss it greatly when he goes away."

"Ah, the Senor goes away," said Beatriz with a subtle inflection on the "ah," while Henderson, who watched his comrade's face, said to himself, "This is getting serious."

Possibly Don Manuel thought so, too, for glancing at his watch he broke in, "It is curious there is no sign of my good friend the Alcalde."

"I'll be in a tight place if the worthy gentleman gives me away," said Deering. "In my present get-up I'm just a spy, see? Still, the Senorita's worth the risk. She's looking. Say something pretty for me, Henderson."

Henderson racked his brains for an appropriate compliment, though he had reason to fancy from something he had seen that when alone with the lady Deering, whose Spanish was fragmentary, had much less difficulty in explaining himself.

Suddenly there was a shouting in the compound and a patter of running feet, followed by a rustling among the sugar cane. Beatriz screamed, and the three men stared at each other, Don Manuel fuming with passion, Henderson puzzled, and Deering dangerously cool.

"Your good friend the Alcalde has sold me," said he.

Thereupon the Spanish gentleman consigned the soul of the Alcalde to the burning pit, and explained that the Filipinos would profit by the excuse for shooting him and confiscating his property. He added that there was perhaps just time to escape by his boat on the beach. Henderson flung in a few English words, and Deering grasped the position.

"He's too late. Those niggers will be on us before his men could launch the boat," he said. "Heaven knows what might happen to the Senorita then, but I brought this upon them, and I might hold the place long enough, to give them a chance of escape."

Don Manuel was ready in a few seconds, but his daughter hesitated, turning towards the American, and Henderson discreetly gazed over the balustrade. There was plenty to interest him below, for dusky figures, with bolo knives, were hurrying through the cane, and he turned with a warning cry to his companion. Deering had apparently just stooped over the hand of the girl whose light dress whisked through an adjoining room. Then a door banged below, and reading something in his companion's face, Deering said, "Language isn't everything, and I can do my own fighting, any way. If you make a record break there's still time for you."

"I think you're wrong," said Henderson recklessly, as several dusky figures slipped round behind the house. "It would be mean, wouldn't it, and I'm too late already."

"Then turn the lamp out," said Deering. "Don't waste a cartridge. Those fellows mean business, but I guess the moon will help us to pot a few."

For a brief space the pair stood silently in shadow at the head of the verandah stairway while the rustling continued among the cane, and running men poured into the clearing. Then one in uniform hailed them in Spanish.

"He is inviting us to come out before we are shot," said Henderson. "What shall I tell him?"

"Don Manuel can't have got off yet, and after the way our Westerners handled them they'd shoot us any how," said Deering. "Tell him to go to perdition."

The next few minutes were eventful, but Henderson was too busy to note details. There was a rush of shouting men to the foot of the stairway, and a rifle bullet splintered the window. Henderson heard the whine of it close past his head. Deering's pistol glittered blue under the moon, but there was no report, and hurling it across the verandah he smashed a teak chair in two and whirled its back aloft at the head of the stairway up which lithe dusky figures with bolo knives came leaping. Several of them rolled headlong down again, for Deering was powerful and his reach was long, while Henderson, who blazed away at a venture, remained uncertain if he hit anybody. He was a bad marksman, and just recovering from fever, while it is fortunately more difficult to hold a stumpy pistol straight than the unskilled believe.

In any case, while his fingers contracted on the trigger and shouting men went down before the chair, lean hands which reached up from behind closed about his throat, and somebody tripped his feet from under him. He had just time to see Deering driven backwards, and kick somebody his hardest, before he rolled over choking in the grasp of several men who had apparently entered by a rear stairway. After which he remembered nothing until he found himself limping through a paddy swamp with a rope that bound his wrists fastened to a horseman's saddle, and a line of dusky figures splashing through thick darkness before him. There was a glare in the sky behind, and Deering's voice reached him

"The Don got away. Say, have they hurt you, partner? My rascally nigger servant fixed that pistol for me."

"I've got a splitting headache, and can't quite see," said Henderson ruefully, but when he would have wiped away a trickle of warm fluid which ran into one eye, the rope was tightened savagely. Next day, because his wound and the fatigue had brought about a recurrence of the malarial fever he suffered from, he was dragged delirious into what had been the Spanish settlement of San Sebastian, and when he had passed several days in burning misery, was visited by a Spanish notary and a uniformed native officer. As he appeared too sick to attend the formal court-martial they would read any statement he made, they said. They smiled incredulously when he claimed to be a British subject, and Henderson, who was slightly better, waited Deering's return from the court-martial on the morrow with distinct uneasiness. When the door of their quarters clanged to behind him he noticed that his comrade's bronzed face had lost some of its usual color.

"Well?" he said as quietly as he could.

"Have a cigar?" said the American, who seemed to find a difficulty in striking the match. "The niggers didn't even loot my tobacco, which is comforting, because we may want it to-morrow. Square trial, with some tone about it. Half-bred colonel, most courteous image, enquired after you. Was good enough to tell me Don Manuel and his daughter got safe away."

Henderson, racked with suspense, saw his comrade was temporizing, and determined no American should outdo him in coolness. "I'm glad of that, but when you're quite ready you might tell me what the verdict was," he said.

"Take it short?" said Deering, whose voice rang harsh. "Then your plea of Civis Romanus won't do. Nigger gentlemen decided logically that as you Britishers only come here to trade they would steer clear of the fighting. You were taken in company with an American officer in disguise as a spy, and it spoke you shot somebody—see?"

"Ah!" said Henderson, drawing in his breath. "And—"

Deering, flinging his cigar away, held out his hand, "And wherever you happened to be born you'll end up a good American—to-morrow. These folks want a spectacle in San Sebastian. I'm eternally sorry, partner. I let you into this."

The pair solemnly shook hands, and there was silence for ten minutes or so. Then Deering said; with apparent irrevelancy, "Condemn the rascally nigger who fled the strike out of my pistol. I'd feel considerably better if I had fixed a dozen of them."

Henderson wondered that, contrary to all that he had read, he slept soundly when darkness came. It may have been due to the lassitude the fever left him, or because the shock produced a numbing effect, but he awakened refreshed, and was at first only conscious that a clean sweet air came in through the narrow window, and that somebody singing a plaintive song went by outside. Then as his perceptions fully returned he saw Deering sitting with his head in his hands, and remembered what was to come. He also remembered one who watched for his letters in England, and for whose sake he had taken the risk of attempting to recover Don Manuel's debt, and for the first time he groaned aloud.

"Awake at last?" said Deering. "I didn't sleep well myself. Anything in particular worrying you?"

"I was wondering if they would let me write a letter," said Henderson.

"No," was the answer. "They mean to fix this thing up quietly—I asked them. I wanted to write the senorita. Thank God, she's safe, anyway."

Henderson was not particularly inhe feared the reflection that must come with silence, and asked, "You were there a good many times, Deering? Did it ever strike you that these folks don't understand the game of flirtation as you play it in your country?"

"Flirtation be—devastated!" said Deering, striding across the room. "I've a good few dollars in the Standard Oil, and if my folks don't like it—well, they can do the opposite and be hanged to them. I'm going to marry her when this infernal nigger-hunting's over. That is—" and the speaker clenched his hands as he concluded lamely. "That is—I was going to."

Henderson had small cause for amusement, but he laughed hollowly, and Deering's face twisted into a mirthless grin as he commented, "That's better! Under the circumstances one must do something and laughing's better than—the other thing. Oh, yes, I guess it's childish vanity, but it's not fitting for white-men to give themselves away before any kind of niggers—eh?"

Henderson could make no further conversation, and shuffling to the window watched the sunrise brighten across the clustering roofs of the old-world Spanish town and the sparkling sea. His eyes swept across it longingly, while his thoughts sped swifter still to the unlovely British city wherein he had once dreamed of the garish light and colour of the tropics. Then he drew a deep breath, recollecting that a gulf deeper and wider than any sea would shortly divide him from one he loved in that sheltered land. Deering, who paced up and down, was not communicative during the next hour or two, and it jarred on Henderson to see dusky peasants trooping past into San Sebastian in holiday finery. It was almost a relief when there was a knocking at the door at last, and a man armed with an American rifle stood in the entrance beckoning them.

Henderson, still weak from fever, limped after him and stood blinking stupidly in the fierce sunglare outside, but he straightened himself when Deering would have slipped his arm through his own and took his place between the files of their dusky guard. There was a yell of, "Death to the Americans," and they moved forward down the roaring street. Twenty men with rifles led the way, more came behind with wicked bolo knives, and the guard were hard pressed to push their way through the surging crowd. Henderson glanced at the sea of dark-skinned faces and wondered that he felt little resentment. He knew the dusky people possessed their good qualities, though they were vindictive, and, after an experience of Spaniards and Americans, had no particular reason to love white men. At one corner there was a stoppage, and a little girl thrust a cluster of fruit upon him. "Pobre Americano. Por la caridad," she lisped in Spanish; then added in a whisper, "Mira—look between them."

Henderson, finding a slip of paper, smuggled it into his pocket, then drew it out and read, "Take heart. Your friends lose no time."

"This is evidently for you, Deering. It is a lady's hand. They will be too late for ever unless they're here in the next few minutes," he said.

Then scarcely daring to hope he glanced at his comrade in misfortune as he dragged himself on. There was a Spaniard who walked moodily with his eyes fixed on the ground, a stolid, high-cheeked Chinaman, and a native of one of the Malayan provinces, who glared at the assembly with venomous disdain. Their quietness braced him, for Henderson, who considered he came of a superior race whose sons have demonstrated through all history that they could meet death lightly, felt he had its prestige to maintain. Perhaps Deering guessed his thoughts, for presently he said, "It would have come easier fighting, but I figure we have just got to make the best of it. Here we are."

They had arrived in the central plaza, and each detail of the scene burned itself into Henderson's brain—the dusty sunlit square swept clear by the ill-armed troops that swung into line, the endless faces behind the glinting weapons, and the group of uniformed officers slouching in most unsoldierly attitudes just outside the porch of the ancient Spanish church. He also noticed how the great cross on one corner towering against the blue, flung an inky shadow athwart the spot where he was signalled to stand, whilst, because the leathern curtain was drawn aside, a drone of chanting came out of the shadowy door.

Then an officer read aloud from a paper, setting forth the prisoner's offences, and when he had finished the chanting ceased and a Spanish priest of some missionary order came forth from the church. The swell of the organ and a stale savour of incense seemed to follow him. The Spaniard bent his head, the Chinaman shuffled a few paces away, while the Malay's lean hand slid wickedly to where his knife had been.

"These niggers aren't quite savages—tell the padre no thanks for me," said Deering. "Say, they're coming for us. Good-bye, partner. As I said, I'm sorry I let you into this. God forgive me."

The farewell was premature, for two soldiers dropped their rifle butts near the comrade's toes, and waved them backwards. Then there was an inarticulate murmur from the crowd, and Henderson saw three figures silhouetted against a glaring white wall—the sombrely clad Spaniard with slouch hat drawn low on his forehead on his knees, the blue-gowned Chinaman squatted on the ground with a look of mildly indignant astonishment upon his yellow face, while the Malay, who called on the God of the Moslem, stood erect with lips drawn back from his reddened teeth in a savage snarl, with a pose that suggested a wild beast about to spring. Facing them stood a dozen dusky men awkwardly holding good modern rifles.

Somebody called sharply. With a flash of sunlight on metal the barrels rose, there was an irregular sputter of red sparks, a rolling along hot walls of jarring reports, and a shrill scream rang out. Then a roar of voices went up, and a lithe, half-naked, bleeding form swinging a glimmering Lolo bounded like a panther out of the slimy smoke.

"What's that?" shouted Deering, quivering with excitement; and Henderson answered in broken gasps, "I rather think it's the Malay getting home. Bravo—oh, bravo! By the Lord, he'll cut his way right through to the colonel! No—he's down! I wouldn't look just that way, Deering, if I were you."

The clamour subsided suddenly. There was a patter of running feet, a clanging of steel on stone, and Deering, whose lips twitched, stared at his comrade.

"It's over," said Henderson thickly. "Even more than I bargained for. Pah—those brutes can't even shoot. Deering, it's our turn now."

A man with a smoking rifle strode in their direction across the plaza, and Henderson turned his eyes resolutely away from what lay at one end of it. Then the soldier halted, and a tumult began as somebody rode a lathered horse madly through the crowd. The officers consulted hurriedly, one shouted orders, and Deering gasped as he said, "Great Heavens!—they're clean forgotten us. What on this green earth is happening?"

The crowd broke up in a panic, the troops went off at a trot, there was a crackle of skirmishers firing, the blast of a volley, and a mad uproar in the hot street which debouched on the plaza, and Deering flung his wide hat high into the air.

"It's either my boys come for me, or Ransome's Wild West," he shouted. "This place will smell of sulphur presently. Steady. Hold up, partner! We're through with it now."

Henderson, still very weak from fever and shaken by the revulsion of relief, greatly desired to sit down, for the hot walls reeled around him, but Deering held him upright, until, ringing along at a fast double with bayonets twinkling through the dust, white men in tattered uniforms poured file by file into the plaza. Most went through it and vanished, and Deering cheered them as they ran. Then a sun-bronzed officer, perhaps a little more ragged and dusty than the rest, came panting up with a company behind him, and nearly choked for want of breath as he wrung Deering's hand.

"It's a mercy we got through in time," he spluttered. "Ransome's half-tamed cattle thieves will keep the niggers on the run. Twenty miles on

INSATIABLE HUNGER TRACED TO JOSEPH

A ONE DAY APPETITE

Vegetarians Most Difficult to Treat, "Leading a Brief but Glorious Existence," He Asserts.

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

DR. W. SALTAU PENWICK kept an audience alternately shaking with laughter and shivering with something that was pretty nearly akin to horror in a lecture he delivered at the Institute of Hygiene on "Eccentricities of Diet."

One of his most amusing statements concerned patients he had known who suffered from the disease of "insatiable hunger." "The earliest notice of it," he said, "is to be found in the Book of Genesis, where Pharaoh consulted Joseph about his dream of the fat and lean kine, in which the lean kine devoured the fat ones without appearing an atom the better for it. That exactly describes the case of the 'insatiable hunger' victims. They will eat almost anything, yet are always hungry, lean and ill favored."

Then he went on to give instances he had known. A girl of eight, he said, who ordinarily at table ate as much as the other seven members of the family put together one day escaped to the kitchen and there put away a raw codfish, two pounds of tallow candles and several pounds of butter. A boy victim, for purposes of medical observation, was allowed twenty-four hours' freedom. He devoured 16 pounds of raw meat in the time, besides innumerable other things. A third patient, a little girl, was placed in a walled garden of shrubs, so tired were her parents of her insatiable appetite. But that did not stop her eating, for later they discovered that she had eaten up all the leaves, all the small twigs, and had started gnawing a bough. Another starter was the case of a boy who, on being shut up in an empty room, was discovered afterward to have eaten all his clothes.

"Pshaw like that," said the lecturer, "are babyish pica. You can throw all your goods and chattels into them."

Talking about what he called the "idiosyncrasy of diet," he told of people who plastered their food with salt and never sat down to a meal without emptying the saltcellar. He knew of a girl who never left the table without emptying every saltcellar she could lay hands on and who could increase ten pounds in weight in twenty-four hours. She was frequently unable to wear a dress that had been quite loose for her the previous day.

Then he told of patients whose craze was to eat paper, these being mostly children, who would scrape the paper off the walls to satisfy their strange craving, the result being the formation of sodden paper balls in the stomach, which sometimes caused fatal. There were girls who died or fell into serious trouble through eating scraps of their own hair; dressmakers, mat and mattress makers who had a strange liking for cotton, string or anything at all that they might be working with, and upholsterers and polishers who drank themselves to death with their varnish and polish.

Finally he had a go at the vegetarians—"the most difficult people in the world to treat," Dr. Penwick declared. "Prove to them that vegetarianism is making them abnormally thin and they will say:—'Oh, but that's my wife's nature!' They are always cold; they never live to a great age. They lead a short but glorious existence. Many of them die of self-inflicted vegetable dyspepsia."

MISS KINGSTON'S WORK PRAISED

(Special Dispatch.)
Lisbon, Saturday.

Miss Gertrude Kingston's second production at the Little Theatre is a vast improvement on her first attempt and gives rich of the hope that the enterprise will, after all, turn out to be a success. The play is a pretty, witty and true to life love story called "Just to Get Married." The author's name is not revealed, as it is Miss Kingston's rule to keep that a secret until the play has run for a week.

That is doubtless frequently a safe plan, but in this case there is no need for it. The author has nothing to be ashamed of. There is a general impression that the play was written by a woman, as no mere man could have such intimate knowledge of the female temperament as this comedy displays.

Miss Kingston herself played the leading part with just the right touch. It was that of a woman who had turned thirty and who confessed on her nativity. Anything to get her married was the theme of the story. Throughout the three acts, and entertaining acts it was always quite possible for husbands. They were hunted just as they are every day in the upper strata of society, and both the humorous and intimate sides of the chase were cleverly shown.

Hide the knitting bees are less fashionable and confined to social rooms than they were. As it was, it almost outwitted the author. She came to her wits' end with the scene. You must remember that there is no hall or balcony or gallery in the Little Theatre. The seats are all high priced and those are not very many of them. Hand clapping or laughter is rather quite good, you know, old chap. It's an [illegible] and fun, quite [illegible]

Visit to the Kennels of Lady Castlereagh

BLOODHOUND LADY BOUNTIFUL

LADY CASTLEREAGH.

Great Lover of Dogs, She Has Added Basque Sheep Dog Puppies to Her Pets.

(SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.)

LONDON.—A fine horsewoman, a keen follower of hounds and an enthusiast at polo, at which fashionable game her husband is an adept, Lady Castlereagh is also a great lover of dogs. At Viscount Castlereagh's hunting lodge at Springfield, Oakham, Rutland, which is within easy reach of all the leading packs of hounds, she has long kept several very fine specimens of the bloodhound breed, to which she has recently added some Basque sheepdog puppies. These latter their owner believes are the only ones at present in England with the exception of their parents.

In response to an inquiry from your correspondent for some particulars concerning this novel breed, Lady Castlereagh very kindly gave the following information:—"Basque sheepdogs, as their name implies, come from the Basque provinces, where they are known as Labris. These puppies of mine were sired by Rascoe, a dog belonging to my sister, Miss Chaplin, which she imported some years ago. Pure bred specimens are becoming very hard to find, even in the place of their origin, and it took two years to discover a good one to bring to England for breeding purposes."

Will Resemble "Huntaia."

"Will these pups resemble the 'Bobtail,' or old English sheepdog, when they mature?"

"Yes, both in appearance and utility. Their coats are very similar to the 'bobtail,' though more hairy. Like the latter dog, the Basque is used for driving sheep and cattle. I am establishing the breed in this country, and these puppies are now being trained for driving sheep, and later on they will be used for tracking deer in the Highland forests.

"When full grown the ears of the Basque sheepdog are carried half pricked, and they have a peculiar shambling gait in their hind legs, which turn outward and give them a movement rather like that of a bear. This effect is rather enhanced by their having their tails docked right off, a practice which, in my opinion, should not be encouraged, as it is both cruel and ungainly.

"Has your kennelman experienced any difficulty in rearing your puppies?"

"None whatever, for they are very hardy animals."

"Are they companionable?"

"Very, and they make splendid watchdogs."

As an example of this, Lady Castlereagh related a story about Miss Chaplin's dog, Rascoe. "Before my sister went abroad, some time ago," she said, "this animal was sent to her keeper to look after during her absence. One day the keeper's wife was ill. The dog, which was passionately attached to her, refused to allow any one to approach her bed until, at last, they sent for the man's little child, and Rascoe allowed the child to lead him away.

"No, I do not think the Basque sheepdogs will supplant bloodhounds in my affections," said Lady Castlereagh, in reply to a query, "for I am really very much attached to my hounds.

"I would like to see bloodhounds more used as aids for detecting criminals. These bloodhounds, properly trained, are invaluable in hunting the clean hoof, and if only employed immediately the crime is discovered the result is the almost certain detection of the culprit.

"The bloodhound has been known to hunt a line several days old even, and that they can do so has often been demonstrated. Therefore it often happens, after a crime has been committed, when everything else has failed, the authorities send for the bloodhound and expect marvels from him over a soiled and fouled line when had the animal been put on it in the first place far better results would have been obtained.

"My old hound Lady Bountiful when a puppy tracked me for miles over a deer forest. I had walked out from the lodge and given orders for the puppy to be shut up for two or three hours, which was done, but I suppose when they let her out she nosed about until she struck the trail, and persistently followed it on over the roughest country, carrying it across a ploughed piece of ground where a stag had been shot, and 'gralloched' till she came up with me in the late afternoon.

"I am busy having some hounds trained to track now, and it is very interesting and pretty to see them at work. They also make capital dogs for hunting wounded game in wooded countries, as they never leave the original scent for a fresh line.

"Add to this the great antiquity of the bloodhound and his dignified and handsome, some would say prehistoric, appearance. I think one may claim that the breed is sufficiently attractive to command more attention than it does. They are very shy animals and, contrary to tradition, very affectionate and good natured."

Japan Bending Every Energy for Early Completion of the Manchurian Railway

(SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.)

TOKIO, Nov. 10, 1910.—The Japanese have not infrequently been accused of national conceit and egotism. It is only fair to say, however, that it would be quite impossible for them to entertain a more exalted opinion of their prowess in every field of human activity than is apparently entertained by Russian organs of public opinion, more especially with regard to the concrete results of Japanese diplomacy in South Manchuria.

Both the Japanese and the Slavonic minds seem to love extremes, and a striking symptom of this characteristic is seen in the contrast between Russian depreciation of Japanese strength before the war and the present tendency to invest every move of Japan in Manchuria and Corea with profound and sinister significance.

On the other hand, I found in the course of my recent journey through Corea, and subsequently, over the Antung-Mukden railway, that the Japanese are not worrying themselves about what the Russians think of their proceedings, but are ready determined to complete the reconstruction work as early as possible. An inspecting engineer who travelled on the same train as myself as far as Mukden estimated that the undertaking would take fully two years, though every effort would be made to expedite it. Needless to add, the Russians are more generous to the Japanese in their estimate, one leading paper writing that "there is no doubt that the Japanese, with their well known energy and system, will have the road ready in a year."

Significance to Japan.

What the reconstruction of this line means to the Japanese is obvious at a glance. The actual distance between Antung and Mukden is only 189 miles, but under present conditions of travel the journey occupies two days. As soon as the line is converted into standard gauge the journey is expected to average not more than ten hours. For the time being, at any rate, there will be only a single track, and the rough estimate of 25,000,000 yen as the cost of the work is based upon this understanding.

The nature of the country through which the Antung-Mukden Railway runs is already well known. The line for the most part traverses a mountainous and well watered country and as a whole constitutes a commendable piece of engineering. In order to get rid of the almost innumerable gradients, the tortuous twistings and turnings which were inevitable when the road was rushed through during the war, some thirty long tunnels will have to be bored, the largest of which will be nearly a mile in length.

It will be recalled that at that time the South Manchuria Railway loan was concluded Japan incurred much harsh criticism from the English press on the ground that the funds obtained from English financiers were largely expended on the purchase of equipment in the United States. From what I could learn on the spot, the South Manchuria Railway authorities do not intend to lay themselves open to similar criticism again, and although part of the rolling stock is to be bought in America I understand that nearly all the locomotives are to be purchased in England. Orders for rails are to be distributed in a very eclectic manner, English, American, Japanese and even Russian makers being on the Japanese lists.

Bridge the Connecting Link.

As pointed out in a former article, the Japanese are now hard at work on a railway bridge across the Yalu, and when this is finished the Corean and Manchurian railway systems for strategi al and economic purposes will be virtually one. In this context the last Chino-Japanese agreement is of paramount importance and significance. The Russians are quick to see that Japan could really afford to surrender the shadow for the substance, as far as Chientao was concerned, and that with China under obligation to extend the Kirin-Changchun Railway to the southern boundary of Yenchi, to connect with the Corean line at Hoiryong, with the right of participation in the equipment of the line from Kwangchentzu (more correctly Changchun) to Kirin, not to speak of the various special mining privileges which are supposed to lie at the root of the stillborn protest of the United States government, Japan has made a substantial addition to her influence in Manchuria.

Both the Chinese and Russians recognize with deep chagrin that the last agreement implies the extension of Japanese supremacy from Corea to the chief town of the province of Kirin. To quote the language used by the Manchurian Viceroy in his telegram to Ni-tung:—

"The Japanese have thus succeeded in segregating into their grasp a network of lines from Port Arthur to Mukden, Antung, Changchun, Kirin and Hoiryong. They will begin to construct branches and junctions, and in connection therewith colonies of Japanese will be established in Kirin province and the development of their trade and industry will ensue."

A minority of Russians in Northern Manchuria and Eastern Siberia, rejecting the theory of war between Russia and Japan in the near future, prefer to favor the idea that Japan and America are to be the next belligerents. A well known Harbin paper accordingly writes in the course of a long article on the Crane fiasco:—

"The struggle between America and Japan, which only a few months ago was nearly the cause of war, has only just begun. In a very short time we shall be witnesses of a Japanese-American struggle, not at San Francisco and not at Honolulu, but in China, on whose soil there has already occurred a different degree of hostility between these two foreign powers."

The Japanese whom I questioned upon these subjects during my journey were far more guarded in their comments on the situation. They professed a desire for peace and they invariably contended that whatever the future might have in store Japan was in need of a long rest.

A prominent official at Dairen with whom I conversed on the same subject put the matter in this light:

"Japan," he said, "is investing huge sums a good deal of it borrowed money—in Corea and South Manchuria. The South Manchurian Railway Company, in addition to the bid it is making for trans-continental traffic in conjunction with the Russian lines further north, has also initiated big coal mining enterprises at Fushun, Yentai and Penchihu either independently or in conjunction with the Chinese. Millions are also being spent on the improvements of Dalny with a view to making it the chief port of Manchuria.

"It would be foolish to deny the strategical value of the Japanese railway system of South Manchuria and Corea, but that value is really a secondary consideration, the entire trend of Japanese policy pointing to the economic aims of the authorities. It must be obvious that another war would inflict almost irreparable damage upon these great enterprises. War would mean the cessation of passenger traffic on the South Manchuria Railway and the dislocation of the export trade upon which Dalny chiefly depends for its prosperity. That this is so will appear from the fact that about seventy per cent of the revenue of the port is derived from exports."

The Colliery Question.

Seeing that reference is made above to the colliery enterprises of the Japanese in Manchuria, it may be well to add that in these also the Russians detect additional evidence of the invidious distinction which the Chinese government has been compelled to make as against the Russians. Under the former Russian regime the Fushun and Yentai collieries were regarded purely as private undertakings, whereas under the new Chino-Japanese agreement China admits the right of the Japanese government to work the said mines.

Fushun coal is used on the Corean and Manchurian lines. It impressed me as exceedingly dirty, but if the statistics are reliable the demand for it is rapidly increasing in January last year only 23,374 tons were mined, whereas last December the output amounted to 52,827 tons.

A bustling colliery town has rapidly sprung up in the vicinity of the shafts. Two hundred and thirty-six miles from Dairen is the Su-chia-tun Junction, whence runs the branch line, thirty-four miles in length, to Fushun, which is almost parallel to the Hun River. The station for the big Fushun colliery is Chien-chin-tai, immediately before the terminus.

According to a statement issued by the South Manchuria Railway Company, the coal field covers an area of ten miles from west to east in a direction parallel to the river. The width of the workable deposit is at least a mile, and the thickness of the seam, which dips in toward the north at an average grade of thirty degrees, ranges between 120 and 175 feet. The most conservative estimate of the quantity of coal in this belt is eight hundred million tons. The present daily output is but three thousand tons, but it is expected that in the near future these figures will be increased to six thousand tons.

JAPAN'S ECONOMY IS BRITAIN'S GAIN

FINDS IT MUCH CHEAPER

Government's Order Can Be Filled in Two Years, While Five Would Be Required in Home Slips.

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday

WHEN Japan recently gave orders for a new Dreadnought to be built in England the proponents of the Anglo-Japanese alliance were loud in referring to this act as having been inspired solely by a desire of Great Britain's Far Eastern ally to prove her friendship. It was not tainted with the flavor of business bargaining, so they argued, but simply intended to gracefully draw more tightly the "ties of alliance." All this sentiment has been rudely shattered by Mr. Fred T. Jane, naval expert and student of international fighting ships.

"The report that Japan, while leaving five of her own slips empty, has ordered a Dreadnought to be built in England to show her admiration of the Anglo-Japanese alliance is somewhat weak in the matter of the assigned cause," Mr. Jane asserts in a special article in the Evening Standard.

"The actual facts appear to be that, although Japanese yards are now perfectly capable of turning out moderately sized vessels and very good destroyers, the building of monstrous battle ships is rather beyond the capacity of their existing plants. This probably explains the tremendous delays in recent Japanese construction. It is far cheaper and expeditious to have a ship built outright in England than to import large quantities of material to be put together in Japan. It seems likely enough, therefore, that for some little while to come we shall be building Japanese vessels as in the old days before the war.

"Japan has been somewhat unfortunate in the past in her experience with foreign built ships. When the war with China broke out the Fuji and the Yashama were building in England and unavailable, while the delivery of the Tatsuta was stopped at Aden. In the late war the Nisshin and the Kasuga were only cleared from Italy in the nick of time, while the Kashima and the Katori were laid up in this country. As events turned out, both wars were over before the battle ships were completed, but had either war gone on longer or events turned out differently the matter might have had a far more serious aspect for our allies.

"The consideration of these facts would appear to be the main reason for the decision of Japan at this time of the war with Russia to build all her own ships in future. This seems now to have been modified by the consideration that there is much more risk in constructing a ship in home dockyards in five years than in having it built in England in two years or less."

(SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.)

TOKIO, Nov. 10, 1910.—In the course of a long statement to the presidents of the Japanese clearing houses the Premier, Marquis Katsura, offered some remarks on the subject of naval expansion which have excited the wrath of Mr. Masami Oishi, M. P., a frank advocate of a Russo-Japanese alliance and prophet of a coming conflict between Japan and the United States.

The Premier is quoted as having said that he was strongly convinced of the urgent importance of maintaining perpetual peace in view of the conditions ruling in Japan and the actual experience gained during the recent war.

"The Prime Minister," said Mr. Oishi, "intends to appropriate only eighty million yen in addition to the sums which have already been laid out. This figure gives an annual allotment of about fifteen million yen, while America is planning to turn out two battle ships every year. When the Panama Canal is opened, her naval strength on the Pacific will be doubled. In view of the actualities of the situation the naval programme outlined by the Premier is merely one of procrastination, and is worse than no programme at all."

The new Japanese tariff and the naval programme will constitute the chief storm centres during the forthcoming session of the Diet. The optimism of Marquis Katsura's oration to the Japanese bankers is far from being shared by the vernacular press of the capital. The Nichi Nichi expresses disappointment and disgust at the superficial nature of the Premier's remarks. The truth is that the finances of the nation are in a very difficult position, and the quotation of bonds has also declined.

"The speeches delivered by the bankers," adds this organ, "and the unquestioning submission with which the latter listened to the Premier's insipid declarations clearly demonstrate the fact that in the eyes of the bankers they are mere bankers, not the financiers of their country."

The Nippon is even more explicit and vituperative. "The Premier's assertion that economic conditions are assuming a bright and hopeful aspect is a ludicrous farce, opposed as it is to the plain fact that the bonds have sunk and the country's finances are in a perilous state." The meeting of the Imperial Diet reminds the Nippon of a wrecked vessel on the point of sinking, but the passengers and crew of which are spending their last moments in drinking champagne and toasting one another on their imaginary prosperous voyage.

Naval Board Makes Overtures to American Financial Group for Further Investment.

NO HITCH YET IN $50,000,000 LOAN

Negotiations Are Proceeding Favorably Despite Rumors Emanating from Unfriendly Quarters.

(Special Dispatch.)
Peking, Saturday.

Prince Tsai-Hsun's American visit has brought a tangible result in the shape of overtures by the Naval Board to the J. P. Morgan-Kuhn, Loeb group for a loan of forty million taels (about $32,000,000) upon the following basis:—A portion of the proceeds to be allotted for the construction of war ships in the United States and the balance for arsenals, dockyards and other works essential to the naval rehabilitation of China.

It is probable that this proposition will not be formally taken up until the completion of the negotiations regarding the currency reform loan of $50,000,000, which, despite statements inspired in unfriendly quarters, are proceeding as favorably as could be expected, in view of China's manifold currency complications.

The interest displayed in American financial circles in the possibilities of investment in China is indicated by the arrival here of Mr. James S. Fearon, of New York, vice president of the International Banking Corporation, who will spend the winter in China, and also of Mr. A. W. Bash, representing the Macy-Hawley syndicate.

J. K. OIL.

PLAY ECCENTRIC IN TITLE AND STYLE

Mr. Carton's Attempt to Mix Melodrama and Farce Brings Odd Production in London Theatre.

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday

YOU might as well try to mix oil and water as melodrama and farce, but that is just what Mr. R. C. Carton has tried to do in his new play called "Eccentric Lord Comberdene." The result is a good deal more eccentric than is the principal character.

This dramatic mongrel was acted for the first time at the St. James Theatre by Mr. George Alexander and his excellent company. Neither the audience nor the critics could make up their minds whether to take it as a "shilling shocker" and be thrilled or to consider it as a farce and laugh. The result was that they didn't do much of either, so the play fell between two stools and can be rated to that unfortunate class labelled "failure."

It is by no means stupid. On the contrary, it is full of the brilliant wit that we always expect from Mr. Carton's accomplished pen. Also it is delightfully acted. So if you can consider it all in the light of a very high class joke, as the author doubtless intended it to be considered, the performance will prove an enjoyable one. Unfortunately the average theatregoer wants his fun dished up so that it is easy to comprehend. In this play it isn't. To get at the humor of it all you need a pilot and then you have to analyze it.

A band of jewel thieves, secret agents of the English government, who are there to protect a Russian grand duchess from nihilists, and a half lunatic lord are all mixed up in a struggle to get possession of a vault. The story is so filled with plot that it flows over the sides.

It probably will be taken off in a few weeks. Too bad, for such good acting deserves a better fate.

BERLIN SEES ITS FIRST PRIZE FIGHT

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

Berlin, Saturday.—Berlin witnessed its first genuine prize fight recently at the Alhambra, when two American welterweights, the negro, "Bobby" Dobbs, and "Dick" Green, of Chicago, met for twenty rounds before a crowded house of German, English and American boxing enthusiasts.

Although the men were evenly matched in weight, "Bobby" proved the white man's master from the start and knocked him out with a wicked swing of the jaw in the sixteenth round.

Green proved to be a game fighter and stood a terrific amount of battering before he finally went to the mat.

Dobbs who is fifty-two years old, was the welterweight champion of America in the days when "Jack" Johnson was a mere pickaninny.

He has a victory over "Joe" Gans and a draw with "Joe" Walcott to his credit.

Last night's contest, which was excellently refereed by "Young" Fitzsimmons, was permitted by the police after much [illegible] and will do much to popularize the fighting game in Berlin.

AMERICAN SAILORS ADMIRE THE GREAT BRITISH FIGHTERS

MEN AT A BANQUET WITH LORD MAYOR

"Hands Across the Sea" and Similar Sentiments Are Cheered by Visitors and Their Guests.

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

The United States naval officers during their stay at Portland have been taking a great deal of interest in the three British battle ship cruisers of the Indomitable class which have been lying at anchor there, especially since the announcement that Japan is taking up this design in the ordering of such a ship from Messrs Vickers.

Up to the present, although every naval Power of consequence has been building vessels of what are known as the Dreadnought type, only Germany has followed Britain's lead with regard to the battle ship cruiser of the design of the Invincible and her sisters.

The American officers, of course, have not been making the acquaintance of the British Indomitable for the first time, for a year ago they saw the Indefatigable at New York on the occasion of Admiral Sir Edward Seymour's visit. Since then, however, Britain has completed a fourth ship of the type, the Indefatigable, which has been running trials lately, and Germany has commissioned her first Invincible, the Von der Tann, which will soon make a trial cruise to South America.

SCOTCH MARRIAGE LAWS NOT LAX

The Wife, However, Under Peculiar Statutes, Is Given Greater Relief Than in England.

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

THE peculiar marriage laws of Scotland have been ultra-ing a good deal of fresh interest since the "irregular" Scotch marriage of Mr. Frank Jay Gould and the young English actress Miss Edith Kelly. It is, indeed, a remarkable fact that the marriage laws of England and Scotland differ as widely as they do, but, then, it must be remembered that these different laws have existed, at least the Scotch law has, since before the union of the crowns and have never been altered. It is undoubtedly an easy matter to contract matrimony in Scotland, but it is not, after all, quite so easy as it is sometimes made out to be in fiction and on the stage.

It is remarked in M. A. P. that many a romance has been made to hinge upon such a plot as two persons playing in amateur theatricals going through a mock marriage, only to find themselves tied hard and fast for life. Of course this is sheer nonsense for the validity of marriage by declaration depends on the intention and free consent of the parties to be married. So in an irregular marriage obtained by fraud, force or fear in any way binding.

Common enough, however, is what is known as "marriage by repute or habit." If two persons have lived together as married, as addressed each other as husband and wife and permitted others so to address them in the Scottish law holds them married, although proof of marriage may be wanting even if, in fact, no ceremony has been gone through. Therefore the man who, as sometimes happens in England, goes through a form of marriage before a sham priest with a confiding girl and afterward repudiates the marriage could not escape in Scotland, for the courts would give the woman her rights.

There is also the "marriage by promise." Of course the women must satisfy the courts that marriage was promised, but, provided she can do so she can claim the man as her lawful wedded husband.

In Scotland it is quite unnecessary to be married in church, or even have a clergyman or registrar present, "marriage by declaration or acknowledgment" being held as binding as any other form. Here the contracting parties simply declare either verbally or in writing before two witnesses that they take each other for husband and wife, or that they have already done so. Registration is not even necessary, though it is usual sooner or later to apply to the Sheriff of the county to have the marriage recorded.

In England, of course a minor cannot legally marry without the consent of the parents or guardians, but in Scotland a minor need ask nobody's leave before marrying, provided the "man" is more than fourteen and the "woman" more than the venerable age of twelve.

Then in England, in default of a "special license," no marriage may take place after three o'clock in the afternoon. In Scotland, on the other hand, you may get married at any hour of the day or night. Another difference between English and Scotch law is that in Scotland children are legitimized by the subsequent marriage of the parents.

and over mountains isn't a bad record in this climate—your down-easters, Dearing, couldn't have made it. Oh yes, but I'm forgetting. Here's the—lady who guided us, riding in."

"Good heavens. Is there a woman with you?" said Henderson, still slightly dazed, as a white-robed mounted figure followed the last of the running files to enter the plaza.

"That's so!" said the newcomer, a trifle drily. "We couldn't well leave her behind us among the niggers, and she knew the country. I'd mighty hard work to stop her showing the cattle boys the way in. She seemed kind of anxious about somebody."

Dearing said nothing as he strode away, and next moment Henderson saw him standing bareheaded, broad hat in hand, beside a lathered horse, while Beatris Reina, whose glossy hair was thick with dust, smiled down upon him. Then, because discipline in that regiment was slack, some of the weary men grinned broadly, and some of them cheered.

It was some time before Henderson next saw his comrade, and then he met him at the Commandor's quarters in the departed Alcalde's house, where the officers regaled themselves upon his provisions, and some of the untamed Westerners experimented with forbidden liquors.

"I've arranged for Miss Reina's safe journey home, and something else," Dearing said with a smile. "It's strange how a man can make himself understood when he has to. You have seen me through the beginning, and mighty near the end—you've got to help me out with the sequel. We're to be married in Manila when this inglorious campaign is done. You'll promise, and shake hands on it, partner. Pity more of the rest of us couldn't shake hands, too. Tolerably promising sample of an International Alliance, eh?"

SOME STORIES OF TIM HURST

Timothy Hurst, umpire and one of the richest cards that ever got into the only game, is seriously ill, a blood-poisoned ankle having temporarily downed him, says W. A. Phelan. The doctors have hopes that he will pull through nicely, and both fans and players will pull for Tim to make good. Even Eddie Collins will hope for Tim's recovery, and it was on account of Collins that Tim passed out of the big game.

In the course of an argument two years back Tim wanted to expectorate. His eyes were not as good as they used to be and he used Collins' expression for a cuspidor. This, in the eyes of Ban Johnson, was stepping over the line of baseball etiquette and so Tim got the hook. Thus ended the big league career of the famous arbiter—the scrappiest umpire that ever lived and one of the most entertaining.

Stories could be told about Tim Hurst from the going down of the sun till dawn, and the supply wouldn't be half exhausted. He furnished more material for fun in the places where fans and players bunch together than any other man that was ever connected with baseball, and two-thirds of the good ones were never printed. Some of them couldn't be without using dots and dashes for two-thirds of the material.

AS A FIGHTER

Tim was a fighter. Always and incessantly. He didn't like to squeal about a kicking player—he considered that unmanly. His preference was to hand the player one on the nose, and he smote many an athlete with a hard but chastening hand. Even so late as last season he punched Kid Elberfeld right on the snoot and Ban Johnson punished Tim when he didn't report Elberfeld for disorder. One or two men claim to have beaten Tim in a fair fight, but they were much bigger men than the stocky umpire, while Al Weinig, the cyclist, was so puffed up over licking Hurst that he became a professional pugilist two days after the battle.

IN REPARTEE

When Tim shone brightest—brighter than even with his mitts—was in repartee. He was a master of soft and gentle language, and the toughest old-time players couldn't get one over on him when it came to an exchange of verbal courtesy. One afternoon at Chicago, when the old Baltimores were raging and fighting for a game, Jake Stenzel slid for the plate. "Out!" cried Hurst, and Jake rushed upon him like a devouring demon.

"You ——— ——— ———!" roared Jake; "what did you call me out for?"

"I called ya out," answered Tim, "ya stone-headed, useless Dutchman, because I felt like it. Gwan. Git to the bench before I stain me hands with your blood, ye German hyena." And Jake retired in confusion.

DAHLEN'S DAY

Said Bill Dahlen to Hurst one broiling summer day: "Tim, I want to get out of this game and go to the races. This weather would bake a dog. In the first inning I'll call you something and you'll understand I don't mean it, but you put me out of the game. All right? Thank you." And Bill galloped to his position while Hurst looked on him with a sinister grin.

In the middle of the first inning Dahlen called Tim something, all right—but Tim never said a word. In the second inning Bill repeated it with trimmings. Then spoke Bill in a stage whisper, "For Mike's sake, Tim, put me out of the game. I'm burning up."

And then to him spake Timotheus: "Get back to your job. Stay right there and sizzle, you fathead. You need the baking, anyway, and I wouldn't put you out if you called me as A. P. A."

MEEKIN'S SUIT

Jonett Meekin, once a great pitcher, came up to Tim one night at the hotel. Be it known that Mr. Meekin was an economical cuss and when he bought anything clothing, for example—it lasted him for many and many a day. Said Mr. Meekin to Mr. Hurst: "Tim, I'm going to a masquerade to-night. What costume could I wear?" "Why don't you wear that Prince Albert coat you've got these many years and go as a mirror?"

Mugs McGraw had Tim guessing once at that. Quoth J. Mugs during a red-hot game: "Tim if I should call you a so-and-so, what would you do?"

"I'd fine you $100, put you out av th' game, and lick you afterward," Tim promptly answered.

"But suppose I only thought it?" insisted McGraw.

"Well," growled Hurst, "I have no control over your thoughts."

"Let it go at that," said John. "I'm thinking it." And Hurst could only gaze on him with a sombre eye.

TEBEAU'S TRY

Pat Tebeau tried to terrorize Tim Hurst one day. Once and only once. It was in Cleveland, and at the time when the old Baltimores and the old Clevelands used to fight every battle like wolves and Bezel hounds. Pat sought Tim out before the game, and, pointing to the field crowd, held back by ropes—so great was public interest—remarked: "See that crowd, Tim?"

"I do. What av it?" snapped Hurst.

"Well, they're sore on you right now. So am I. And the first bad decision you soak us with I'm going to cut the ropes and let them in after you. Look out, now. I've warned you."

Hurst said never a word, but walked to his position. Ere long Joe Kelley came to bat. He ripped a long foul down the field, easy six feet from the line. "Fair ball!" roared Tim. "Run, Joe, run!" And as Kelley fled for three bases Hurst turned on Tebeau. "Sock cut the ropes, ye four-flushin' baloon!" he cried.

Pat didn't cut them.

WITH GRIFF

Hurst's last run-in with Clarke Griffith was funny. Griff, with the Highlanders, was playing at Chicago, and was coaching at first base. Some one in the pavilion chid a lemon at Griff, who scooped it as it rolled up, turned and instantly threw it to Hurst. Tim stopped the game, took off his mask and started for first base, making urgent and appropriate remarks as he advanced. Griff never waited for him, and for once, got out of the game without even waiting for the official ban.

There never was but one Tim Hurst. There couldn't be.

HER SILENCE COST HIM SIXTEEN YEARS IN JAIL

ADEL, IA., DEC. 9.—George Weems is home after serving sixteen years of a thirty-year sentence for the killing of Lucius Ridpath in 1891. Back of his return is a story that makes a strange appeal to the sympathies.

Weems always maintained that he had no hand in the crime with which he was charged and that one other person knew that as well as he did. That person was a woman in whose house he was at the time the deed was committed. She fled when the wounded man rushed to her door and died in front of her house.

She left Des Moines, married, became a mother, and refused to set free the man whose past was involved with her own. All she needed to have done was to have come forward with the true story of Weems' whereabouts, but in doing this she would have forever disgraced herself in the eyes of her husband and of the world. Consequently she let the law take its way with Weems.

Sitting in his old home, to-night, his aged father near by, Weems told his story:

"Circumstantial evidence was against me," he said. "Somewhere there lived a woman, whom I know as Kate Leary, who could have testified that I was innocent. On the night of the crime I was at her house near the scene of the murder. When I heard the shot fired, which I found later had killed Ridpath, I ran down stairs and met him staggering toward me. I asked him where he lived and he told me. I started to take him to his home, but he fainted in my arms. I laid him on the grass in the yard in front of the house. She left the city that night. All efforts to bring her back to Des Moines to testify in my behalf were unavailing. If she had spoken I would have gone free.

"Without her testimony my case was hopeless. I had been in the company of George Krout and Pete Hammil on the evening of the crime. Blood was later found on my clothing. Krout and Hammil were afterwards identified as the men to run away from the scene of the shooting. I was arrested, tried and sentenced to be hanged. Krout turned State's evidence and was freed. As I was about to be taken to the penitentiary my attorney made a last effort to find Kate Leary. She could not be found. Several years later, when I was in prison, my father and the lawyers found the woman. She begged to not be asked to tell what she knew.

"She was a young girl who fell in love with a man who deserted her. That man now ranks high in the political world. After she left Des Moines she married a fine man in an Iowa city. A child was born to them. Her husband does not know of her past. Not only would she have ruined her home by telling the story, but she would also have ruined the home of the man who played her false, but who is now married and has a family.

"During my imprisonment she tried hard to solve the question whether she should speak and break these two families, or whether she should remain silent and let me, who was nothing to her, suffer for a crime I never committed.

"Kate Leary could have saved me. That she did not the world knows. The past is gone. I suffered unjustly. My mother died of a broken heart four years ago. But for that I could hold no ill-will toward Kate Leary. She saw an opportunity to escape the past, took it, and as a result I was buried out of sight from a world I had a right to enjoy for sixteen years."

Weems' story has made a profound impression upon the people of Dallas county. His father, a civil war veteran spent a fortune in trying to establish the innocence of his son.

When the man just granted his freedom was asked what he intended to do he pointed to his father and said: "I shall devote my strength to easing the burdens of the faithful man who has spent all he had in my behalf."

Weems is not being shunned or passed coldly by. People are shaking him by the hand, speaking words of encouragement, and many have offered him places of responsibility.

The crime for which Weems was convicted was a brutal one. Ridpath a conductor, was shot down while walking on Third Street, Des Moines. Robbery is supposed to have been the motive. Weems, Krout and Hammil were arrested. Krout turned State's evidence and was released. Hammil is in an insane ward at the Anamosa penitentiary.

IMPORTANT SCIENTIFIC DISCOVERY.

A Clinical Preparation That Positively Kills the Dandruff Germ.

A most important discovery has been made after a year's patient laboratory work aimed in a certain direction. It is Newbro's Herpicide, a preparation that prevents falling hair, and speedily and permanently eradicates dandruff. These evils are caused by a germ or parasite that burrows into the scalp, throwing up dandruff, as it seeks to sap the life of the hair at the root. There's no baldness without falling or thin hair, no thin hair without dandruff, and no dandruff if the germ is destroyed. Newbro's Herpicide is the only preparation that will do the work. "Destroy the cause, you will remove the effect." Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c. in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich.

For sale by McDermid and Jury, druggists; also Payne's drug store. $1 bottles guaranteed.

THE BANK OF MONTREAL

THE PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS

In moving the adoption of the report the President, Mr. R. B. Angus, after a feeling reference to the death of the late President, Sir George Drummond, said, in part, that:

"The period under review has been marked by almost unbroken prosperity. The bountiful crops harvested during preceding years had raised the expectations of our farmers and excited the attention of intending immigrants, and although the bright prospects of the recent season were somewhat dimmed by the excessive drought of June and July, causing partial failure of the wheat crop in some districts of the West, the actual result has proved more favorable which under the conditions existing than was then anticipated. The latest estimate of the harvest from the Western grain fields, by parties well qualified to judge, gives a yield of

- 103 million bushels of oats
- 34 million bushels of barley and flax may be regarded as fairly satisfactory.

"Contributions through the stock exchanges and money markets of Europe to the financial enterprises of Canada have been extremely generous of late, and it is eminently desirable that the confidence thus displayed should not be abused.

"In the earnings of the railways, the export of factories and the large volume of commercial transactions there is evidence on every hand of enterprise and almost universal prosperity throughout the land. The statement of the Bank's affairs now submitted shows that this institution has participated to a considerable extent in these advantages; the net profits have been fair, about the same as last year, and would have been more ample had not the Bank met an unfortunate complication through the error of an agent and the failure of a foreign bank. The earlier rumors concerning this matter were much exaggerated and to the best of our knowledge the ultimate loss has been fully provided for.

"In reference to a question that has exercised the minds of some of our friends, who marvel that the Bank premises account remains at the comparatively modest figure of $600,000, while the known expenditures under that head have of late years been unusually large, the fact is, as stated, the explanation being that the Directors have been indisposed to burden their assets with any large item that could not be promptly converted into cash; and they have consequently charged directly against revenue the entire expenditure connected with the building extension and maintenance of the Bank's premises; these amounts have been considerable, owing to the necessity of opening branch offices in new settlements and enlarging facilities at important centres where business has outgrown the existing accommodation."

SIR EDWARD CLOUSTON

In seconding the adoption of the report, Sir Edward Clouston said in part:—

"In my address last year I made the remark that I should be very much disappointed if we did not make a better showing of profits during the year we have just passed through, and, though I did not say it, I had it in my mind that I might be able to suggest to the directors that it was time to do something for our shareholders in the way of a bonus. Unfortunately, my anticipations were not realized. Our profits show $28,000.00 less than last year.

The general statement, as you see by the copies you hold in your hands, is a strong one, and exhibits the steady progress the Bank is making. For the first time in our history our circulation exceeds our capital, and we were obliged to make use of the emergency circulation authorized by the Government.

Our deposits have increased $18,000,000, but this does not fairly show the actual increase in our regular deposits, as last year we had some large special deposits which were withdrawn during the year. Our readily realizable assets, that is, our reserves, are about the same, they show a slight decrease in percentage to our liabilities. The amount of money employed outside of Canada has been reduced $14,000,000. Fault has been found with us by critics who have not given sufficient consideration to the subject for keeping such large balances in other countries, but experience has taught us that it is not only safer for the Bank, but for Canada, that we should hold large reserves which we can draw on in case of necessity without disturbing financial conditions in our own country. The important position of the Bank of Montreal in the financial fabric involves the keeping of a large portion of our assets in a form immediately available for conversion into cash. Our responsibilities in this respect force us to be content with a very low return on the money we lend on call in London and New York, a return which for long periods during the past year was little better than 2 per cent. at either centre, and taxes to come out of that. It is not to be supposed that we would ignore the superior advantages of a 5 per cent. call rate in Canada, could we employ $10,000,000 or $20,000,000 here, with the certainty that we could get it back on three hours' notice any day we wanted it.

Of the increase in our investments, $5,000,000 is accounted for by the purchase of a municipal issue which has been largely disposed of since the close of the statement.

Our loans and advances have increased $21,000,000, and call for no special comment, except that they evidence that we are doing our share in assisting the development of our rapidly growing country.

In the discussion which followed, Mr. John Taylor held that the Directors had expended too much on bank premises.

Replying, the President said: "With regard to the Bank's premises, we have recently had prepared a careful estimate of the amount invested in bank premises, or rather of their present value, and find that the total amount would be somewhere between $7,000,000 and $8,000,000. But this extends over the whole Dominion. We have no less than 147 different buildings in that list, and while the shareholders might have had fuller particulars as to the progress of that account, enquiry at any time would have elicited the information we are now giving."

OFFICERS ELECTED

The old Board of Directors were re-elected. At a meeting of the Directors held later, the Right Honorable Lord Strathcona and Mount Royal, G.C.M.G., G.C.V.O., was elected Honorary President of the Bank; Mr. R. B. Angus, President; and Sir Edward Clouston, Bart., Vice-President.

WHAT DAD GETS

(Detroit Free Press.)

A fan for sister Mary,
A sleigh for brother Fred,
An opal ring for Jennie,
A diamond pin for Ned;
For mother—yes, God bless her!—
The best that can be had;
A train of cars for Willie;
A two-bit pipe for dad

Cut glass for good aunt Susan,
A music-roll for Flo,
A flaming vest of scarlet
For jolly uncle Joe.
Fine things for everybody—
And isn't it too bad
Nobody will go stronger than
A two-bit pipe for dad?

STOMACH DISTRESS AND DYSPEPSIA GO

Makeup Your Out-of-order Stomach Post Haste in Five Minutes

As there it often some one in your family who suffers an attack of indigestion or some form of Stomach trouble, why don't you keep some Diapepsin in the house handy?

This harmless blessing will digest anything you can eat without the slightest discomfort, and overcome a sour, gassy Stomach five minutes after.

Tell your pharmacist to let you read the formula plainly printed on these 50-cent cases of Pape's Diapepsin, then you will readily see why it makes Indigestion, Sour Stomach, Heartburn and other distress go in five minutes, and relieve at once such miseries as Belching of Gas, Eructations of sour, undigested food, Nausea, Headaches, Dizziness, Constipation and other Stomach disorders.

Some folks have tried so long to find relief from Indigestion and Dyspepsia or an out-of-order stomach with the common, over-day cures advertised that they have about made up their minds that they have something else wrong, or believe theirs is a case of Nervousness, Gastritis, Catarrh of the Stomach or Cancer.

This, no doubt, is a serious mistake. Your real trouble is, what you eat does not digest; instead, it fermants and sours, turns to acid, Gas and Stomach poison, which putrefy in the digestive tract and intestines, and, besides, poison the breath with nauseous odours.

A healty appetite, with thorough digestion, and without the slightest discomfort or misery of the Stomach, is waiting for you as soon as you decide to try Pape's Diapepsin.

FROM ORILLIA TO PETERBOROUGH BY BOAT

It looks as if a complete daily steamboat service will next season be inaugurated on the Trent Canal, between Orillia and Rice Lake. This seems to be quite an undertaking, for there are many who might think that a daily steamboat service on the division between Babam Lake and Lake Simcoe would not be a paying venture. It is a big proposition, but there are big men behind it. The fact of the matter is, that most people of this district do not realise the great field for development as a summer resort between Orillia and Rice Lake. It has been the custom heretofore to cater entirely to local traffic. There were few indeed who appreciated the extent of the possibilities for through tourist traffic over the completed portions of the Trent Canal.

It is not officially given out, what interests are behind the Peterborough and Lake Simcoe Navigation Company, the latest marine undertaking on the local waters, but it is pretty generally hinted that the C.P.R. is closely identified with the proposition. As is well known this Company has taken over the entire fleet of the Otonabee Navigation Company and it is stated further that the Stony Lake Navigation Company, of Young's Point, could receive a handsome sum for their interests. The Peterborough and Lake Simcoe Navigation Company in any event will build several new vessels that will be particularly suited to the requirements of these waters, and will, for speed and comfort, take second place to no boats of their size in the Province. A schedule is now being mapped out providing for a complete daily service from Orillia, Barrie, Jackson Point, Beaverton and other points on Lake Simcoe to Rice Lake. This Company is after through tourist traffic and they will likely get it. An elaborate campaign of advertising is being launched. It cost several hundred thousand dollars, it is said, in advertisement, for the Grand Trunk to make Muskoka a tourist resort, and it is generally believed that the Trent Canal route will be made equally as popular, even if it takes a like amount during the next few years.

The Peterborough and Lake Simcoe Navigation Company has recently issued the most complete map of the Trent Canal district that has ever been published. These, together with splendidly gotten up literature, will be sent broadcast throughout Canada and the United States and there is reason to believe that next summer will see the busiest tourist season yet, on the chain of Lakes that stretch from Orillia to Rice Lake.

Interesting Paragraphs From Queen's University

Kingston, Dec. 10.—With the approach of the Christmas examinations, and the holding of the Alma Mater elections and numerous important lectures and debates, the past week has been a particularly busy one for the students. The election took place Saturday and resulted as follows:—President, Mr. E. L. Bruce, B.Sc., Copper Cliff, Ont.; 1st Vice-Pres., Mr. J. E. Carmichael, B.Sc., Kingston; 2nd Vice-Pres., Mr. W. J. Lamb, M.A., Walkerton; Critic, W. M. Goodwin, B.A., Kingston; Treas., Hugh Young, (accl.) Renfrew; Sec., Hugh Mackinnon, Cape Breton; Asst. Sec., Roger F. Clarke, Woodstock; Committeemen, R. V. McCarley, B.A., Brockville; J. C. Smith, Weyburn, Sask.; J. H. Ramsay, Ottawa; E. Sliter, Kingston. The election was a keen one throughout, nearly all of the students voted and the majorities were small in most cases.

The first two of the inter-University debates were held on Dec. 1st. The McGill team debated against the Queen's representatives in the Convocation Hall, on the subject of Reciprocity with the United States. Four splendid speeches were given on the subject and the Queen's team won by a narrow margin. The next debate will be held in January between Queen's and the winners of the Toronto-Ottawa debate.

Last Sunday afternoon's service was conducted by Professor Jackson of Victoria College, Toronto. Convocation Hall was filled to the door to hear the well-known author and preacher.

The Central Ontario Alumni Association of Queen's held its annual reunion and dinner at Peterborough last week. Representatives from McGill, McMaster and Toronto Universities took part in the programme. Professors Knight and Campbell and Laird went from Queen's. Rev. Jas. Wallace of Lindsay was chosen President for the coming year and it was decided to hold the next reunion in Lindsay.

An address was given to the students this week by Professor Kylie of the Department of History in Toronto University. Professor Kylie is a master in his Department and his address attracted the attention of a large crowd of students.

Among those who spoke at the Arts dinner on Friday night were Hon. Geo. P. Graham, Minister of Railways, Ottawa, and Mr. Justice Riddell. Several other prominent speakers were present. With such speakers as these the Arts Dinner should keep up its reputation as one of the most popular functions of the year.

SCHOOL OF MINING

A very interesting and instructive address was given the Engineering Society on Thursday of last week by Dr. F. J. Pope, of New York. The subject was "Examining and valuing of a mine." Dr. Pope is a graduate of Queen's and one who is well known in mining circles in Canada, United States and Mexico. He is at present consulting engineer for John Hays Hammond, the millionaire Mining Expert of New York. Dr. Pope's address was made particularly valuable to the students by his large store of first-hand information on the subject of mining.

More attention is being given the Christmas examinations this year than in former years. The regulation requiring the first year science students to pass a certain number of the papers or discontinue their year's work is to be strictly enforced. The adoption of this was felt to be necessary by the authorities to prevent useless waste of the student's time.

A REVERSED DECISION

A Short Story

"Why, Dave Gordon, of all fellows, I didn't dream of seeing you here," and Fred Boynton squeezed his friend's hand as if he premeditated reducing it to a pulp. "Margaret did not say you were here when I met her at her father's place last week. Say, Gordon, old man, I envy you a woman like that; and that rascal, David Jr. If you could here him crowing about what 'Father says and father does' you would certainly need replenishing of headgear. The boy has elevated you on a pedestal, man, and Margaret helps him burn incense before his idol."

Boynton had raced on in in his impulsive, boyish way, not giving his friend a chance to make any remarks. As he paused, David Gordon flecked the ashes of his cigar over the piazza railing, meditatively watching it flutter onto the velvety lawn beneath.

"To tell you the truth, Fred, I did not tell Margaret I was coming," Gordon at last said slowly. "I'm not here for pleasure. It was a business matter that has kept me here for the past four days. I'm due at Effing to-morrow, and to-night decides whether I go to Margaret a rich man or—a ruined one.

Fred Boynton stared in wonderment at his companion. The latter man smiled faintly as he noticed his friend's amusement. "It's my invention. You never heard of it, I see. It's a coupling device for railroads and I have staked my all on it. If it fails me to-night I am practically down and out. I have been trying to interest Mr. Ashcroft, President of the W. P. Railroad, who is at this place, and he has consented to an interview to-night. The appliance is practical and useful, but rather expensive at the start. Two roads have already turned it down, and now all my hopes are centred in Mr. Ashcroft. If I can only convince him that it will be a money saver in the end, success is certain."

Boynton sighed and gazed thoughtfully over the piazza railing at the dazzling blue expanse of water, which a brisk breeze was whishing into white-caps. He was sorry for Gordon. He felt that he had made a big mistake in taking such a chance.

"I certainly hope you will succeed, old man," he said at length. "I don't know much about inventions, and I'm too lazy to try to become better informed on the subject. But I wish you the best of luck."

Gordon had risen and was looking at his watch. The time for the interview has arrived. "Good-by, Fred," he said, grasping the young man's hand. "Thanks for the good wishes. I take the midnight for New York and will be with Margaret to-morrow."

The interview with Mr. Ashcroft was a long one. He was a shrewd, experienced man of business, and although David Gordon's proposition appealed to him in many ways, he refused to be convinced of its practicability, although acknowledging its great merit. Gordon talked until he could talk no further. The president's decision was final. He would not install the invention.

* * * * * *

The afternoon shadows were lengthening and a gray shaft of the fast sinking sun pierced the mass of apple blossoms and foliage and rested halo like, on the bowed head of David Gordon, sitting motionless on a rustic seat beneath the tree. The drooping shoulders told of dejecton and despair, and as he lifted his haggard face from his upturned palms at the sound of an opening gate, one could see that the firm lines about his mouth had been intensified by suffering. He drew in his breath sharply as he beheld Margaret, like a vision, framed in a mass of rambled roses that grew in profusion over the gateway. Her soft, dark hair was tied with crimson ribbon the shade of the roses, and the crimson satin at her waist gave an added touch of beauty to her pure white muslin dress. Her brown eyes grew wide with surprise on finding her husband in the garden, and one glance told her something was wrong. Dropping the sofa cushions and magazines she was carrying, she crossed quickly to his side. "David" she said in a startled tone. "I did not know you had arrived. Are you ill? What has happened?"

Briefly he told her of his latest interview and failure. She knew what it meant for him—and for her. But she laughed away his fears. "I had rather have you be a man and fail than never to have tried at all," she said earnestly. "I am not afraid of being poor. I can cook and sew and sweep, and you can keep on trying. Some day I know you will win."

"God bless you, dear," he said. "I will always be wealthy in possessing such a jewel."

The gate was opened, this time more violently, and David, Jr., tumbled in. "Hi, father," he screamed "Grandpa said you were in the garden and told me to bring you this. A little boy with gold buttons on his coat just brought it.

David Gordon tore open the telegram. It read: "Have reversed decision. Invention O. K. Accept same, your terms."—Boston Post.

CAME TO END OF IT

SOUTH NORWALK, CONN., DEC. 9.—Because he loved his wife so much, was the reason given by Joseph Sturges Billum, twenty-one years old, and a bridegroom of but two months, for his killing himself at his home here. Billum used the lace from his wife's corsets to hang himself, and left this note:

"I love Nellie, so I can neither work nor sleep; in fact I am no earthly use. Good-bye.

JOE."

The suicide was deliberate, Billum tying the lace to a doorknob and putting his head through a noose.

Death is believed to have been slow and painful, yet Mrs. Billum, who was on the floor above at the time, never heard a sound. Billum leaves an invalid mother in Ridgefield, and the shock of her son's end has made her condition critical. The bereaved wife was formerly Miss Nellie Neville, the daughter of Mrs. Margaret Neville, of Valley Place, at whose home the young couple lived. Billum, while a steady worker before his marriage, had done nothing but stay about the house and admire his wife since the nuptials. Nothing seemed to arouse him from lethargy, and while he was happy, apparently, he could not bear to have his wife leave his sight.

Men Who Are "Sterling" Millionaires

LONDON, DEC. 6.—One hears a great deal about American multi-millionaires, but there are a few of them still left in England. The Chancellor of the Exchequer, for instance, has come into over $15,000,000 as a result of the death of two English multi-millionaires.

Mr. Charles Morrison was a very old man, but little known in "the City," but was generally thought to be very wealthy. But even financiers little dreamed that his estate would be worth £11,000,000, or over $55,000,000, with some assets still to be accounted for. And, remember, that under the English Estates Act the executors naturally keep down the assets to the smallest possible figures. There are no inflated or watered stocks in assets accounted for to the English Government, as every pound has to pay succession duty. The collateral and bonds are there to the last farthing.

Mr. Beit, who left $40,000,000, is the English Jew who, with Barney Barnato, Cecil Rhodes and others of that clique, made their millions and pounds sterling out of diamonds and gold in South Africa. It is doubtful if any of the much-vaunted American millionaires could show up gilt-edged securities, guines for guines, with these two little-heard-of men.

In regard to the estate of Mr. Charles Morrison of Harley street, W., and of the Forestreet Warehouse Co., who died May 25, 1909, at the age of 91, which was originally sworn for probate in 1909 at the record figure of £6,868,866 13s. 4d., "as far as present can be ascertained," as been reworn as of the value of £10,938,866 13s. 4d. This is an increase on the previous figures of £4,270,000, and possibly the tale of his fortune is not yet complete.

On the figures of this reworn valuation the estate duty alone amounts to £1,840,866, and it would appear that the total levy of the Exchequer in the form of various death duties will probably amount to about two millions of pounds.

The estate has also been reworn of the late Mr. Alfred Beit, of 26 Park Lane, W., and of Messrs. Wernher, Beit & Co., of London Wall Buildings. He died July 16, 1906, at the age of 53 years, leaving about two millions for public use, of which £1,200,000 was left to trustees for the development of communications in Africa. His estate was sworn not long after his death at £3,000,000, but it has been reworn at which is presumably the final figure of £8,048,816 0s. 8d.

Mr. Beit's estate for purposes of death duties came under Sir William Harcourt's Act of 1894, and the estate duty payable in respect thereof amounts to £843,980. Some two and a half million pounds of his property pays legacy duty at the rate of ten per cent., and on the balance three per cent. would be payable, making the total Exchequer levy on his property about £1,600,000.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

HAVE you got it done yet, as you really ought to have, or are you in the midst of it, as you probably are, or have you it all still to do?

What?—why your Christmas shopping, of course, who on the earth or off it—wonder if they have Christmas in the inhabited planets—is thinking of anything else at this time of the year?

If you haven't got the subject of Christmas along with your Christmas presents neatly done up in white paper, tied with red ribbon and put away in your bureau drawer, here are a few disjointed do's-and-don'ts on the subject.

Don't make up a list planning what you are going to spend on each person, be cajoled by attractive showings as the stores into spending "just a little more" on each gift, and then be amazed that the sum total is so astonishingly in excess of your original appropriation.

(I do it every year so I can warn you with much feeling.)

Don't be afraid to give people things they sometimes make themselves. Last year an aunt of mine who at one time or another has knitted bedroom slippers for almost everybody in Christendom, had a pair of bedroom slippers given her by the only friend who doesn't know her slipper knitting proclivities.

We thought she would be disappointed but she was delighted. "My dears," she said, "I've been using the most dilapidated slippers for the last three years, because I knit so many to give away that I just didn't have time to make any for myself."

Take that hint and don't be afraid to give embroidery to some friend who embroiders. Ten to one, she either doesn't have time or doesn't like to do it for herself.

If you have some friend who has hard work to make both ends meet, don't invariably say, "I must give her something useful," and deluge her with homely useful things, but occasionally vary the monotony by giving her some pretty, dainty, frivolous gift. There are heart needs as well as body needs and by giving her a dainty jabot or pretty pin you may satisfy a craving for something pretty, as imperative as the craving for food or drink.

* * *

Don't forget the red cross stamps. The post office issued an edict last year that these stamps should not be placed on the front of letters or packages because of the confusion that this causes in the post office department but you may put as many as you like on the back of letters and packages and use them as stickers, and in this way you may help furnish the sinews of war for one of the greatest fights that ever was waged — the battle against the great white plague in America.

* * *

Do, if you can keep it, sign the pledge. It was circulated by some enthusiastic young reformers and called "Yours for a courageous, sincere and Christly Christmas—

"I will give no gift which I cannot afford.

"I will give no gift which has not love behind it.

"I will give some gifts which shall not be exchange gifts at all but genuine generosity to someone to whom it will mean very much."

* * * * * *

I have often wondered why it is so much harder to select a gift that will really please, for a man than for a woman.

It is that the men are more fussy?

Or have they fewer needs?

Or is it because having possession of the purse strings they are more apt to have filled their needs.

Well, I'll leave that to my men readers to answer, and proceed to my original theme, which is to make a few suggestions as to the sort of masculine gifts which might be acceptable—or perhaps "might not offend" is the strongest I dare put it.

Please don't think these ideas are evolved at random from a feminine mind. They are culled from discussions of the subject with all the men I could persuade to take the matter seriously.

In the first place there are about a half dozen articles which, by virtue of being named by all the men consulted, deserve to head the list. These are—

Gloves—white gloves, everyday gloves, preferably of castor or dogskin, and furlined gloves, if your purse is that long. If you don't know the proper size you can have recourse to the "glove certificate."

Handkerchiefs—these, according to the consensus of masculine opinion, are an absolutely safe gift, because there is seldom a person who has too many, and also because it would be rather difficult to get a handkerchief that would be objectionable even to the most finicky masculine taste. A hand embroidered initial in the corner is considered a great addition even by the most fanatic disciples of severity. A half dozen nice handkerchiefs thus embroidered are a gift which would doubtless be most acceptable to father, brother, cousin or friend.

Socks were a third generally favoured article. That men who shudder at the thought of allowing anyone to pick out a single tie for them are willing and ready to accept as a gift a whole box of socks with all the possibilities of varied coloured horrors which such a gift involves, is another problem in masculine psychology to me, but according to the persons I have interviewed, it is a fact.

Books are another general favourite. Either present day novels or standard works will be welcomed. If the man for whom you are selecting the gift has a fad—bird study, postage stamps, hunting, etc. — you can hardly please him more than by looking up the newest book on his subject and presenting it to him. He will probably be both touched by your thoughtfulness and delighted by the gift itself.

A year's subscription to some good magazine is another gift that can hardly fail to please the most finicky man. Provided of course you use some discrimination in the selection of the magazine. And with the extraordinary "magazine bargains" that are being offered nowadays, even a short purse might afford to give two or three magazines.

These are first favourites—gifts that please almost all men—gifts that had the unanimous approval of all the men whose views I obtained on this much discussed subject.

And now as my space has been used up, suppose I tell you some of the also-rans to-morrow.

EDISON ON AEROPLANES

Edison also has ideas concerning aeroplanes. Conversing with a New York "Tribune" reporter the other day on the subject, he said: "It is my belief that a sky craft built on the helicopeter type would be the most practical. A flying machine should have a direct lift, and that could be accomplished with a type of this kind. And the machine should be lifted and kept afloat not by one rotating wheel, but say with about a dozen such, like so many merry-go-rounds. The arrangement of the wheels or rotating planes should be such that they would form a large circle of say 150 feet diameter. A machine of this size would have more stability than a smaller one and hence be more reliable in treacherous wind currents.

"As can be readily seen, all the weight of machinery, passengers and freight would be suspended some distance below the rotating planes, and would bring the centre of gravity so far downward that capsizing of the craft would be practically impossible. The vessel could be lifted directly upward from the ground, from an elevated station or from the roof of a building, and when it should become necessary to descend the same perpendicular drop could be made.

"The speed of the rotating planes would determine the rapidity of ascent and descent, but in no case would a drop to earth, through some failure of the motor to work, be rapid. The great surface area of the lifting wheels, whose lifting capacity would be brought about by shutter-like propellers diverging from the hub, would resist the wind and form a sort of parachute that would break a sudden drop of the craft.

"The forward motion of such an air craft could be accomplished by a series of propellers arranged as those that now drive aeroplanes and the machine ought also to have stationary planes, which would serve as the resisting surface for the machine while in flight.

"Could storage batteries be used as the motive force for such an airship?" asked the reporter.

"No, they could not," answered Edison without hesitation. "Storage batteries to produce sufficient power for such a vessel would be entirely too heavy for the machine. The force would have to come from a prime motor of proper construction and reliability.

"If we only could harness the powers of radium, we would have an ideal motive force for the vessels of the air. Just think—there is enough power in onehandful of radium to drive the Mauretania from New York to Liverpool, and you can well imagine what such power with almost no weight could do for flying machines. Some day we must get it. Any day some chemist may hit upon a cheap way to extract radium from its base."

W.C.T.U. ITEMS OF INTEREST

The matter in this department is supplied by the Peterborough Branch of The Women's Christian Temperance Union, which has arranged for its publication.

Be strong!
We are not here to play, to dream, to drift!
We have hard work to do and loads to lift;
Shun not the struggle—face it, 'tis God's gift.

Be strong!
Say not the days are evil—who's to blame?
And fold the hands and acquiesce—O shame!
Stand up, speak out, and bravely in God's name!

Be strong!
It matters not how deep intrenched the wrong,—
How hard the battle goes—the day how long,— Faint not! Fight on! To-morrow comes the song!

—M. D. Babcock.

How Richard H. Roberts, late first lieutenant in the Twenty-first Lancers, the flower of Britain's troops, who through drink became a "panhandler" on Park Row, and got on his feet again was told by himself at the Jerry McAuley Mission.

He is now the travelling representative of one of the largest cereal mills of the country.

After a score of men had told how they had been saved from drink and other evils for from six days to as many months, Lieutenant Roberts gave his experience, speaking with an earnestness which thrilled the audience.

"I was born on the other side—the old country. I had a good home—three homes as a matter of fact, we had a town house, a country house and a shooting box. I had a good father and a beautiful mother; when everyone else in the world had forsaken me my dear old mother stuck to me.

"I promised dear old dad and mother that I would never drink. I had everything a young man could wish for, money and clothes and all else. I never thought I was going to be a drunkard—always said I would not be. But I had hardly left home before I began to nibble at beer, and after a time I took to brandy and soda. Before I knew it I was in the clutches of drink.

"In India, where I spent some years with my regiment, I learned to love drink, and twenty-one years of my life were given up to drink. My appetite grew and finally I lost my commission.

"I've been in sanitariums in all parts of the world, for it was not a question of money. I only lived to drink.

"Then I lost all I had. I sold the home, my dear old mother's home, and it broke her heart. Finally I found myself in New York. Friends helped me to good positions, as high as $300 a month, but I could not hold them. It got so at last that I could not hold a $10 job.

"Nine years ago I found myself drifting, a total wreck, sleeping in the back rooms of saloons, on park benches, or trucks, wrapped in pieces of newspaper.

"I have worked on oyster boats and travelled as a hobo or in city to city, panhandling for drink. Every instinct of the gentleman was lost I had ceased to be a man, going lower and lower.

LANDED IN GUTTER

"I walked the streets Winter and Summer carrying signs, actually in the gutter for drink, until I could not even hold that job. I served as 'supe' in the theatres and delivered circulars. I have stood in the breadline on Broadway and Tenth Street, and know what it is to be refused a crust of bread at the kitchen door.

"For a long time I slept in 'Nick' Sullivan's saloon and at last was kicked out of that as no good, and then slept in the Mulberry Bend pavillion. Many times I had visited the alcoholic wards of Manhattan and Brooklyn.

"I woke up one day a year ago and saw two men near me and went to panhandle them for a drink. One of them told me to go to the McAuley Mission. I hadn't heard of this place.

"I don't know how I got here, but I staggered in the door that night. Every other door was barred to me. The potter's field was my only hope, and I was ragged and filthy.

"MOTHER'S SONG"

"I heard the testimonies, but didn't believe them I slept part of the time, helpless, hopeless, not a particle of manhood left—sold body and soul for drink. Then I woke to hear them singing, 'I love to tell the Story' that was mother's song. She sang it to me on her knees when putting me to bed.

Then they sang another of my mother's songs: 'Nearer, my God, to Thee,' and I fancied I could see her. I staggered up to the altar and knelt and asked mother's God to take me.

"A few days later I got a job beating carpets and earned $3.50 and that was enough to tide me over until I got another job. I hold that today. I have a bank account and I have a faith in God that sustains me and keeps me from drink."

Dr. Montague Geer, vicar of St. Paul's chapel, told the audience that Lieutenant Roberts was one of his valued communicants, and a helper and friend.—New York Evening Mail.

COLPORTEUR IN COURT

Geo. Buskin is Charged With Non-Support

TORONTO, DEC. 8.—George Buskin has arrived at a late stage in life to have domestic infelicity. Through grey haired and of considerable age, he ventured in matrimony a year ago. This morning the wife, of about equal age, and quaintly garbed, came before Magistrate Denison to charge her husband with non-support. Buskin is prominently known all through the northern country and among the lumber districts as a distributor of Bibles.

Immediately Buskin doubted the genuineness of their marriage, but seemingly the other party was prepared for this. She had a package of papers, one was a marriage certificate signed by the Rev. J. E. Stoot, the other a divorce from her former husband to whom she had been married in Bristol 33 years ago and had parted with in Kansas. Later, she said, he had died.

With this difficulty removed, there appeared another trouble which had been mentioned to Crown Attorney Corley.

"He says," stated that official, "that he fears you are insane, and that he has offered to send you to the asylum for examination."

"Well, I've worked for thirty-three doctors," she declared. "and though three said I wasn't right, seven said I was sane."

An adjournment till Monday was granted to allow further investigation.

RUBBER-NECK AEROPLANES

Special to The Examiner.

SAN FRANCISCO, DEC. 8.—A "rubber neck" aeroplane in time may supplant the automobile omnibus of the present that bears the first part of that name, if a machine entered in the coming aviation meeting in San Francisco should prove a success. The machine, which is a "multiplane," is equipped to carry a dozen or more passengers. Its motive power is four separate engines of 75 horse-power each. The machine is entered by W. P. Spear, an aero enthusiast of Vallejo. It has been assigned to the novice class, but is said already to have made several successful flights.

AN UMPIRE CONVERTED

Special to The Examiner.

It is announced that an umpire, "Bull" Johnstone, will speak at the Jerry McAuley Mission to-night. Religion's sway is great, indeed.
We've seen a burglar weep
When some one with a kindly creed
Moved hidden feelings deep.
The peculating bank cashier,
The footpad violent,
The tricky shover of "the queer"—
We've seen them all repent.
But there was one wrongdoer great
Who we were sure would stay
In his despised, unhallowed state
Until the Judgment Day.
But no! He too has seen the light:
Bad ways he has deserted.
Ho, fans! This is your happy night!
An umpire's been converted!

"THE SWEETEST OF ALL THE CHARITIES."

Will You Help It In Its Hour of Need....?

THE HOSPITAL FOR SICK CHILDREN

COLLEGE STREET, TORONTO

READY FOR MOTHER.

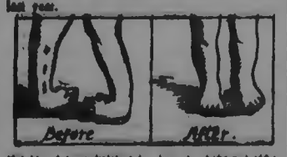
This institution did more work in 1910 than ever before. Total In-Patients 1,224. Of these, 783 were from the city and 441 from the country.

Since its organization, the Hospital has treated in its cots and beds 16,637 children; 12,370 of these were unable to pay, and were treated free.

There were 60 cases of club feet corrected last year.



THE HOSPITAL IS A PROVINCIAL CHARITY.

The sick child from the most remote corner of Ontario has the same claim as the child living within sight of the great House of Mercy in College Street, Toronto. Our cause is the children's cause. Could there be one that has a stronger claim on the people of this Province?

Posture results in Hawley cases. 10 infant were relieved of this terrible deformity last year.

If the Hospital is to continue its great work, a great appeal to your pocketbook is as well as to your heart. Let your Dollars be messages of mercy to the suffering little children of Ontario.

Please send your contribution to J. Ross Robertson, Chairman, or to Douglas Lockhart, Secretary-Treasurer, The Hospital for Sick Children, College St., Toronto.

A CHANCE FOR THE GOOD FELLOWS OF PETERBOROUGH TO HELP A GOOD CAUSE

WHAT CAN BE DONE

There are a lot of good fellows in Peterborough and the Examiner is going to make a proposal, by which, if taken up, the young men of this city will be given an opportunity to prove to the public their large heartedness and their concern for those in a less fortunate position than themselves. Christmas, the season of gift giving, is first to the little children and of these there are many in Peterborough who would not have all the good things of Christmas were it not for the kindly disposed of our better class of citizens. A Montreal paper as well as several papers in the United States, simultaneous with the Examiner have taken up the idea of the Lodge of Good Fellows, and those who have tried it in previous years have met with a great deal of success, have made many happy homes that otherwise would not have been. It is not a newspaper scheme. It is simply an effort to aid children whose lives are marred by poverty and the want of a little good cheer.

Many young men go out for a good time on Christmas Eve and spend large amounts of money and many little boys and girls are left to awaken on Christmas morning with the bitter disappointment that Santa Claus has forgotten them. The young man will probably say that it wasn't his fault that they were without. He had provided for his own. Perhaps in the one hundred and one things he had to do, he didn't think of the heart sorrow of the child over the empty stocking.

There is a splendid chance to exercise this grand spirit, of giving to the needy in this city. There is not a young man in Peterborough who does not know of some little lads or little girls that would be helped and cheered by gift. It might be fifty cents or fifty dollars that a young man might spend, but no matter how much it is, the feeling of joy that will come to every fellow, will make his Christmas happier. The officers of the Children's Aid Society or the City Relief Society will be able to lend us a hand in the young man who feels they have not many of the needy boys and girls here. Perhaps a twenty-five cents or ten cent toy would not mean much to the prosperous young fellow but it will mean a whole lot to the boy or girl that would otherwise have found an empty stocking. The charitable organizations attend to the wants in regard to the bread and meat, the clothes and other necessaries, but this is a suggestion to the Good Fellows, to furnish the toys, nuts and candies, the child's real joy at Christmas.

This is merely a suggestion of the Examiner, but after reading it, if a young man is not filled with the desire to do something for the young boys and girls of this city who are in need, then the true joy of Christmas is not for him.

$3.50 Recipe Cures Weak Kidneys, Free

Wouldn't it be nice within a week or so to begin to say goodbye forever to the scalding, dribbling, straining or too frequent passage of urine; the forehead and the back-of-the-head aches; the stitches and pains in the back; the growing muscle weakness spots before the eyes; yellow skin sluggish bowels; swollen eyelids; leg cramps; unnatural short breath; sleeplessness and the despondency?

I have a recipe for these troubles that you can depend on, and if you want to make a quick recovery, you ought to write and get a copy of it. Many a doctor would charge you $3.50 just for writing this prescription, but I have it and will be glad to send it to you entirely free. Just drop me a line like this: Dr. A. E. Robinson, K1810 Luck Building, Detroit Mich., and I will send it by return mail in a plain envelope. As you will see when you get it, this recipe contains only pure, harmless remedies, but it has great healing and pain-conquering power.

It will quickly show its power once you use it, so I think you had better see what it is without delay. I will send you a copy free—you can use it and cure yourself at home.

THE SIX CHILDREN OF THE KING OF ENGLAND

By Gaston Davenay

Children—the children of all civilized countries—generally have false ideas about the life of the children of kings. Has not a king's son everything he wants, even before expressing a desire for it? Is he not master? And is not "to do as I like" the motto of these privileged beings who are getting ready to inherit kingdoms? Well, it is altogether wrong to think like that, for the truth is far different. Young princes are subject to a discipline that may often seem very severe to the spoiled children of today. So the grandchildren of King Edward VII. are justly considered the most studious and the best brought up children in England.

Princess Mary is thirteen years old. She has fine blood hair and the blue eyes of the Queen her mother. She gives promise of having also her tall, slender figure. She has been brought up in London with her parents at Marlborough House. She receives lessons from the best teachers, and her fondness for study, as well as her precocious grace, will make her in a very few years an accomplished princess.

Prince Albert, the second son of King George and Queen Mary, is fourteen. He is still too young to have got himself talked about. Prince Henry is ten, but he suffers from very poor health, which gives his parents endless worry. Prince George is eight and Prince John almost five. They are charming babies, who make Marlborough House lively with all the happy carelessness of their age.

But, before all others, there is Prince Edward, who is just sixteen, having been born on June 23, 1894. He is a handsome lad, full of high spirits and good humor. He pursues his studies with an earnest desire to make himself worthy to wear his noble crown. And as all England's power lives in her ships, which furrow all the seas of the earth, its future King is learning the profession of a sailor, as his father, King George, did before him.

For two years he has been one of the best pupils in the naval School at Dartmouth. His title of heir-apparent gives him no privileges. He shares the work, the play, the meals of his companions. If he deserves to be punished he is punished, but up to now he has not deserved it, for he knows that good example ought to come from above. On holidays he rejoins his family in London without discarding his sailor's costume. He is already extremely popular. His kindness, his perfect courtesy, his unaffected way with all his school fellows make him loved by everybody.

All these charming qualities made this young prince out of the pet grandchildren of King Edward VII. And the good grandpa would not yield to anyone else the pleasure of giving the boy his first pony and, when he was seven years old, his first bicycle. For Prince Edward is devoted to all sports. He swims like a fish. He boxes and plays football; in one word, he is a true Englishman.

His fondness for manly sports does not stand in the way of his having a heart of gold. A saying of his which proves how his kindness can reach even to the smallest of things has been quoted:

"When I am King," he said one day, "nobody shall cut puppies' tails."

Deep affection unites the six children of the new King and Queen of England, and the holidays that bring them together about the family table seem only too short. The King who worships his children, takes them off on long walks. He takes them to races and to the football matches that are so numerous in England. He explains to them all the intricacies of the game, and certainly from this arises the taste for sport which the young princes display.

Sometimes the whole family goes to the big lake which adorns the park at Buckingham Palace. Upon the water they set afloat a whole fleet of little ships, which King George gave as a present to his children, and it is by playing with them that the young princes prepare themselves to be sailors. In the summer the whole family goes for a long stay at the royal castle at Balmoral in Scotland, and there a real patriarchal life unfolds.

In one of the immense gardens that surround the domain a corner for the children has been set aside. Each one is proprietor of a piece of land. Upon each a miniature cottage has been built; each has its flet beds and its little shed in which all the tools of a perfect gardener are piled up. Around these small buildings stretch the pleasure garden and the vegetable garden. Each little prince has the right to dig, to sow, to plant and to make in his property any changes he may deem necessary to the well-being of his vegetables.

The most friendly yet nevertheless the most keen rivalry agitates the young farmers. Who will produce the earliest and the highest quality? They keep posted on all the discoveries of intensive farming and they take as great care of their vegetable gardens as they do of their flowers.

Building Permits Show A Decrease Of 11 Per Cent. For Month Of October

In Spite of the Fact That Work in Eighteen Important Centres is 89 Per Cent. Greater Than That Undertaken Last Year.

"CONSTRUCTION'S" FIGURES

It is quite evident from the extent of operations that are now being carried on that the lateness of the season has had but little effect on building activities as far as Canada is concerned. While the total investment possibly does not equal that attained in certain of the spring and summer months, no similar period in the past has witnessed in general a more marked and consistent development.

In the eighteen cities reporting to Construction for October, the total aggregate for permits issued amounted to $8,638,399, as compared with $4,870,506 in the same month of last year. But three decreases in all are noted, and in two of these cases the loss (less than one per cent.) is so infinitely small as to be hardly worth while taking into consideration. On the whole, the country marched forward at a most substantial clip. Toronto's total in itself, which approximates the three million mark, and is the grand individual monthly total for the year, reflects an expansion that is little short of marvellous; but at that, considering the size of the two cities, it is hardly more remarkable than the showing made at Vancouver, where work amounting to $1,386,955 was undertaken as against $607,615 in the month of October, 1909.

Aside from Peterboro's loss of 11 per cent., the greatest decrease noted, and which in itself, considering the comparative amounts, is not of very serious proportions, all points in Ontario progressed in the most gratifying manner. Ottawa reversed the less favorable condition existing in the two previous months by recording an investment of $438,925, equivalent to a gain of 28 per cent., while Hamilton, with a like increase, issued permits aggregating in value to $818,380. Fort William also topped its corresponding figures by an advancement of 8 per cent., and Kingston, which does not submit comparative figures, reports activities to the extent of $23,317. Port Arthur, which was practically dormant during this month last year, registers an increase of 731 per cent., the largest proportionate gain in the list. Other gains noted are: Windsor, 92 per cent.; Berlin, 43 per cent.; and London, 2 per cent.

In the western section of the Dominion, the strides made exceeded all expectations. Although Winnipeg failed by a fraction of equalling her previous figures for the month, permits were issued to the extent of $580,150, which is an excellent showing in view of the heavy months immediately preceding. Calgary experienced a marked state of activity as is evidenced by her total of $568,290, which represents a gain of 40 per cent., while Victoria and Regina ar eahead by 18 and 376 per cent. respectively, the figures in the latter cases amounting to $247,975, as against $52,080 last year.

Montreal's great total of $1,907,440 is the second largest amount noted, and represents an investment of $1,278,795 more than was made on the same month last year. These figures reflect a tremendous growth, and especially so when one takes into account that at this season of the year considerable work is abandoned owing to uncertain weather conditions. St. John also records an advance, a gain of 149 per cent., although Sydney, in the same section, is a trifle behind her corresponding amount.

Reports from various other points throughout the country indicate an activity equally as pronounced as that shown by the cities included in the list, but in the other cases the respective totals for the month are not available. The prospects in every respect are anything but discouraging, and it looks very much as though the building fraternity in general will find much to do during the winter season.

A POPULAR DITTY

Poetry by The Khan

If this keeps on much longer
He'll be dippy, that is plain—
I'm talking about that boy of mine,
He has Santy on the brain.
All day long he's mooning,
His face all bright with bliss;
All day long he's crooning
A song that runs like this:
"Has anybody here seen Santy?
I pause for a reply.
Has anybody here seen Santy—
S-A-N-T-Y?"

He stands by the dead-leaves bonfire
And talks to the speaking flames:
"Has anybody here seen Santy?"—
That's how he plays his games.
He teaches his rag-time ditty
To Phyllis, Jack, and Sis,
To Maudie, Mabel, and Kitty,
A screed that goes like this:
"Has anybody here seen Santy?
I pause for a reply.
Has anybody here seen Santy—
S-A-N-T-Y?"

And even when he's sleeping
He holds his suengerfest;
When we're in Murpny's keeping
He wakes us from our rest;
For while he sleeps he's dreaming
Of Christmas time, I wis;
He wakes the house by screaming
A stunt that goes like this:
"Has anybody here seen Santy?
I pause for a reply.
Has anybody here seen Santy—
S-A-N-T-Y?"

He dreamt he was in heaven,
Inside the golden gate—
Now, mark, he's only seven,
But his faith is very great.
As soon's the angels found him
Up in that land of bliss,
He gave the audience round him
A song-and-dance like this:
"Has anybody here seen Santy?
I pause for a reply.
Has anybody here seen Santy—
S-A-N-T-Y?"

CANADIAN CORONATION CONTINGENT

It is announced that the Militia Council has now under consideration the question of sending a representative contingent of the Canadian Militia to participate in the coronation ceremonies in London next June.

It is probable that a composite regiment of about 200 will be sent, embracing each arm of the service and drawn from each Province. There will also be a detachment of the North West Mounted Police.

There is no doubt that the requirements of the local garrison will be represented on this composite regiment and there will undoubtedly be keen rivalry as to who should be chosen. A trip such as this is afforded only once in a life time.

Every person suffering from General Debility should take Miller's Compound Iron Pills. Wm. Medill, druggist.

WHEN TONY PAWNED LUISA

BY MAIBELLE HEIKES JUSTICE.

"COME," said Tony, putting on his hat.

"Come where?" asked Luisa.

"You ask no questions," said the man more severely. "You come with me." He took the girl roughly by the arm and began to push her toward the little rack on the wall where hung her hat and coat. "Put on," he demanded, pointing.

But the girl only hung back.

"No! I will not!" she cried with the vehemence of her race.

The man's brow clouded. At the moment his face was not pleasant to look upon. In other respects, however, and in less excitable circumstances Tony might be called a handsome young fellow. But something about the corners of his mouth and the taper of his fingers bespoke a weakness. Tony's was not a strong character. The present scowl upon his face made him look almost brutal.

"Yes, go," said the woman, sour visaged. "Do as he says. It may only be a week." Then with a shrug she turned her broad back and went about her household duties. Apparently the girl could expect no sympathy here.

With gathering tears she began to pin on her hat, which Tony in his eagerness had pulled from the rack and jammed on her head. Her cloak he hung over his own arm, for the day was warm—early summer. Then, without so much as a word, but a look which was both a command and a threat, Tony led the way down the dark tenement stairs, Luisa following heavy hearted and heavy footed behind. Hurt and indignant, she felt as if she could scarce drag herself after him.

"Goodby!" shouted Teresa over the head of the stairs.

"Goodby," said Luisa tremulously, looking up, though in the darkness she could not see her future mother-in-law. Then she stumbled down after Tony.

When they emerged into the sunshine of the street it seemed that the children from every tenement were swarming like so many bees. Both shouts and wails rang out, telling the plight of all as they jostled in their rough play, and this noise, mingled with the cries of the pushcart venders, together with the warning yells of the street car drivers, made the place a veritable bedlam. So crowded were the sidewalks that Tony and the girl took to the streets. Grasping her by the wrist again, as if he feared she would yet elude him, Tony dragged her through the crowds. They were now penetrating the New York ghetto and the effort seemed impossible.

"Come quicker!" he exclaimed. "Josef is waiting and he may be angry. He will not want to give the money."

So Luisa stumbled on.

Indeed, a little tragedy was being enacted now but Tony did not think so. To his mind he was bringing about a temporary relief from a terrible trouble. In his great excitement he forgot how to govern either his words or his actions. To Luisa meanwhile, it seemed that her heart was bursting with all manner of emotions—tears, fright, indignation—hate! How dared Tony do what he was doing! How dared he take her to the house of a strange person for—for——

"I will not!" she screamed, jerking her arm away. "I will not!"

"S-s-s-sh!" exclaimed Tony from between his teeth. "They will think you are a crazy woman." And he caught her arm again.

"And you, my promised husband!" she cried. "You to do such a thing!"

The Promise.

"S-s-s-sh!" whispered Tony. "Your promised husband, of course, Luisa. In one week you shall be my bride. My word, Luisa; my word it is so! But, listen, he continued, ominously, leaning over her. "I must get that money to-day. For, see that place?" With a long finger he pointed down one of the side streets. "See that place down there—the big building and the bridge? They call that the Tombs, and it is where they take the bad. I am the bad if I don't pay that money. I pay it to-day, then I get more money to pay Josef back, and I take you home again. Sah, Luisa?" And something like joyous hope lit up his dark features.

But Luisa did not see. Particularly, she did not see where Tony was to get the money to pay Josef back.

She repeated his side-wise as they walked along.

"Where will you get it—Josef's money?" she inquired.

"Sh! You wait," said Tony, meaningly. "I get it all right. I play again, Luisa, and I win next time."

With a little cry she tried to pull away again—in the movement was something of both grief and disgust.

"Play! You play some more? Nah!" She flipped her fingers in his face. "Be a man, Tony. Go work. Go tell you a care, like Sofia Kirofsky's man. I will help the system, Tony, and we can make fifteen dollars. Sofia has a good man and he does not play here. Or"—she was measuring the effect of her words—"I go get the piano, like Rosa's brother—you know, Tony, with a hundred tunes, and we go up to Central Park and play for the children. Yes. Work it is, Tony, but twenty dollar——"

"Twenty dollar! Nah! It's nice, Tony. Not——"

But Tony was still glum. His hopes had arisen before of plucking apples, and he delighted not in the prospect of hunting a street piano about to collect pennies. Tony wished to be rich all at once, like some of the other young men—American gentlemen who wore clothes resplendent with checked waistcoats, who wore large gold watch chains, who carried a monocle in the corner of one eye.

[illegible] the fine gentlemen weave [illegible] one night with cool head [illegible] away in his pocket. [illegible] day or an incredulous him [illegible] a stormy sixteen-

[illegible] tion in the club over the fact of Tony's having been permitted to get out with so much money, but the tumult finally quieted down by the word of law from the leader, the man who talked the loudest and who wore the largest watch chain.

"Let the Dago go," he said. "His luck is too good to keep. He will come back and bring others."

But Tony, with this new and easily found fortune, had sufficient wisdom to send immediately to Italy for his mother and Luisa. In the interim he had rented a tenement flat, and when the two women arrived Tony was at the wharf to meet them. Nor could he talk fast enough of the wonders of this fabled city, where gold fairly poured into one's hands for the holding.

Her Enchantment.

"Wonderful! Wonderful!" cried the dark eyed girl, clapping her hands delightedly. "It is as we heard then, Tony, a country of the rich. Not so?"

"Quite so, Luisa," he chippered glibly.

With the touch of woman's hands the bare, unthrifty little flat became Tony's paradise. True, there were not the green fields and the blue open sky of his beloved Northern Italy. There were only three rooms, but there was a burst of sunshine during the morning, and Luisa had already bought four pots of red geraniums to grace the front window.

And every day Teresa, his mother, and Luisa had talked about the prospective pushcart. What would it be like? How much would it cost? What would he sell? And why had he not a cart already, and a dozen other womanlike questions. But Tony only smiled evasively. He helped about the little home until it was complete, or until the hundred dollars were almost depleted, when one night he slipped out to meet some of the fine gentlemen over Bowery way. But that night Tony took two friends with him to the "club rooms." For this thoughtful courtesy Tony was again allowed to depart with a clean, new bill in his pocket, but this time one of more modest denomination. The two Italians, however, had left behind all they had brought with them. Their luck with the cards over the little green tables had not been good. On their way home their deprecations of Tony's fine friends were not pleasant to his ear. He even avoided dark places on their homeward walk, for there were fierce lights in his companions' eyes.

Soon afterward Tony had begun to grow suspicious of the attitude of his new friends of the Lookout Club. From the peaceful country land whence he came Tony knew little of backbreaking, but of late he observed that a sentinel stood at the foot of the "club" stairs who gave a peculiar whistle whenever an officer approached.

In his ignorance Tony had been so foolish as to give voice to his suspicions. From that time on his luck had changed, and, although his fine gentleman friends sympathized with his ill luck, they did not give him back his money. And now he owed them over one hundred and fifty dollars! He, Tony, without a cent to his name, owed this!

And so Tony had gone home to the little flat and told the whole story. Teresa suggested his going to their landlord for a loan. Tony grasped at the straw and hastily slipped on his hat. In his mad search for money Tony had reached the point where he used little discretion in the selection of the lender; he knew only that he must have money, for something worse than disgrace stared him in the face.

"Go on! Go on, foul son of mine!" screamed Teresa, with brandishing arms. "Go, rid my mind of this trouble. We are hungry, Luisa and I." She turned her back, irritably.

Hungry! Tony had not yet thought of that.

He rushed out the door.

The Case of Vochman.

Josef Vochman was prosperous, but though young in years he was a large landholder. His occupation was that of a pawnbroker in the Bowery. Bounding and climbing through the always crowded streets, Tony soon reached his destination and made known his errand.

"I gif you so much money?" laughed the pawnbroker. "Oh, go 'long—you're a crazy mans!"

"But only for a week," pleaded Tony, with all the blandishments of his race.

"But I must haf security," said the young Jew. "What haf I to know of your honesty?"

When the meaning of security was explained to Tony he sank helpless in his chair.

"I have none," he said. "I have only me and my mother—and Luisa," and he threw out his hands in their emptiness.

"Ach, yes!" exclaimed the German, wisely. "Ach so! You haf the girl—Loosa. So! And so handsome a girl as that. I remember."

"Yes," said Tony, in utter dejection; "I have Luisa."

"Vell, Tony, I tell you what I do," said Josef, at length. He sat down a tray of diamond rings he had been dusting. "You haf owe one hundred and fifty dollar, you say? All right. You vant the money—so? All right. You bring me the girl for security and I gif you the money. So?"

"You mean I bring Luisa and you give it to her?" he cried, joyfully.

"No, sir; I don't mean not that. I mean what I say. You bring your young voomans to stay and I gif you the money. When you bring me back the hundred and fifty dollar you take back your young voomans. So?"

Tony had sunk down in the chair again, ugly lights in his eye.

"If you haf the money in a week," went on Josef, "as you say you vill, then your Loosa can go mit you and marry. So?"

Tony did not speak.

"O ho!" cried Josef. He turned his back, then began to pace the floor slowly, all the while regarding the crestfallen Tony with secret enjoyment. "You are afraid, then? You think I not be kind to the girl—that I not be a shentlemans? You think that, so?" he continued, placing a strong hand on Tony's shoulder and giving it a sharp twist. "Say, you think that, fool mans? Look me face to face and think it. Vy, listen! My mudder, like your mudder, his upstairs in the flat mit me also. Vy not, then? Your young voomans is safe mit Josef Vochman. I need somepody to help mit cleaning all dis jewelry; she vill be very good to help."

The German went to the safe and shaved off a few notes from the generous roll he took from the drawer. "There is the money," he said, "but go first and bring mit you the Loosa. It must be a square deal, not so, Tony?"

But something had driven Tony speechless. How would such a proposition strike Luisa? What would she say regarding her sale of the bargain?

"Maybe she won't come," whispered Tony in agony of contemplation.

"Maybe not?" smiled Josef. "Maybe she haf her shoulder up? All right! I know them voomans, Tony. You tell her I gif her a diamond ring big like a peanut. She come, Tony. Not so? You tell her I haf a horse and buggy to drive mit myself by the park. Tell her my mudder buy her a new dress and a hat mit a fine feather. She won't come? O-ho! Vell, you try that, Tony. I haf acquainted mit voomans a long time. She come, Tony."

"Yes, she must come—for a week," gasped Tony, a vision of the Tombs, gray and cruel, rising before him. "I can get the money back by that time. She must come! She must come to-day!"

Tony's Story.

And so Tony had rushed home to impart the intelligence.

Indignant, Luisa had rebelled point blank, but Teresa and Tony carried the day, and the girl was forced out of the little flat almost before she realized the nature of her banishment. All she knew was that she was going to a pawnbroker's house to stay a week so Tony could have some money. At the end of the week Tony was coming with much more money, when she might return home.

Josef met them at the door with a bland smile. He was a very fair, clean faced young man, and not unhandsome. His laugh was infectious, and his eye blue and kind. Indeed, when Josef drove "mit style by the park" he presented as good an appearance as many of his betters.

But there was no smile on Luisa's face now. She glanced about the shop like some young caged thing, wanting, and helpless to fly. Her full red lips now formed a firm, close line; her eyes flashed daggers, her bosom heaved with angry gasps.

"And so!" she exclaimed, snapping her fingers in Tony's face. "This is the place?" Then she looked at Josef as if in challenge. "Where is you mother?" she asked. "Show me your mother or I shall go away."

Josef, who in the meantime had brushed himself to a state of perfection and donned his best suit in Tony's absence, gave a pleasant little bow and hurried toward the partition at the back of the store.

"Mudder!" he called. "The young voomans is here. Come!"

And shortly she appeared—a very motherly, round little woman.

"Come right in," she said, holding out both fat hands to Luisa. "Ve, Josef and I, will haf a nice dinner for you. Loosa, is that your name, yes? Very well, then, Loosa, take off your hat."

He had seated Luisa on the counter and loaded her with jewels.

The girl's heart softened. The reception from Josef's mother was far warmer than the parting she had had from Tony's.

In a short time Tony had gone. The money was now his. Yet it was with much profession of endearment and repeated promises to return at the end of the week that he took his departure, and so the girl had allowed him to go.

In a few days' time the whole atmosphere had changed in Josef's little shop.

On cleaning and brushing up days Luisa was lost in clouds of dust from the powder in which she dipped the jewels, but her silvery laugh and incessant chatter told that the work was delightful because it was new. Her interest never flagged. As for Josef, he was in the seventh heaven of delight, wearing a broad smile all day long, and even the little round "mudder" looked on and approved.

One night, after he had shut up shop, and with his mother as the sole observer, he had seated Luisa on the counter and loaded her with jewels. On her fingers he had slipped big diamond rings; a pearl necklace hung from her slender neck, while wonderful breastpins resplendent on her shirt waist, shone in the lights.

"Queen! Queen!" cried Josef, in delight. "Not so, mudder?"

"Very so, my son," she echoed in approval, serene delight beaming on her expansive face.

"And are these all yours?" cried the girl, wonderingly, as she spread wide her fingers. "All are yours to keep, Josef?"

"All mine," said the man, "and much more. See! The safe there is full; then those cases, and in the back, more. Then I haf houses, five and six. Some day when I am a rich man I vill built me a living house out my lot by Central Park. Not so, mudder?"

"Very so, my son."

Then one by one they took the trinkets off and shut them up in the safe for the night.

But at the end of the week, which had been like one of play, a new emotion took possession of Luisa. Tony was coming. Already she had made ready to return home, but not without some sorrow at the thought of leaving her new friends.

Bad News Comes.

But Saturday night they waited, and Tony came not. Nor the next day, nor the next. At the end of the second week, in alarm, Luisa begged Josef to accompany her to the little flat he had once called home, but there had been awaited her Tony and Teresa had moved away, leaving no address.

"Ach, so!" exclaimed Josef, significantly, "to-morrow Tony he owe me nine dollar rent," and he kept nodding his head while they listened to the tenant who told them of the circumstance. Then he turned to Luisa. "And you will take such a mans for a husband? Ach! No good! No good! Where is my money, now, I should say? Ach! Such mans!"

Luisa burst into tears, and as she became hysterical the mother grew her weeping.

"Don't you cry, now, young voomans," said Josef, trembling and much disquieted at sight of her suffering. "You dry up your eyes now, till you find somebody worth while to cry for. Come away! Pooh! You wait and see me fix that Mr. Tony of yours. Come," he said, almost authoritatively, "don't cry before all these peoples; come, ve vill go home. To-morrow you and I vill drive down by Coney Island and see such grand sights! Come, now, Josef Vochman vill treat you square. Come along, now." And almost too tenderly he took her by the arm and led her away from the gathering crowds.

As he picked his way through the mob his face was intensely sobered, but within his heart was bounding exultantly, and he only hoped Tony had disappeared for good and all. "Ach! Luisa! Luisa! Luisa!" he kept saying to himself.

Luisa dried her tears. By the time the two reached the little shop Josef's mother met them with many questions, which were answered by a mournful nod or two from Luisa and many expressions of derision and disgust from Josef. But whatever their mingled sensations were of sorrow, of disgust or shame all three of the little party were drowning them fifteen minutes later in a little side street ice cream parlor, where Luisa's cheek flushed and her eyes glistened over the ecstacies of a strawberry sherbet.

Discerning and thoughtful—Josef was an artist.

The next day, true to his promise, he took the girl to Coney Island. For Luisa the excursion was full of delightful surprises. Never had so much sightseeing been crowded into her small zone of comprehension. The things she saw—the mystic mazes, the rushing through of subterranean caves of darkness, the fortune tellers, the beautiful singing ladies in the concert halls, the innumerable side shows were simply wonderful and incredible; in truth, her first impressions of the Isle of Perpetual Amusement were the most awe inspiring she had ever experienced in all her young life.

On the Carousel.

Almost with no thought of Tony, Luisa's day passed as a dream—until, oh fatal moment! the girl passed before a whirling merry-go-round. It was a flashing thing of red and gold, with wonderful music worked by electricity. Luisa paused, spellbound.

"You like it?" asked Josef.

"Oh, such a grand!" she whispered, with clasped hands.

Then her eyes fell to the occupants.

Seated upon two prancing, flowing mane horses she saw two familiar figures. She gasped and clutched Josef's arm.

"It's Tony and Sara Kirofsky," she moaned, hoarsely.

Sara was the sister of Sofia Kirofsky and a girl of whom Luisa had frequently been jealous because of Tony's attentions, unconscious though they may have been. But now, of all times, to cast such an insult in her teeth was more than human flesh could bear. And how Tony yelled and waved his hat. And how the girl, Sara, held on the horse's neck, screaming with delight!

It was too much for Luisa. She made a tigerish spring forward and called Tony by name, but the carousel music was at its maddest and her voice was lost in the din.

Josef pulled her back.

"Don't," she said. "Can't you see, Loosa? Can't you see they are happy mitout you?"

It struck the girl in a new light. And she saw. Slowly she turned away and deadened her aching ears to the strident, clashing music. Then Josef led her out of hearing.

The drive home that evening was silent enough, but somehow Josef, with his natural spirit of levity, had a way of lightening her burdened heart. Long before they reached the city Luisa, worn out with the excitement of the day, had fallen asleep and was leaning against his shoulder as if she had a right to be there. Josef breathed heavily, but peacefully, and with a delightful sense of ownership.

Five weeks passed.

Luisa had now become accustomed to the shop as her home and it seemed as if she had always lived there. Josef, always smiling, was kindness itself, and already, with an eye prospective, Mother Vochman had bought the new dress and the hat with a fine feather. Luisa began to be really happy.

A few days later the most momentous happening of Luisa's life took place.

It was again Saturday evening. Josef and the girl were in the front of the shop neatly arranging the display cases of jewelry, for as a rule Saturday night was a great time for business on the Bowery, and the rosy faced pawnbroker was keeping on the lookout for trade. Furthermore, Josef had the name of being honest, and, dropping the cajolery and blandishments of his competitors, he sold his wares for what they were worth. His diamonds did not have gold backs nor did his pearls melt when they came too near the fire.

Suddenly Josef and Luisa were aroused by a familiar step. It was Tony coming into the shop—the same Tony of old. He did not appear ill fed, however, nor in want of anything. He wore new clothes, a great watch chain and carried himself with a fine swagger.

"Well," he said with a broad smile, "get your things, Luisa." He took out a purse and removed from the inner case a roll of bills. "There is your money, Josef, and I'm much obliged to you for taking care of the girl. Well?" There was a deathly silence. "Well! Well! Can't you move? Get your hat and coat. I've got a carriage outside. I've got the store uptown, Luisa. And," with a meaning wink, "I'm a politician now." He pulled out a massive gold watch, looked at the time and threw it back into his pocket by a dexterous flourish of his watch chain. "It's eight o'clock and I'm in a hurry. Come along."

Prosperity, indeed, must have overtaken Tony somewhere. But just where neither Josef nor Luisa cared to know. The girl looked down and went on polishing some gold rings with a piece of chamois skin.

"I did not think you intended to come back," was all she could say, at length, "and I'm almost sorry you have, Tony."

Tony raised his brows. "My word's good," he said.

Josef pushed forward and placed himself between Tony and the girl, who rubbed nervously on the ring.

"Well, it was only good for a week," he interrupted. "It is now six. Six weeks—do you hear! Six weeks. So? But maybe there is some mens in this world I do not understand. Yet I know when a nice young voomans is not treated right, and Josef Vochman knows when to be kind to her. Not so?"

Luisa nodded.

"Get your hat, Luisa!" exclaimed Tony, irritated by the delay. "My time's money."

"No, she don't get her hat," said Josef.

"And why not?" exclaimed Tony. "Here, then, there's your money."

A Convert To Santa Claus
How One Man Saved The Day

By Roy Rolfe Gilson, Author of "In the Morning Glow," "Miss Primrose," etc.

AN old codger without chick or child I had looked forward to the visit with a good deal of pleasure, and upon my arrival, two days before Christmas, it was with a feeling of almost grandfatherly calm and pride that I wandered about my brother's house with the hand of my seven year-old nephew in mine.

"Bob," said I—he was named for me—"which chimney will Santa Claus come down?"

"Santa Claus!" said he. "Huh! I guess you've never grown up."

"Growed up, I suppose you mean," I replied. "Little boys say 'growed up.' I used to."

"Nowadays," said my brother's wife, "it is not considered a good thing for children to talk baby-talk it makes it more difficult for them to speak correctly afterward. And it tends to limit the vocabulary."

"I see," said I. "Well, Bob, you think I have never matured, eh?"

He hesitated.

"Santa Claus," he explained, "is your father and mother." And he added, as if too exclusive a definition might possibly be indiscreet: "Or your uncle. Or anybody that gives you anything for Christmas."

"And when did you find that out?"

"Oh, my—years ago!" he replied

"Well, well," said I, "what remarkable young fellows you are in this generation! When I was your age—my sakes! there was Santa Claus, and Cock Robin, and Jack the Giant-Killer, and the Old Man of Tobago—why, I believed in all of them. And do yet."

"Aw, Uncle Robert!"

Sure! I believe in 'em. You can't fool me telling me that there isn't any Santa Claus. I know better than that. If there isn't how does it happen that they have pitchers of him?"

"Aw, Mamma, Uncle Robert says 'pitchers!' You mean 'pictures,' Uncle Robert."

"Chimley! Aw, Uncle Robert, you mean 'chimney'!"

"Well, chimney or chumley—which ever it is. My gracious, but you pick a fellow up so! Why, you're the rearingest-tearingest dictionary fellow I ever did see!"

Bob giggled rapturously.

"You talk like Terence."

"Who's Terence?"

"Why, he's the ashman's boy."

"Well, I'm a boy."

"Aw, Uncle Robert!"

"Well, I am! That's how I happen to believe in Santa Claus."

"You must be a little boy then only little kids believe in Santa Claus. But how can you be a boy, Uncle Robert? You're tall and skinny. And your hair's gray. And you wear spectacles. And your nose is four inches long."

"Robert!" cried my brother's wife.

"By George!" said I; "I hadn't thought of my nose, Bob! And it's funny, but the more I can forget my nose the more of a boy I am every time. Yes, sir!"

And at that I grew pensive. I suppose, which my nephew interpreted accordingly.

"Don't think of it any more than you can help, Uncle Robert," he gravely urged. "I like you to be a boy and talk like Terence."

"Terence," said I, "must be a good deal of a man, Bob. Does he believe in Santa Claus?"

"Naw. He doesn't believe no thing."

"My stars!" I exclaimed involuntarily; "what a set of young skeptics you youngsters are!" And it set me to thinking and to comparing my own more credulous and imaginative and, as it appeared to me, more poetic childhood with that of Bob—noting my abstraction, concluded that I was on my nose again.

"Aw, come on, Uncle Robert! I guess it's only three inches anyway. Or three and a half. Why don't you measure it?"

"Heaven forbid! My dear Robert, I should never be a boy again. It would spoil one of my dearest illusions—dreams—stories, you know."

"Do you have stories?"

"Oh, yes! You see, not having any little boy of my own I have to tell stories to myself—and, then, of course, I have to believe them. And that's how I manage to be a boy so much, in spite of my—what you mentioned."

"You mean your——"

"Just so."

"Well, why don't you tell me a story, Uncle Robert?"

"What's the use? You wouldn't believe it."

"Yes, I would."

"No, Bib. You and the ashman's boy, you don't believe anything. And the only story I can think of just now is about Santa Claus—so what's the use?"

"I'll tell you, Uncle Robert! You tell it to Billy" (Billy was the bull-terrier—just then watching me from the rug with the corner of one glassy eye), "'cause he'll believe anything. Billy will. And I'll just listen."

"All right," I replied, more cheerfully: "I'm glad to know that there is some faith left in the world." And thereupon, addressing myself exclusively to Billy who, in spite of his master's recommendation for credulity, appeared at first to entertain a smiling suspicion of my calves, I began:

"Billy," said I "there are only a few of us left—you and I and several other dogs—but we'll never give in. Never! We'll scratch to the last flea—eh, Bill?—on this here question of Santa Claus. You know there is a Santa Claus because you always sleep with one eye open; while other folks—I mention no names, but those that have ears let 'em hear what it is—sleep with their two lids tight as blacking-boxes. Which is why they don't know as much as they think they do.

"But how do I know that there's a Santa Claus? Well, now, that's just what I'm a-pawing around to get at. That's the bone of the whole matter. And I've buried it—and I don't know where. And you'll know, too, if you'll keep your glass eye open, Billy."

I turned severely upon my nephew. "Who's a-telling this story anyhow. I haven't said anything about bumblebees, have I? And the bargain was that you were to sit still and listen. I'm talking to Billy."

"As I was saying when the cat came in——"

But here again the story was interrupted, for at the word "cat" Billy was on his feet in an instant, scenting every chair and doorway in the room and whining miserably at the empty air. And I was forced, in some humiliation, to call upon his master before I could restore a proper literary atmosphere.

"Not to detain you unnecessarily," I began again with a flourish of irony which was lost, I fear, upon those three ears listening to my tale—the fourth was on the ghastly cat—"and to make a long story as short as possible, I'll begin in the middle. You know yourself, Billy, how it feels to hear things that you can't see—especially at night. Many's the dark night I've put my head under my blanket! And this was a par-tic-u-lar-ly dark night—black as a stack of black——"

I paused in time.

"——pussies," said I. "It was winter, but there wasn't any snow or moon or stars or anything—just black. You couldn't see your paw before your nose. It had rained and rained, and the old weather dogs said that there had never been such a winter since the flood, and that Santa Claus would have to beg, borrow or steal a boat somehow to bring his presents in, and trade his reindeer for two or three pairs of ducks."

"Or swans," my nephew interposed.

I gave him one look and went on as if nothing had happened.

"Well, I was a puppy then and pretty anxious, I tell you, Bill, about how things were coming out. I wanted a gun and a sword and a pistol and some jackstraws and a pencil-sharpener and a cornucopia of dog-biscuit——"

"Aw, Uncle Robert!"

"Dog-biscuit," I repeated firmly, "and I don't know what all—and the question was, how on earth they would get there in all that rain? But the night before Christmas, in the middle of the night, just when it was darkest, I sat up—in my box. Sat right up! I couldn't help it, I didn't know what I was doing. I just found myself sitting right up on my hindlegs—with my ears up, and my hair too!—listening, and just getting ready to bark when, holy cats!——"

But there, of course, the story stopped until we could induce that Bulldog to lie down again. His master had been right. His credulity was something marvellous. He would have believed anything, that dog would, and now lay at my feet, both ears up and both eyes open, with an expectancy that was indescribable. Never was a dog so interested in a story—so engrossed as Bill was from that time forth. Here, apparently, was a tale after his own heart—so realistic that he felt himself actually living the scene described and fairly panting for the solution of the mystery. He had his own notion, too, as to how it was to end; and every nerve and muscle was in readiness for the catastrophe.

"And what happened then, Uncle Robert?" inquired my nephew.

"Well, Bill," said I, "who do you suppose it was? I guess you know all right. And if you know and I know what's the use of ——"

"But you said you'd tell!" cried an agonising voice. "You promised!"

"My dear," I replied as patiently and as gently as possible, "this story is between Billy and me. You're distinctly on the outside of the big tent—understand?—and if you want to see this show without peeking through the canvas—the performance is about to begin—you will just please step up and buy your ticket in the regulation manner."

My nephew stared at me, halfway between smiles and tears. (I could have hugged the boy.) But when he saw I was in earnest, "I haven't got any money," he said sheepishly.

"Well, what have you got them? What'll you give us to let you in?"

"I've got this"—doubtfully producing a nickel whistle that worked with a piston.

"All right," said I, pocketing the whistle out of his reluctant fingers. "That'll do very nicely. Come in. Sit next to Bill there.

And from that moment mortal sleepy-head never had two more attentive, open-eyed, open-eared, open-mouthed listeners than I, Bill and Billy.

"Where was I?" I asked. "Oh yes! I remember now. I was sitting up in bed——"

"Getting ready to holler," cried Bob, hugging Billy in a kind of ecstacy.

"Humph!" said Bill—or something very like it—half grunt, half whine.

"Yes," said I, "and right there in the dark—for by this time my eyes were getting used to it and could make out the dim outline of things just a little—I saw——"

"Santa Claus," cried Bob.

I looked at my nephew in some surprise. His face was glowing—and there was something so human about that beautiful, unconscious ardor of his that I loved him the better for its inconsistency.

"Well, that's what I thought," I replied, "as I sat there in bed, holding my breath and listening—and listening! . . . And holding my breath! And, now and then, you could hear a little tinkle—and then a little chink——"

"That was the sword!" cried Bob. And at this unexpected explosion Billy jumped nervously.

"And then," said I, lowering my voice, "everything would be as quiet as the grave. . . . Why, you couldn't hear yourself think! But only for a minute. Or maybe two minutes. And then you'd hear another little jingle—and another little click——"

"Th-that," whispered Bob hoarsely, "must have been the gun! Or the p-pistol!"

"Well, by that time," I continued, "I was so excited—I was so sure that this was old Santa Claus a-rummaging around my room that I couldn't stand it a minute longer. I just had to know. So I began to creep out of bed——"

"Golly!" cried Bob.

"Yes, sir! First one foot and then the other down on the cold floor. And then I'd edge along and edge along, a-hanging on to the bedclothes so I could be ready to jump back if it shouldn't be Santy, you know—'cause, of course, it might have been something else for all I knew . . . and then I'd edge along a little farther—and then I'd stop a minute to keep from sneezing, 'cause my nose was itching like blazes an my throat tickled so I'd a-just had to cough in about a minute. And I didn't dare breathe—or hardly think even. It's a wonder to me that my heart didn't give me dead away! Well—I'd edged along down as far as the footboard and was a-lying low there a minute to catch my breath again when jimmy-cripes—all of a sudden a big gruff voice, so near me I jumped clean back to the pillow and under the blanket, said:

"'Where's your stocking?'"

"Just like that! Well, sir, Bob, I was as scared as you are now!"

"Oh, I ain't scared—much!" my nephew assured me.

"Well, I was," I confessed. "I had swallowed my tongue and couldn't get it up again for a couple of minutes, and even then it spluttered so the old fellow had to repeat his question.

"Where'd you say your stocking was?"

"And this time his voice wasn't so rough. He seemed to be chuckling-like. So I said

"'H-hangin' to the——'

"'To the what?'

"'The ch-chair, sir. Don't k-kill me!'

"'Kill you! Thunder! I haven't got time. I've got one billion two hundred and eighty-six million four hundred and fifty-three thousand 700 chimneys to go down before daylight.'

"'Don't forget the p-pistol, sir,' I ventured.

"'Forget nothing!'

"'Or the g-gun.'

"He seemed hurt at that.

"'You are the one that forgets,' said he. 'I don't forget anybody or anything, at any time. I am Old Man Memory,' said he.

"'Do you g-go to all the houses?' I asked.

"It was a silly question, of course, but I had to say something to be polite. And like many another silly question it got a very sensible answer—which I want you to listen to, Bob, and never forget as long as you live. For, said he—old Santy, said he:

"'I go to all the houses where folks believe in me,' said he. 'And where they don't,' said he, 'they can get their own presents,' said he, 'and give 'em to whoever they like. I wash my hands of 'em. Yes, sir,' said he, 'when I find a little boy that doesn't believe in me why I let his folks look after him. He doesn't get any of my presents—not by a jugful!' said he. 'You couldn't hire me to go down his chimney!' said he.

"'I believe in you,' said I.

"'Or I wouldn't be here,' said he.

"'W-why don't you light the lamp?' said I. 'It would be easier.' And besides I was dying to have a look at him. 'You'll find matches on the t-table,' I said.

"He never said a word. I thought he was mad, maybe, so I said as politely as I could—and I always used to lisp when I was especially polite—'If you're hungry, thir, there-eth c-cookieth in the pantry crock.'

"No answer. Not a word! And then I listened—and I could hear the clock, which I hadn't noticed before—but he was gone. At least I suppose he was, but somehow it was so awful quiet there I didn't dare stir till morning or say another word. But when it was light and I could see that he was gone, why, then I got up and looked around and, sure enough, there was the gun and the sword and the pistol——"

"And the jackstraws!" said my nephew.

"Yes, and the pencil-sharpener—"

"And the cornucopia, Uncle Robert!"

"Yes, of dog-biscuit—all right there in the room."

My nephew was aghast. Billy, by this time, had settled down upon the hearthrug in a state of utter disgust and resignation, his nose laid wearily upon his paws, the half of one melancholy eye upon me and one wilted ear just raised enough to hear the right word in season, should it be spoken—should I by any chance yet rouse myself and with an eloquence worthy of the occasion redeem his disappointed hopes.

"But how will he know that I believe in him now, Uncle Robert?" asked my repentant nephew. "I didn't last year, you know."

"Oh, he'll know!" I answered.

And it was only then, when the performance was over, that I discovered that the nickel whistle which Bob had given me wouldn't blow, and I handed it back like a bad quarter, and with an air of mild reproachfulness that was lost on Bob. For Bob, I discovered, was in a bad way. Or rather—as I suppose any other revivalist would put it—he was in a most promising and fertile condition.

"He'll know," I said, "if you really do believe in him."

"Oh, I do!" cried Bob, his chin quivering and a lump in his throat—a convert if there ever was one.

But the dog Billy was asleep.

Doubtless you have heard sound-reproducing instruments—perhaps you have had it in mind to buy one—maybe you are uncertain which make to buy—but have you heard the Edison Phonograph

play an Amberol Record"

You can do this at the store of any Edison dealer. When you go, note the longer playing time of Amberol Records (playing twice as long as the Standard Edison Records); note the Amberol selections, not found on any other record of any kind; note also the reproducing point of the Edison Phonograph that never wears out and never needs changing; the motor, that runs as silently and as evenly as an electric device, and the special horn, so shaped that it gathers every note or spoken word and brings it out with startling fidelity. It is these exclusive features, vital to perfect work, that should claim your attention.

There are Edison dealers everywhere. Go to the nearest and hear the Edison Phonograph play both Edison Standard and Edison Amberol Records. Get complete catalogs from your dealer or from us.

"SLEEPLESSNESS."

Thousands of people all over this land toss night after night on a sleepless pillow. The eyes do not close in the refreshing slumber that comes to those whose heart and nerves are right.

Some are troubled with weak and smothering spells; others palpitation of the heart; others have their nerves unstrung; but whatever the cause—it comes entirely from a derangement of either the heart or nerves, or both. Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills offer the blessing of sound, refreshing slumber. They do this by their invigorating effect on the heart and nerves and will tone up the whole system to perfect condition.

Mr. H. Jewel, Keswick, Ont., writes: "I am glad to have the pleasure of telling you what Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills did for me. I would have weak spells, seemed to lose my breath, and would have to get up in the night as I could not sleep. I tried many medicines but found nothing good until I used Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills. I took three boxes and it is three years ago since I did so, and I haven't been troubled since."

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are 50c. per box, or 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

The Night Of The Children

By Jos. Oppenheim, Author of "Dr. Rast" and "Wild Oats"

CHRISTMAS was in the air. The frosty, starry night turned golden in the city avenues. Up and down the pavements the crowds swept, laughing, talking, jostling—cheeks ruddy with the weather, eyes sparkling with the lights. As they moved, there unrolled beside them the endless film of brilliant shop-windows, crammed with riches and through the swinging doors eddies of people were sucked in and ejected. At the curb the toy pedlars shouted, the chestnut stands sent up their smoke. It seemed as if the millions of the city had poured out to mingle in a street festival of joy and brotherhood. People laughed at one another, a wine of good humour drenched the air. It was as if on this night hate and strife and greed had been sloughed off; as if the race said, "Come, let us be happy with one another. We are all here together. Let us meet and mingle in joy and goodwill and peace!"

It was the Night of the Children. Far through the sleeping city the million children were in their beds and it was for them that these people met. For their children they were sweeping the shops, that Christmas morning might dawn with the candles of the pine, and hanging bulgy stockings and the mysterious new toys. And it was the thought of the children, possibly, that made these men and women so light-footed, so bubblingly joyous, so innocently happy. It made children of them and they mingled with each other, like laughing, rollicking boys and girls.

There was one vast department store, nearly a block square and six stories high which sucked in vast masses of the crowd. Pendant from its ceilings hung white moons of light, and under these a density of humanity slowly swirled about the sparkling laden counters. The air was over warm with breathing, and tingled with the excitement of shuffling shoes, rattle of packages, and a hive hum of talk and exclamations. The place was electric with the push of many wills, the clash of desires, the impeded hurry, the drawing near of closing time. 10.30 had come and gone, and yet the crowd was unsatisfied; it hungered and strained and clamoured and struggled to get its fill.

One counter especially was besieged. At this was sold little five cent packages of "snow" for Christmas trees. Behind this counter stood Mamie Riggs, seventeen years old, thin, emaciated, bloodless, her tired pale and drawn and wrinkled her eyes bloodshot, her lips trembling. As she made out checks and received and made change, and handled the envelopes her hands visibly shook. Faces crowded near her, leaned close, arms lifted, fingers jerked near her eyes.

"This snow?"

"Yes, ma'am."

"How much?"

"Five cents."

"Only one for five?"

"Only one."

"How much in a package?"

"I don't know, ma'am."

"Don't know!"

At least five voices interrupted:

"See here, I want a half dozen of those." "Where's my change?" "I can't wait all night." "Isn't there any one to wait on me?" "Say, I'll speak to the floorwalker if I don't get proper attention!"

Mamie answered as best she could. "Just a minute! You said five? Six? Change hasn't come. I can't help it, ma'am!—Yes, it's five a package!—Snow! yes!—I'll wait on you in a minute."

She spoke evenly in a monotone. But she was doing her work, mechanically. In fact, Mamie wasn't "all there." Her fingers, her lips, kept working but the real Mamie seemed in a trance. Sunburst after sunburst of faces shot the air before her, a loud sea-noise of voices swept her brain, and she felt deathly sick. Every bone in her body ached. It seemed as if her feet were broken and were bleeding. She was horribly nauseated and dizzy. She felt as if she were going to faint. By sheer force of grit she clung to the counter, she kept upright; she moved, talked, worked. On and on it went, minute by minute, and still the faces crowded, the voices rang out, the packages had to be delivered, the change made, the checks written out.

Afterwards it seemed to her that her whole year had been rushing toward this Christmas climax. Most of that year she had worked in a cheaper store—worked 9 1-2 hours a day for $2.62 1-2 a week. As this was not enough to live on, she had boarded with an aunt in Hoboken, paying her $1.15 a week. But it took her an hour and a quarter to get to work and she rose early before dawn to get to her counter at eight sharp. Carfare cost her $1.26, which, with the board, left her twenty cents a week. No recreation, no fresh air. And every few nights she was up till midnight laundering her clothes that she might be neat appearing. This work, she felt was killing her—so she left it and took a position in the larger store for $4.00 a week.

But she had to figure close. She slept nearby in a charity dormitory for six cents a night. She went without breakfast; lunch and supper consisted of coffee and rolls for ten cents each. Laundry was twenty-one cents a week. Clothes and extras came close to $2. In this way she spent all her wages—toiled from 8 a.m. to 6.15 p.m. and on Saturdays till 9.0. Strength does not come on coffee and rolls, nor in nine and a half hours of standing indoors, nor on lack of pleasure and mental growth. Mamie grew sickly, wrinkled, weaker day by day; she was afflicted with violent headaches, and at seventeen she was already a sapped and aged woman, unfit for marriage and child-bearing and housework, with no future but incessant toil, and no savings against sickness or old age.

This was bad enough. But when the holiday rush began the store was kept open until 11.30 at night. Mamie grew feverish, had dizzy spells, was too sick to eat. Her condition grew worse each day and now on this last day she had come to work at 8 in the morning feeling that she could not endure a half hour of standing up, nor the crowds, nor the noise, nor the bad air. That day was a wild, slow torture, measured by minutes, endless and pitiless. On and on it went, on up to noon, on from 12.45 to 6, on from 6.30 to this very minute.

"This snow? How much? See here, where's my change? Do you think I can wait all night? Say, I'll tell the floor-walker. Yes, wrap me up six, in two packages, please. Isn't there anyone else waiting at this counter?

Sun-burst after sun-burst of faces, sea-roar of talking, dazzling lights, confusion, bustle, noise, hands flying, lips moving, and this would go for another hour and a half.

A man pushed his way through the crowd. "See, here, kid" he cried. "You do me up ten of these—quick!"

Mamie leaned forward on the counter and smiled dimly.

"Ten? Ten?"

"Can't you hear? eight, nine, ten!"

"Ten- Ten what?"

She leaned further forward, she sighed, she slipped and then her arms and face and hair thin bosom all slouched among the packages on the counter.

Cries went up: "She's fainted! Something's the matter! Get water! Help her up!"

The crowd jammed; the floorwalker broke his way through muttering:

"Mamie down? Thunder; and just now when we can't replace her! Why the devil couldn't the girl stick it out?"

Next morning the nurse in the hospital wished her a merry Christmas.

"It's five cents a package, ma'am! Just a minute! Yes, snow—snow for Christmas trees."

At the same moment, over the wide-spread city, the little children hopped out of bed and ran in their nighties to the parlour. There flamed the candles of the pines, there hung the bulgy stockings, there lay the mysterious packages. Little eyes glistened with awe and wonder, women and men were blinded with happy tears, and the Christmas bells pealed love and brotherhood through the tingling dawn.

And one woman said to another.

"The jam was awful last night. I thought I'd never get home. And the service in the stores was insufferable."

Asked the other: "Why didn't you shop earlier in the month?"

"Why? Oh, you know how it is!"

"ASHTON-KIRK, INVESTIGATOR"

By John T. McIntyre. Copyrighted and All Rights Reserved

INTRODUCTION.

Ashton-Kirk, who has solved so many mysteries, is himself something of a problem even to those who know him best. Although young, wealthy, and of high social position, he is, nevertheless an indefatigable worker in his chosen field. He smiles when men call him a detective. "No; only an investigator," he says.

He has never courted notoriety; indeed, his life has been more of less secluded. However, let a man do remarkable work in any line and, as Emerson has observed, "the world will make a beaten path to his door."

Those who have found their way to Ashton-Kirk's door, have been of many races and interests. Men of science have often been surprised to find him in touch with the latest discoveries, scholars searching among strange tongues and dialects, and others deep in tattered scrolls, ancient tablets and forgotten books have been his frequent visitors. But among them come many who seek his help in solving problems in crime.

"I'm more curious than some other fellows, that's all," is the way he accounts for himself. "If a puzzle is put in front of me I can't rest till I know the answer." At any rate his natural bent has always been to make plain the mysterious; each well hidden step in the preparation of a crime has always been for him an exciting lure: and to follow a thread, snarled by circumstances or by another intelligence has been, he admits, his chief delight.

There are many strange things to be written of this remarkable man—but this, the case of the numismatist Plume, has been selected as the first because it is one of the simplest, and yet clearly illustrates Ashton—Kirk's peculiar talents. It will also throw some light on the question, often asked, as to how his cases come to him.

A second volume that shows the investigator deep in another mystery, even more intricate and puzzling than this, is entitled "Ashton-Kirk and the Scarlet Scapular."

CHAPTER I.

Young Pendleton's car crept carefully around the corner and wound in and out among the push-cart men and dirty children.

About midway in the block was a square-built house with tall, small-paned windows and checkered with black-headed brick. It stood slightly back from the street with ancient dignity; upon the shining door-plate, deeply bitten in angular text, was the name "Ashton-Kirk."

Here the car stopped; Pendleton got out, ascended the white marble steps and tugged at the polished, old-fashioned bell-handle.

A grave-faced German, in dark livery, opened the door.

"Mr. Ashton-Kirk will see you sir" said he. "I gave him your telephone message as soon as he came down."

"Thank you, Stumph," said Pendleton. And with the manner of one perfectly acquainted with the house, he ascended a massively balustraded staircase. The walls were darkly panelled; from the shadowy recesses pictured faces of men and women looked down at him.

Coming in from the littered street, with its high smells and crowding, gesticulating people, the house impressed one by its quiet, its spaciousness, and the evident means and culture of its owner. Pendleton turned off at the first landing, proceeded along a passage and finally knocked at a door. Without waiting for a reply, he walked in.

At the far end of a long, high-ceilinged apartment a young man was lounging in an easy-chair. At his elbow was a jar of tobacco, a sheaf of brown cigarette papers and a scattering of books. He lifted a keen, dark face, lit up by singularly brilliant eyes.

"Hello, Pen," greeted he. "You've come just in time to smoke up some of this Greek tobacco. Throw those books off that chair and make yourself easy."

One by one Pendleton lifted the books and glanced at the titles.

"Your morning's reading, if this is such," commented he, "is strikingly catholic. Plutarch, Snarleyow, the Opium Eater, Martin Chuzzlewit." Then came a host of tattered pamphlets, bound in shrieking paper covers which the speaker handled gingerly. "'The Crimes of Anton Probst,'" he continued to read. "'The Deeds of the Harper Family.' 'The Murder of ——'" here he paused, tossed the pamphlets aside with contempt, sat down and drew the tobacco jar toward him.

"Some of the results of your forays into the basements of old booksellers, I suppose," he added, rolling a cigarette with delicate ease. "But what value you see in such things is beyond me."

Ashton-Kirk smiled good-humouredly. He took up some of the pamphlets and fluttered their tilly-printed pages.

"They are not beautiful," he admitted; "the paper could not be worse and the wood cuts are horrors. But they are records of actual things—striking things, as a matter of fact—for a murder which so lifts itself above the thousands of homicides that are yearly occurring, as to gain a place outside the court records and newspapers, must have been one of exceptional execution."

"There is a public which delights in being horrified," said Pendleton with a grimace. "The things are put out to get their nickels and dimes."

"No doubt," agreed the other. "And the fact that they are willing to pay their nickels and dimes is, to my way of thinking, a proof of the extraordinary nature of the crime chronicled." The speaker dropped the prints upon the floor and lounged back in his big chair. "There is Plutarch," he continued; "the account of the assassination of Caesar is not the least interesting thing in his biography of that statesman. Indeed, I have no doubt but that the chronicler thought Caesar's taking off the most striking incident in his career; that the Roman public thought so is a matter of history.

"Countless writers have dwelt upon the taking of human life; some of them were rather commercial gentlemen who always gave an ear to the deands of their public, and their screeds were written for the money that they would put in their pockets, but others, and by long odds the greatest, were fascinated by their subjects. Both Stevenson and Henley were powerfully drawn by deeds of blood. Did you know they planned a great book which was to contain a complete account of the world's most remarkable homicides? I'm sorry they never carried the thing out: for I cannot conceive of two minds more fitted to the task. They would have dressed every event in the grimmest and most subtle horror: why, the soul would have shuddered presented by such masters."

Pendleton regarded his friend with candid distaste.

"You are appalling to-day," he said. "If you think it's the Greek tobacco, let me know. For I have to mingle with other human beings, and I'd scarcely care to get into your state of mind."

The strong, white teeth of Ashton-Kirk showed in a quick smile.

"The tobacco was recommended by old Hosko," he said, "and you'll find nothing violent in it, no matter what you find in my conversation."

"What put you into such a frame of mind, anyway? Something happened?"

But Ashton-Kirk shook his head.

"I don't know," said he. "In fact, I have been strangely idle for the last fortnight. The most exciting things tha have appeared above my personal horizon have been a queer little edition of Albertus-Magnus, struck off in an obscure printing shop in Florence in the early part of the sixteenth century, and a splendid, large paper Poe, to which I fortunately happened to be a subscriber."

A volume of the Poe and the Albertus-Magnus were lying at hand; Pendleton ignored the dumpy, stained little Latin volume; its strong-smelling leather binding and faded text had no attractions for him. But he took up the Poe and began idly turning its leaves.

"It is a mistake to suppose that some specific thing must be the cause of an action, or a train of thought," resumed the other, from the comfortable depths of his chair. "Sometimes thousands of things go to the making of a single thought, countless others to the doing of a single deed. And yet again, a thing entirely unassociated with a result may be the beginning of the result, so to speak. For example, a volume of Henry James which I was reading last night might be the cause of my turning to the literature of assassination this morning, your friendly visit may result in my coming in contact with a murder that will make any of these," with a nod toward the scattered volumes, "seem tame."

Pendleton threw away his cigarette and proceeded to roll another.

"It is no earnest desire to remain upon friendly terms with you, Kirk," stated he, with a smile. "Therefore, I will make no comment except to say that your last reflection was entirely uncalled for."

Lighting the cigarette, he turned the tell leaves of the beautiful volume upon his knee.

"This edition is quite perfection," he remarked admiringly. "And I'm sorry that I was not asked to subscribe. However," and Pendleton glanced humourously at his friend, "I don't suppose its beauty is what attracts you to-day. It is because certain pages are spread with the records of crime. I notice that this volume holds both 'The Murders in the Rue Morgue' and the 'Mystery of Marie Roget.'"

"Right," smiled Ashton-Kirk. "I admit I was browsing among the details of those two masterpieces when you came in. A great fellow, Poe. His peculiar imagination gave him a marvelous grasp of criminal possibilities."

Ashton-Kirk took up the "Confessions of an English Opium-Eater" and turned the leaves until he came to "Murder Considered as One of the Fine Arts."

"In some things I have detected an odd similarity in the work of De Quincey and Poe. Mind you, I say in some things. As to what entered into the structure of an admirably-conceived murder they were as far apart as the poles. The ideals of the 'Society of Connoisseurs in Murder' must have excited in Poe nothing but contempt. A coarse butchery—a wholesale slaughter was received by this association with raptures; a pale-eyed, orange-haired blunderer, with a chip carpenter's mallet hidden under his coat, was hailed as an artist.

"You don't find Poe wasting time on uncouth monsters who roar like tigers, bang doors and smear whole rooms with blood. His assassins had a joy in planning their exploits as well as in the execution of them. They were intelligent, secret, sure. And in every case they accomplished their work and escaped detection."

"You must not forget, however," complained Pendleton, "that De Quincey's assassin, John Williams, was a real person, and his killings actual occurrences. Poe's workmen were creatures of his imagination, their crimes, with the possible exception of 'Marie Roget,' were purely fanciful. The creator of the doer and the deed had a clear field and in that perhaps, lies the superiority of Poe."

Ashton-Kirk sighed humorously.

"Perhaps," said he. "At any rate the select crimes are usually the conceptions of men who have no idea of putting them into execution. And that, upon consideration, is a fortunate thing for society. But, at the same time, it is most irritating to a man of a speculative turn of mind. Fiction teems with most splendid murders. Captain Marryat, in Snarleyow, created an almost perfect horror in the attempted slaughter of the boy Smallbones by the hag mother of Vanslyperken; the lad's reversal of the situation and his plunging a bayonet into the wrinkled throat, makes the chapter an accomplishment difficult to displace. Remember it?"

Pendleton arose an dopened one of the windows.

"Even the noise and smell of this street of yours are grateful after what I have been listening to," said he. Then, after a moment spent in examining the adjacent outdoors, he added in a tone of wonderment. "I say, Kirk, this is really a hole of a place to live! Why don't you move?"

The other arose and joined him at the window. Old-fashioned streets alter wonderfully after the generations of the elect have passed; but when Eastern Europe takes to dumping its native hordes into one, the change is marked, indeed. In this one peddler's wagons replaced the shining carriages of a former day—wagons drawn by large-jointed horses and driven by bearded men who cried their wares in strange, throaty voices.

Everything exhaled a thick, semi-oriental smell. Dully painted fire-escapes clung hideously to the fronts of the buildings; stagnant-looking men, wearing their hats, leaned from bedroom windows. The once decent hallways were smutted with grimy hands; the wide marble steps were huddled with alien, unclean people.

A splendidly spired church stood almost shoulder to shoulder with the Ashton-Kirk house. Once it had been a place of dignified Episcopal worship; but years of neglect had made it unwholesome and cavern-like; and finally it was given over to a tribe of stolid Lithuanians, who stuck a cheaply gilded Greek cross over the door and thronged the street with their wedding and christening processions.

"Perhaps," said Ashton-Kirk, after a moment's study of the prospect, "yes, perhaps it is a hole of a place in which to live. But you see we've had this house since shortly after the Revolution; four generations have been born here. As I have no fashionable wife and I live alone, I am content to stay. Then, the house suits me; everything is arranged to my taste. The environment may not be the most desirable; but, my visitors are seldom of the sort that object to externals."

"Well, you have one just now who is not what you might call partial to such neighbourhoods," said Pendleton. "And," looking at his watch "you will shortly have another who will be, perhaps, still less favourably impressed."

"Ah!" said Ashton-Kirk.

He curled himself up upon the deep window sill while Pendleton went back to his chair and the tobacco.

"It's a lady," resumed Pendleton, the brown paper crackling between his fingers, "a lady of condition, quality and beauty."

"It sounds pleasant enough," smiled the other. "But why is she coming?"

"To consult you—ah—I suppose we might call it—professionally. No, I don't know what it is about; but judging from her manner, it is something of no little consequence."

"She sent you to prepare the way for her, then?"

"Yes. It is Miss Edyth Vale, daughter of James Vale, the 'Structural Steel King,' you remember they used to call him before he died a few years ago. She was an only child, and except for the four millions which he left to found a technical school, she inherited everything. And when you say everything in a case like this, it means considerable."

Ashton-Kirk nodded.

"She is a distant relative of mine," resumed Pendleton; "her mother was connected in some vague way with my mother; and because of this indefinite link, we've always been"—here he hesitated for an instant—"well, rather friendly. Last night we happened to meet at Upton's and I took her in to dinner. Edyth is a nice girl, but I've noticed of late that she's not had a great deal to say. Sort of quiet and big-eyed and all that, you know. Seems healthy enough, but does a great deal of thinking and looking away at nothing. I've talked to her for ten minutes straight, only to find that she hadn't heard a word I'd said.

"So, as you will understand, I did not expect a great deal of her at dinner. But directly across from us was young Cartwright—"

"Employed in the Treasury Department?"

"That's the man. Well, he began to talk departmental affairs with some one well down the table—you know how some of these serious kids are—and as there seemed to be nothing else to do, I gave my whole attention to the interesting performance of Mrs. Upton's cook. I must have been falling into a dreamy rapture; but at any rate I suddenly awoke, so to speak. To my surprise Edyth was talking — quite animatedly — with Cartwright, and about you."

"Ah!" said Ashton-Kirk. "That's very pleasant. It is not given to every man that the mention of him should stir a melancholy young lady into animation."

"Have you done anything in your line for the Treasury Department lately?" asked Pendleton.

"Oh, a small matter of some duplicate plates," said Ashton-Kirk. "It had some interest, but there was nothing extraordinary in it."

"Well, Cartwright didn't think that. I did not come to in time to catch the nature of your feat, but he seemed lost in admiration of your cleverness. He was quite delighted, too, at secuting Edyth's attention. You see, it was a thing he had scarcely hoped for. So he proceeded to relate all he had ever heard about you. That queer little matter of the Lincoln death-mask, you know, and the case of the Belgian Consul and the spurious Van Dyke. And he had even heard some of the things you did in the university during your senior year. His recital of your recovery of the silver figure of the Greek runner which went as the Marathon prize in 1900 made a great hit, I assure you.

"But when he mentioned 'he' to Edyth's earnest question as to whether he were acquainted with you, she lost interest and when I promptly furnished the information that I was he was forgotten. During the remainder of the dinner I had time for little else but Edythe's questions. When she learned that you had taken up investigation as a sort of profession she was quite delighted, and before we parted I was asked to arrange a consultation."

"She will be here this morning, she asked Ashton-Kirk.

Pendleton once more looked at his watch.

"Within a very few minutes," said he.

CHAPTER II.

MISS EDYTH VALE STATES HER CASE

It was exactly three minutes later when the continuous ringing of a horn told of the approach of another motor car upon the crowded street. Then the door-bell rang.

Ashton-Kirk arose and touched one of a series of buttons in the wall. Almost instantly a buzzer made a shrill reply. It did it a lot.

"If it is Miss Edyth Vale," spoke he, "show her up."

A little later a knock came upon the door. The grave-faced German opened it, admitting an astonishingly lovely girl; tall, most beautifully clad and with a manner of composure. Both men arose.

"Considering that you are under twenty-five," said Pendleton, "you are remarkable prompt in keeping your engagement, Edyth."

But the girl did not answer his smile. There was a troubled look in her brown eyes; she tugged nervously at her gloves to get them off.

"This is Mr. Ashton-Kirk," she said.

"It is," said Pendleton. "Kirk this is my cousin, Edyth Vale."

Ashton-Kirk gave her a chair; she sat down regarding him all the time with much interest. The gloves were removed by now; but she continued picking at the empty fingers and wringing them through her hand.

"I have heard of you quite frequently," said she to Ashton-Kirk, "but did not dream that I would ever be favored by your talents. Mr. Pendleton has been kind enough to assure me that my case is not beyond your skill, and I came to consult you upon a most important matter, a very private matter."

"She will be here in a few minutes," said he.

"Within a very few minutes," said he.

AFTER SUFFERING TEN YEARS

Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

MARION, N.J.—"I feel that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has given me a new life. I suffered for ten years with serious female troubles, inflammation, ulceration, indigestion, nervousness, and could not sleep. Doctors gave me up, as they said my troubles were chronic. I was in despair and did not care whether I lived or died, when I read about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound; so I began to take it, and am well again and relieved of all my suffering."—Mrs. Jennie Jordy, Box 40, Marion, N.J.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, contains no narcotics or harmful drugs, and to-day holds the record for the largest number of actual cures of female diseases we know of, and thousands of voluntary testimonials are on file in the Pinkham laboratory at Lynn, Mass., from women who have been cured from almost every form of female complaints, inflammation, ulceration, displacements, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, indigestion and nervous prostration. Every suffering woman owes it to herself to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial.

If you would like special advice about your case write a confidential letter to Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. Her advice is free, and always helpful.

any. I can't fancy his martyring at all. His ways and moods and really preposterous habits would drive a wife mad. You can't imagine the extent of them. He spends days and nights in positively uncanny chemical experiments. Without a word to anyone he plunges off on some mysterious errand, to be gone for weeks. They do tell me that he is to all intents and purposes a policeman. But I really can't quite credit that, you know. He loves to do things that others have tried and failed. Even as a boy he was that way. It was quite discouraging to have a child straighten out little happenings that we had all given up in despair. Sometimes it was quite convenient, but I am not sure that I ever liked it. A charming talker, my dear; he knows so much to talk about. But he's eccentric; and an eccentric young man is a frightful burden to those connected with him."

All these things passed through the mind of Edyth Vale, as she sat regarding the young man at the window. Finally he lifted his eyes and turned them upon her—beautiful eyes—remarkable, full of perception, compelling. As he caught her intent, inquiring look, he smiled; she coloured slightly, but met his glance bravely.

"Last night I heard you spoken of" she said, "and it occurred to me that you could aid me."

"I should be glad to," said he. "It sometimes happens that I can be of service to persons extraordinarily circumstanced. If you will let me hear your story—for," with a smile, "all who come to see me as you have done have a story I shall be able to definitely say whether your case comes within my province."

She hesitated a moment, her hands nervously engaged with the gloves. Then she said, frankly.

"I suppose it is only sensible to speak quite candidly with you, Mr. Ashton-Kirk, as one does with a lawyer or a physician."

He nodded.

"Of course," said he.

For another moment she seemed to be turning her thoughts over and seeking the best means of making a beginning.

"It is very silly of me, I know," she said; "but I feel quite like the [illegible]ng girl who writes to the correspondence editor of an evening paper for advice in smoothing out her love affairs." She bent toward him, the laugh vanishing from her face, a troubled look taking its place, and continued: "I am to be married some day and it is about that that I wish to speak of you."

"I realize the difficulties of the subject," spoke Ashton-Kirk quietly.

"What I am going to tell you, I have never mentioned to anyone before. It has been three years ago—four years at Christmas time—since I first met Allan Morris," she said. "Our engagement so quickly followed that my friends said it was a very clear case of love at first sight. Perhaps it was!

"However that might be, we were very happy for a time. But trouble was in store for us. I had always disbelieved in long engagements, had always been very outspoken against them, in fact. This is perhaps, what made me so quickly notice an absence of haste on Mr. Morris' part as to the wedding. When the subject came up, as it naturally would, he seemed to evoid it. At first I was surprised; but, finally I grew annoyed, and spoke my mind very frankly.

"You see, he is not at all well off, and I am—well I have a great deal. I thought this might have something to do with his apparent reluctance. But no, it was something else. As I just said, I spoke frankly and he was equally candid, after a fashion. He said it was quite impossible for us to be married for some time. There was a something he did not say what, which must first be settled. Naturally I grew curious. I desired to know what it was that so stood in the way of our happiness. He replied that it was something that must not be spoken of, and was so very earnest in the matter that I did not mention it again—for a long time.

"You may think, Mr. Ashton-Kirk, that my fiance was no very ardent lover. But I was assured, and I do not lack perception, that he was passionately fond of me. And I still think so. But as time went by, things did not alter; our wedding was a vague expectation; even more than before Mr. Morris avoided mention of anything definite.

"I am not naturally patient; and my rearing as the only child of an enormously rich man has perhaps added to my impetuousness. In a burst of temper one day, I broke the engagement, gave him back his ring, and did a number of rather silly things. But he was so tragic in his despair—so utterly broken hearted and white—that I immediately relented and we patched the matter up once more. That he loved me was plain; but that he could not marry me for some mysterious reason was even plainer.

"After this I began to notice a change in him. He was rather silent and given to reverie; he seldom laughed. Sometimes he was haggard and so wrought up, apparently, that he could scarcely contain himself. He would pace the floor, evidently with little realization as to what he was doing. Once he was really dreadfully agitated. I calmed him as well as I could, and he sat for a long time, thinking deeply. As I watched him, he sprang to his feet and dashing his fist upon a table, cried out, passionately:

"The black-hearted rascal! He's mocking me."

"Then like a flash he realized the strangeness of his conduct, and with anxious, alarmed face, asked my pardon. I felt that this was an opportunity to put an end to a situation that was growing intolerable. My persistent questioning gained me something, but, on the whole, not a great deal.

"The thing that was troubling him was a business matter. In some way he was in the hands of some one—these are the indefinite threads that I gathered—a mocking, jeering, smiling someone whom he hated, but from whom he could not free himself.

"I began to tell him that there could be nothing strong enough in itself to prevent our happiness; but he stopped me in such a way that I did not feel inclined to continue. In an outburst, filled with denunciations of his enemy and protestations of devotion to myself I caught the name of Hume. He dropped this inadvertantly. I knew it instantly because of the swift look that he gave me. But I allowed no hint of what I thought to show in my face. He was more subdued during the remainder of his stay; the mentioning of the name had startled him, and he was doubtless afraid that his state of mind would lead him into further indiscretions.

"As you may suppose, the name—the first tangible thing that I had learned—was of much interest to me. If I could but find out who this person was, I could probably get to the bottom of the matter."

"At this point Miss Vale paused; and Ashton-Kirk noted her head lift proudly.

"Perhaps," she continued, "it might be thought that I had no right to make such an effort in a matter which Mr. Morris saw fit to keep from me. Were you thinking that? But I am not a silent sufferer. I usually make an end of annoying things without delay. And I would have done so in this case long before, but I was in love; and I could not bear to see Allan suffer by my insistence.

"However, here was an opportunity to perhaps aid him; and I set to work. In a few hours next day I had located every person of the name of Hume in the city. Mr. Morris is a consulting engineer. Anyone named Hume, who, from his occupation, would be likely to have dealings with him especially attracted my attention. There were only a few, and long before the day was over I had satisfied myself by personal visits at their places of business that they did not even know him."

Ashton-Kirk smiled. One of his well-kept hands patted applause upon the arm of his chair.

"You are strong," said he. "I recognized your type when you came in. It is a pleasure to have one's judgment so thoroughly and satisfactorily proven."

Miss Vale looked pleased.

"THE WISE MEN"

ONE night three men were studying the sky. That was their book, whose page was wider than the eye could see and whose words were shining stars.

Some say that the men were Kings, and that Isaiah saw them in a vision when he said: "The Gentiles shall come to Thy light, and Kings to the brightness of Thy rising"; and that their bones may be seen to this day in a golden casket in the Cathedral of Cologne; but this is only an imagination. Some say they were priests and that their name—Magi or Wise Men—means that they were ministers of a religion of the sun and stars far off in Asia; and this is probable true. Some say that one was old and one was young and one was middle aged; and that one was white and one was brown and one was black; and that the name of one was Melchior, and of another Kaspar, and of the third Balthasar; but nobody really knows any of these things.

Afar in the east they were studying the sky; that, at least, is certain.

In those countries people lived outdoors. Some of them were shepherds, like the men who saw the sky all flaming with the splendour of Heaven as they watched their flocks at Bethlehem. And even in the towns the houses had flat roofs, where people went in the silent nights to sleep. Thus they saw the sky, which is hidden from many of us by trees and houses.

So the bright stars blazed that night, and the men watched with wonder and tried to make out what they meant. They believed that God had written great shining sentences there and they tried to read them. They noticed that the stars moved, rising and setting, and that some of them wandered about over the sky. That puzzled them greatly, as it would puzzle us if some of the words in our books should leave the lines and walk about the page. The new positions of the stars seemed to the men to mean that God was sending them new messages, telling the world great tidings which all men ought to know—if they could only make them out. But they could not make them out.

In the midst of the mystery two things seemed sure. One was a connection between stars and Kings, and the other was a nexpectation among many people of a new King, who should be the Saviour of the World. In the distress of a hundred wars the men of many lands were looking for the coming of the Prince of Peace; in the country of the Jews they were expecting him as one expects a traveller by see whose ship is due. Balaam, who himself was a wise man of the East, had said in a vision: "I shall see Him, but not now; I shall behold Him, but not nigh; there shall come a star out of Jacob, and a sceptre shall arise out of Israel."

Now for some months the stars had been conducting themselves strangely. Two of them—Saturn and Jupiter, we call them—had come close together. There they stood gleaming in mysterious splendour. And the Wise Men watched them. And at last, one night between these two bright stars appeared a third, a new star, coloured and shining like a jewel. When the great astronomer, Kepler, saw that slight in 1604, he thought at once of the Wise Men. As for the Wise Men, gazing at the sky in joy and wonder, they thought at once of the King. "Come," they cried one to another, "let us go and find the King."

So they made themselves ready for a long journey with provisions for the way, and camels to carry them, and servants to attend them, and gifts to give the King. One brought gold; one brought frankincense, which when it is burned, makes a fragrant smoke; one brought myrrh, such as was used for perfume by the King's daughter in the psalm, whose garments smelled of myrrh, aloes and cassia—gold for the little King's mother, but frankincense, meaning prayer and worship, for the King himself.

Away they went, then, with these gifts, over the hills and over the dales, across the deserts, miles and miles, keeping to the west. For the west was the land of expectation. The glory of the nations of the east had faded; their great Kings had been defeated; their ancient cities had been taken. Out of the west had come Alexander, conquering the world; at whose birth according to Cicero, the wise men of that age had seen a star. Out of the west the new King of the World would come. The Wise Men kept their camels headed to the west. And the new star shining overhead beckoned to them, so they thought, and led them on their way.

One day, as morning began to dawn after a night of travel, they looked into the sky and, behold the stars were out of sight! The clouds had drifted in and hid the stars, or the sun had risen up and made them dim; anyhow they lost sight of the guiding star. They had been steering by the stars, as if the sands of the desert had been the waves of the sea, but the stars had failed them. However, as they went on in doubt which way to turn, they came in sight of the walls of the city. And there, at last, was Jerusalem. The very place! "Here," they said, "we shall find the King."

And in they came, their camels making a commotion in the narrow streets, all the boys running to see the strange men in their outlandish dress, and the girls looking out of the windows, and even women with bonnets and men with beards crowding to see the sight. The news of their arrival spread through all Jerusalem. Everybody heard that Wise Men from the east were asking: "Where is He that is born King of the Jews? For we have seen His star in the east and have come to worship Him."

Now the King of the Jews was Herod, called "The Great." He was a strong ruler, who had been a friend of Marc Antony in that career of ambition which is described in Shakespeare's "Julius Caesar." After the fall of Antony he had gained the friendship of the Emperor Augustus. But Herod, in spite of his strong will and his good friends, lived in continual fear. He was afraid that he might somehow be unseated from his throne and lose his power. And his fear made him so cruel that he had put to death his two sons, whom he suspected of conspiracy against him. So when the question of the Wise Men came to the ears of Herod he was greatly troubled; and all Jerusalem was troubled with him, the people wondering what dreadful thing he might do next, finding that there was a claimant of his crown.

The likelihood that the new King was the King Messiah, the Saviour of the World, increased the general excitement; for at His coming—it was said—there should be wars and rumours of wars, Nation rising against Nation and Kingdom against Kingdom, the sun and the moon darkened and the stars falling from Heaven. The King Messiah would bring peace, but only after great tribulation. So everybody was afraid.

Finally King Herod sent for all his chief priests and the scribes. "Tell me," he said, "where is the place in which the King Messiah shall be born?"

And the chief priests and the scribes looked into the old books and out of the prophecies of Micah read these words: "Thou, Bethlehem, in the land of Juda, art not the least among the princes of Juda, for out of thee shall come a Governor that shall rule My people Israel." So the place was Bethlehem; there should the new King appear when the appointed time came.

Then Herod called the Wise Men to come to him by night when nobody could see them, and when they came he shut the palace doors so that nobody could hear. "Now," he said, "when did you begin to see the star? Tell me all about it. When did you start on your journey? Where did you suppose the King was born?"

And the Wise Men told him all they knew.

Then the King said: "Bethlehem is the place. I will tell you how to find the way. Go and search diligently for the young Child, and when you have found Him bring me word again that I may come and worship Him also." But he did not mean to do that, the wicked King. He meant to send and kill the young King in his cradle. Of this, however, the Wise Men knew nothing, being better acquainted with stars than with Kings.

They summoned their servants and mounted their camels, and away they started down the coast to Bethlehem. And as the night grew darker and the stars grew brighter here was [illegible] star himself like the face of [illegible] and upon it seemed to move before them, till at last they came to Bethlehem it seemed to stand as if to tell them that they had reached the end of their journey. When they saw the star they rejoiced with exceeding great joy. But when they saw the house on which the star was shining, and in which, the neighbours told them, there was a little child, they looked twice and were doubtful.

For the house was in a crooked street, in the part of the town where the poorer people lived, and the house itself was small; and as they stood outside they heard a man sawing wood in the yard. That seemed a strange sound to come from the dwelling of a King. Indeed the small boys in the street laughed aloud when the Wise Men asked if that was where the King lived.

"There is no King," they said, "in this town. The man who lives here is a carpenter."

And the Wise Men looked one at the other. "Shall we go in?"

But there was the friendly star shining approval and encouragement, and the men knocked at the door.

So they came into the house and saw the young Child, with Mary His mother, and fell down and worshipped Him. All their doubt was gone when they saw His face. Down they knelt on the bare floor and opened their treasures, like the unpacking of the Christmas presents. In one box was gold; this they gave to Joseph, who put it in his purse. In another box was myrrh; this they gave to Mary, who put it in the bosom of her dress. As for the frankincense, they set it in a bowl of brass upon the floor and touched it with a spark of fire, and the smoke rose straight and tall and fragrant as a flower. And the Holy Child, on His mother's knee, looked on, half pleased and half afraid.

By this time it was late at night, so they lay down to sleep. As they slept they dreamed strange dreams. The Wise men had a dream, and in the midst of it they heard a voice telling them not to return to Herod. And they rose up and waked their servants and their camels and started out for home in another way. Joseph had a dream, and in the midst of it he heard a voice telling him to take the young Child and His mother and flee into Egypt. "For Herod," said the voice, "will seek the young Child to destroy Him." And Joseph arose and wakened Mary and the Child, and away they went in haste to Egypt.

As for Herod—he waited first one day and then another, and never a sight nor a sound came to bring him news from Bethlehem. Then he saw that the Wise Men had deceived him, and he carried out his plan. He sent his men to Bethlehem to kill the King. And when they came and reported that they had obeyed his word, for not a little child had they left alive either in Bethlehem or in the country round about, he was much relieved, and all Jerusalem was relieved with him. And they forgot about it.

But the Holy Child, Prince of Peace, the Saviour of the World, was out of harm's way on the long road to Egypt.

"Consumption"

Three Doctors Attended Her. Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup Cured Her.

It has long been known that the balsamic odor of the newly cut pine tree heals and invigorates the lungs and consumptives improve and revive amid the perfume of the pines. Since but few can command the luxury of a visit to the pineries, it will be good news to many to know that the essential healing principle of the pine has been separated, and refined, and combined with other absorbent, expectorant and soothing medicines of recognized worth in the manufacture of Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup.

Mrs. Charles McDermott, Bathurst, N.B., writes: "I thought I would write and let you know the benefit I have received through the use of your Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup. Three years ago I had Consumption and had three doctors attending me, and they were very much alarmed about my condition. I was so weak and miserable I could not do my housework. While looking through your B.B.B. almanac I saw that Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup was good for weak lungs so I got a bottle and after taking ten bottles I was completely cured. At that time I weighed 135 pounds and now weigh 172, a gain of 37 pounds in three years. I now keep it in the house all the time and would not be without it for anything as I owe my life to it."

WHEN TONY PAWNED LUISA

BY MAIBELLE HEIKES JUSTICE.

"COME," said Tony, putting on his hat.

"Come where?" asked Luisa.

"You ask no questions," said the man more severely. "You come with me." He took the girl roughly by the arm and began to push her toward the little rack on the wall where hung her hat and coat. "Put on," he demanded, pointing.

But the girl only hung back.

"No! I will not!" she cried with the vehemence of her race.

The man's brow clouded. At the moment his face was not pleasant to look upon. In other respects, however, and in less excitable circumstances Tony might be called a handsome young fellow. But something about the corners of his mouth and the taper of his fingers bespoke a weakness. Tony's was not a strong character. The present scowl upon his face made him look almost brutal.

"Yes, go," said the woman, sour visaged. "Do as he says. It may only be a week." Then with a shrug she turned her broad back and went about her household duties. Apparently the girl could expect no sympathy here.

With gathering tears she began to pin on her hat, which Tony in his eagerness had pulled from the rack and jammed on her head. Her cloak he hung over his own arm, for the day was warm—early summer. Then, without so much as a word, but a look which was both a command and a threat, Tony led the way down the dark tenement stairs, Luisa following heavy hearted and heavy footed behind. Hurt and insulted, she felt as if she could scarce drag herself after him.

"Goodby!" shouted Teresa over the head of the stairs.

"Goodby," said Luisa tremulously, looking up, though in the darkness she could not see her future mother-in-law. Then she stumbled down after Tony.

When they emerged into the sunshine of the street it seemed that the children from every tenement were swarming like so many bees. Both shouts and wails rang out, telling the plight of all as they jostled in their rough play, and this noise, mingled with the cries of the pushcart venders, together with the warning yells of the street car drivers, made the place a veritable bedlam. So crowded were the sidewalks that Tony and the girl took to the streets. Grasping her by the wrist again, as if he feared she would yet elude him, Tony dragged her through the crowds. They were now penetrating the New York ghetto and the effort seemed impossible.

"Come quicker!" he exclaimed. "Josef is waiting and he may be angry. He will not want to give the money."

So Luisa stumbled on.

Indeed, a little tragedy was being enacted now but Tony did not think so. To his mind he was bringing about a temporary relief from a terrible trouble. In his great excitement he forgot how to govern either his words or his actions. To Luisa indescribable, it seemed that her heart was bursting with all manner of emotions—tears, fright, indignation—hate! How dared Tony do what he was doing! How dared he take her to the house of a strange person for—for——

"I will not!" she screamed, jerking her arm away. "I will not!"

"S-s-s-sh!" exclaimed Tony from between his teeth. "They will think you are a crazy woman." And he caught her arm again.

"And you, my promised husband!" she cried. "You to do such a thing!"

The Promise.

"S-s-s-sh!" whispered Tony. "Your promised husband, of course, Luisa. In one week you shall be my bride. My word, Luisa; my word it is so! But, listen, he continued, ominously, leaning over her, "I must get that money to-day. For, see that place?" With a long finger he pointed down one of the side streets. "See that place down there—the big building and the bridge? They call that the Tombs, and it is where they take the bad. I am the bad if I don't pay that money. I pay it to-day, then I get more money to pay Josef back, and I take you home again. See, Luisa?" And something like joyous hope lit up his dark features.

But Luisa did not see. Particularly, she did not see where Tony was to get the money to pay Josef back.

She regarded him sidewise as they walked along.

"Where will you get it—Josef's money?" she inquired.

"Ah! You wait," said Tony, meaningly. "I get it all right. I play again, Luisa, and I win next time."

With a little cry she tried to pull away again—in the movement was something of both grief and disgust.

"Play! You play some more? Bah!" She dipped her fingers in his face. "Be a man, Tony. Go work. You get you a cart, like Sofia Kirofsky's man. I will polish the apples, Tony, and we can make fifteen dollars a week. Sofia has a good man and he does not play. He—she was presenting the effect of her words—"but sit all the place, like Sofia's brother—the Grand plaza, Tony, with a hundred tunes, and we will go out to Central Park and play for the still life. Work it is, Tony, but twenty dollar [illegible] Twenty dollar! Hah! It's nice, Tony. Not so?"

But Tony was still glum. His hopes had arisen beyond a limit of polished apples, and he delighted not in the prospect of pushing a street piano about to collect pennies of the rich. Tony wished to be rich all at once, rich without work, like some of the other [illegible] he had met—American gentlemen who wore [illegible] Immaculate with cherished waistcoat [illegible] who wore large gold watch [illegible] position, the corner of one eye.

A Convert To Santa Claus
How One Man Saved The Day

By Roy Rolfe Gibson, Author of "In the Morning Glow," "Miss Primrose," etc.

AS AN old codger without chick or child I had looked forward to the visit with a good deal of pleasure, and upon my arrival, two days before Christmas, it was with a feeling of almost grandfatherly calm and pride that I wandered about my brother's house with the hand of my seven year old nephew in mine.

"Bob," said I—he was named for me—"which chimney will Santa Claus come down?"

"Santa Claus!" said he. "Huh! I guess you've never grown up."

"Grown up, I suppose you mean," I replied. "Little boys say 'growed up.' I used to."

"Nowadays," said my brother's wife, "it is not considered a good thing for children to talk baby-talk. It makes it more difficult for them to speak correctly afterward. And it tends to limit the vocabulary."

"I see," said I. "Well, Bob, you think I have never matured, eh?"

He hesitated.

"Santa Claus," he explained, "is your father and mother." And he added, as if too exclusive a definition might possibly be indiscreet, "Or your uncle. Or anybody that gives you anything for Christmas."

"And when did you find that out?"

"Oh, my—years ago!" he replied.

"Well, well," said I, "what a remarkable young fellows you are in this generation! When I was your age—my sakes! there was Santa Claus, and Cock Robin, and Jack the Giant-Killer, and the Old Man of Tobago—why, I believed in all of them. And do yet."

"Aw, Uncle Robert!"

"Sure I believe in 'em. You can't fool me telling me that there isn't any Santa Claus. I know better than that. If there isn't how does it happen that they have pitchers of him?"

"Aw, Mamma, Uncle Robert says 'pitchers!' You mean 'pictures,' Uncle Robert."

"Well, pictures then. And some of 'em show him a-comin' right down the chimley too!"

"Chimley! Aw, Uncle Robert, you mean 'chimney'!"

"Well, chimney or chumley, which ever it is. My gracious, but you pick a fellow up so! Why, you're the rearingest-tearingest dictionary fellow I ever did see!"

Bob giggled rapturously.

"You talk like Terence."

"Who's Terence?"

"Why, he's the ashman's boy."

"Well, I'm a boy."

"Aw, Uncle Robert!"

"Well, I am! That's how I happen to believe in Santa Claus."

"You must be a little boy then. Only little kids believe in Santa Claus. But how can you be a boy, Uncle Robert? You're tall and skinny. And your hair's gray. And you wear spectacles. And your nose is four inches long."

"Robert!" cried my brother's wife.

"By George!" said I; "I hadn't thought of my nose. Huh! And it's funny, but the more I can forget my nose the more of a boy I am every time. Yes, sir!"

And at that I grew pensive, I suppose, which my nephew interpreted accordingly.

"Don't think of it any more than you can help, Uncle Robert," he gravely urged. "I like you to be a boy and talk like Terence."

"Terence," said I, "must be a good deal of a man, Bob. Does he believe in Santa Claus?"

"Naw. He doesn't believe no thing."

"My stars!" I exclaimed involuntarily; "what a set of young skeptics you youngsters are!" And it set me to thinking and to comparing my own more credulous and imaginative and, as it appeared to me, more poetic childhood with that of Bob—noting my abstraction, concluded that I was on my nose again.

"Aw, come on, Uncle Robert! I guess it's only three inches anyway. Or three and a half. Why don't you measure it."

"Heaven forbid! My dear Robert, I should never be a boy again. It would spoil one of my dearest illusions—dreams, stories, you know."

"Do you have stories?"

"Oh, yes! You see, not having any little boy of my own I have to tell stories to myself and then, of course, I have to believe them. And that's how I manage to be a boy so much, in spite of my—what you mentioned."

"You mean your——"

"Just so."

"Well, why don't you tell me a story, Uncle Robert?"

"What's the use? You wouldn't believe it."

"Yes I would."

"No, Bob. You and the ashman's boy, you don't believe anything. And the only story I can think of just now is about Santa Claus—so what's the use?"

"I'll tell you, Uncle Robert! You tell it to Buffy" (Billy was the bull-terrier just then watching me from the rug with the corner of one glassy eye) "'cause he'll believe anything. Billy will. And I'll just listen."

"All right," I replied, more cheerfully. "I'm glad to know that there is some faith left in the world." And thereupon, addressing myself exclusively to Billy who, in spite of his master's recommendation for credulity, appeared at first to entertain a sniffing suspicion of my calves, I began:

"Billy," said I, "there are only a few of us left, you and I and several other dogs, but we'll never give in. Never! We'll scratch to the last flea—eh, Bill? on this here question of Santa Claus. You know there is a Santa Claus because you always sleep with one eye open; while other folks I mention no names, but those that have ears let 'em hear what it is—sleep with their two lids tight as blacking-boxes. Which is why they don't know as much as they think they do.

"But how do I know that there's a Santa Claus? Well, now, that's just what I'm a-pawing around to get at. That's the bone of the whole matter. And I've buried it—and I don't know where. And you'll know, too, if you'll keep your glass eye open, Billy."

"Say, Uncle Robert, did you know tha ta bull-terrier would eat bumblebees? Billy does."

I turned severely upon my nephew.

"Who's a-telling this story anyhow. I haven't said anything about bumblebees, have I? And the bargain was that you were to sit still and listen. I'm talking to Billy."

"As I was saying when the cat came in——"

But here again the story was interrupted, for at the word "cat" Billy was on his feet in an instant, scenting every chair and doorway in the room and whining miserably at the empty air. And I was forced, in some humiliation, to call upon his master before I could restore a proper literary atmosphere.

"Not to detain you unnecessarily," I began again with a flourish of irony which was lost, I fear, upon those three ears listening to my tale—the fourth was on the ghostly cat—"and to make a long story as short as possible, I'll begin in the middle. You know yourself, Billy, how it feels to hear things that you can't see—especially at night. Many's the dark night I've put my head under my blanket! And this was a par-ti-cu-lar-ly dark night—black as a stack of black——"

I paused in time.

"—possies," said I. "It was winter, but there wasn't any snow or moon or stars or anything—just black. You couldn't see your paw before your nose. It had rained and rained, and the old weather dogs said that there had never been such a winter since the flood, and that Santa Claus would have to beg, borrow or steal a boat somehow to bring his presents in, and trade his reindeer for two or three pairs of ducks."

"Or swans," my nephew interposed.

I gave him one look and went on as if nothing had happened.

"Well, I was a puppy then and pretty anxious, I tell you, Bill, about how things were coming out. I wanted a gun and a sword and a pistol and some jackstraws and a pencil-sharpener and a cornucopia of dog-biscuit——"

"Aw, Uncle Robert!"

"Dog-biscuit," I repeated firmly, "and I don't know what all—and the question was, how on earth they would get there in all that rain? But the night before Christmas, in the middle of the night, just when it was darkest, I sat up—in my box. Sat right up! I couldn't help it. I didn't know what I was doing. I just found myself sitting right up on my hindlegs—with my ears up, and my hair too!—listening, and just getting ready to bark when, holy cats!——"

But there, of course, the story stopped until we could induce that Bulldog to lie down again. His master had been right. His credulity was something marvellous. He would have believed anything, that dog would, and now lay at my feet, both ears up and both eyes open, with an expectancy that was indescribable. Never was a dog so interested in a story—so engrossed as Bill was from that time forth. Here, apparently, was a tale after his own heart—so realistic that he felt himself actually living the scene described and fairly panting for the solution of the mystery. He had his own notion, too, as to how it was to end; and every nerve and muscle was in readiness for the catastrophe.

"And what happened then, Uncle Robert?" inquired my nephew.

"Well, Bill," said I, "who do you suppose it was? I guess you know all right. And if you know and I know what's the use of——"

"But you said you'd tell!" cried an agonising voice. "You promised!"

"My dear," I replied as patiently and as gently as possible, "this story is between Billy and me. You're distinctly on the outside of the big tent—understand?—and if you want to see this show without peeking through the canvas—the performance is about to begin—you will just please step up and buy your ticket in the regulation manner."

My nephew stared at me, halfway between smiles and tears. (I could have hugged the boy.) But when he saw I was in earnest, "I haven't got any money," he said sheepishly.

"Well, what have you got them? What'll you give us to let you in?"

"I've got this"—doubtfully producing a nickel whistle that worked with a piston.

"All right," said I, pocketing the whistle out of his reluctant fingers. "That'll do very nicely. Come in. Sit next to Bill there.

And from that moment mortal story-teller never had two more attentive, open-eyed, open-eared, openmouthed listeners than I.

"Where was I?" I asked. "Oh yes! I remember now. I was sitting up in bed——"

"Getting ready to holler," cried Bob, hugging Billy in a kind of ecstacy.

"Humph!" said Bill—or something very like it—half grunt, half whine.

"Yes," said I, "and right there in the dark. For by this time my eyes were getting used to it and could make out the dim outline of things just a little—I saw——"

"Santa Claus," cried Bob.

I looked at my nephew in some surprise. His face was glowing—and there was something so human about that beautiful, unconscious ardor of his that I loved him the better for its inconsistency.

"Well, that's what I thought," I replied, "as I sat there in bed, holding my breath and listening—and listening! And holding my breath! And, now and then, you could hear a little tinkle—and then a little chink——"

"That was the sword!" cried Bob. And at this unexpected explosion Billy jumped nervously.

"And then," said I, lowering my voice, "everything would be as quiet as the grave. Why, you couldn't hear yourself think! But only for a minute. Or maybe two minutes. And then you'd hear another little jingle—and another little click——"

"Th-that," whispered Bob hoarsely, "must have been the gun! Or the p-pistol!"

"Well, by that time," I continued, "I was so excited—I was so sure that this was old Santa Claus a-rummaging around my room that I couldn't stand it a minute longer. I just had to know. So I began to creep out of bed——"

"Golly!" cried Bob.

"Yes, sir! First one foot and then the other down on the cold floor. And then I'd edge along and edge along, a-hanging on to the bedclothes so I could be ready to jump back if it shouldn't be Santy, you know—'cause, of course, it might have been something else for all I knew . . . and then I'd edge along a little farther—and then I'd stop a minute to keep from sneezing, 'cause my nose was itching like blazes an my throat tickled so I'd a-just had to cough in about a minute. And I didn't dare breathe or hardly think even. It's a wonder to me that my heart didn't give me dead away! Well I'd edged along down as far as the footboard and was a-lying low there a minute to catch my breath again when pummy-cripes—all of a sudden a big gruff voice, so near me I jumped clean back to the pillow and under the blanket, and:

"'Where's your stocking?'

"Just like that! Well, sir, Bob, I was as scared as you are now!"

"Oh, I ain't scared much!" my nephew assured me.

"Well, I was," I confessed. "I had swallowed my tongue and couldn't get it up again for a couple of minutes, and even then it spluttered so the old fellow had to repeat his question.

"'Where'd you say your stocking was?'

"And this time his voice wasn't so rough. He seemed to be chuckling-like. So I said:

"'H-hangin' to the——'

"'To the what?'

"'The ch-chair, sir. Don't k-kill me!'

"'Kill you! Thunder! I haven't got time. I've got one billion two hundred and eighty-six million four hundred and fifty-three thousand 799 chimneys to go down before daylight.'

"'Don't forget the p-pistol, sir,' I ventured.

"'Forget nothing!'

"'Or the g-gun.'

"He seemed hurt at that.

"'You are the one that forgets,' said he. 'I don't forget anybody or anything, at any time. I am Old Man Memory,' said he.

"'Do you g-go to all the houses?' I asked.

"It was a silly question, of course, but I had to say something to be polite. And like many another silly question it got a very sensible answer—which I want you to listen to, Bob, and never forget as long as you live. For, said he—old Santy, said he:

"'I go to all the houses where folks believe in me,' said he. 'And where they don't,' said he, 'they can get their own presents,' said he, 'and give 'em to whoever they like. I wash my hands of 'em. Yes, sir,' said he, 'when I find a little boy that doesn't believe in me why I let his folks look after him. He doesn't get any of my presents—not by a jugful!' said he. 'You couldn't hire me to go down his chimney!' said he.

"'I believe in you,' said I.

"'Or I wouldn't be here,' said he.

"'W-why don't you light the lamp?' said I. 'It would be easier.' And besides I was dying to have a look at him. 'You'll find matches on the t-table,' I said.

"He never said a word. I thought he was mad, maybe, so I said as politely as I could—and I always used to lisp when I was especially polite—'If you're hungry, thir, there'th a cookieth in the pantry crock.'

"No answer. Not a word! And then I listened—and I could hear the clock, which I hadn't noticed before—but he was gone. At least I suppose he was, but somehow it was so awful quiet there I didn't dare stir till morning or say another word. But when it was light and I could see that he was gone, why, then I got up and looked around and, sure enough, there was the gun and the sword and the pistol——"

"And the jackstraws!" said my nephew.

"Yes, and the pencil-sharpener—"

"And the cornucopia, Uncle Robert!"

"Yes, of dog-biscuit—all right there in the room."

My nephew was aghast. Billy, by this time, had settled down upon the hearthrug in a state of utter disgust and resignation, his nose laid wearily upon his paws, the half of one melancholy eye non me and one wilted ear just raised enough to hear the right word in season, should it be spoken—should I by any chance yet rouse myself and with an eloquence worthy of the occasion redeem his disappointed hopes.

"But how will he know that I believe in him now, Uncle Robert?" asked my repentant nephew. "I didn't last year, you know."

"Oh, he'll know!" I answered.

And it was only then, when the performance was over, that I discovered that the nickel whistle which Bob had given me wouldn't blow, and I handed it back like a bad quarter, and with an air of mild reproachfulness that was lost on Bob. For Bob, I discovered, was in a bad way. Or rather—as I suppose any other revivalist would put it—he was in a most promising and fertile condition.

"He'll know," I said, "if you really do believe in him."

"Oh, I do!" cried Bob, his chin quivering and a lump in his throat—a convert if there ever was one.

But the dog Billy was asleep.

"SLEEPLESSNESS."

Thousands of people all over this land lose night after night on a sleepless pillow. The eyes do not close in the refreshing slumber that comes to those whose heart and nerves are right.

Some are troubled with weak and smothering spells; others palpitation of the heart; others have their nerves unhinged; but whatever the cause—it comes entirely from a derangement of either the heart or nerves, or both. Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills offer the blessing of sound, refreshing slumber. They do this by their invigorating effect on the heart and nerves and will tone up the whole system to perfect condition.

Mr. H. Jewel, Keswick, Ont., writes: "I am glad to have the pleasure of telling you what Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills did for me. I would have weak spells, seemed to lose my breath, and would have to get up in the night as I could not sleep. I tried many medicines but found nothing good until I used Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills. I took three boxes and it is three years ago since I did so, and I haven't been troubled since."

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are 50c. per box, or 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

The Night Of The Children

By Jas. Oppenheim, Author of "Dr. Rast" and "Wild Oats"

CHRISTMAS was in the air. The dusty, starry night turned golden in the city avenues. Up and down the pavements the crowds swept, laughing, talking, jostling cheeks ruddy with the weather, eyes sparkling with the lights. As they moved, there unrolled before them the endless film of brilliant shop-windows, crammed with riches; and through the swinging doors oddly-cut people were sucked in and ejected. At the curb the toy peddlars shouted, the chestnut stands sent up their smoke. It seemed as if the million in the city had poured out to mingle in a great festival of joy and brotherhood. People laughed at one another, a wave of good humour drenched the air. It was as if on this night hate and strife and greed had been sloughed off; as if the race said, "Come, let us be happy with one another. We are all here together. Let us meet and mingle in joy and goodwill and peace."

It was the Night of the Children. Far through the sleeping city the million children were in their beds and it was for them that these people met. For their children they were sweeping the shops, that Christmas morning, bright down with the candles of the pine, and hanging bulgy stocking, and the mysterious new toys. And it was the thought of the children, possibly, that made these men and women so light-footed, so bubblingly joyous, so innocently happy. It made children of them and they mingled with each other, like laughing, rollicking boys and girls.

There was one vast department store nearly a block square and six stories high which sucked in vast masses of the crowd. Pendant from its ceiling hung white moons of light, and under these a density of humanity slowly swirled about the sparkling laden counters. The air was over warm with breathing, and tingled with the excitement of shuffling shoes, rattle of packages, and a hive hum of talk and exclamations. The place was electric with the push of many wills, the clash of desires, the impeded hurry, the drawing near of closing time. 10:30 had come and gone, and yet the crowd was unsatisfied; it hung and strained and clamoured and struggled to get its fill.

One counter especially was besieged. At this was sold little five cent packages of "snow" for Christmas trees. Behind this counter stood Mamie Riggs, seventeen years old, thin, emaciated, bloodless, her eyes pale and drawn and wrinkled, her eyes bloodshot, her lips trembling. As she took out check and received and made change, and handled the envelopes her hands visibly shook. Faces crowded near her, leaned close, arm-lifted, fingers jerked near her eyes.

"This snow?"

"Yes, ma'am."

"How much?"

"Five cents."

"Only one for five?"

"Only one."

"How much in a package?"

"I don't know, ma'am."

"Don't know?"

At least five voices interrupted.

"See here, I want a half dozen of these." "Where's my change?" "I can't wait all night." "Isn't there any one to wait on me?" "Say, I'll speak to the floorwalker if I don't get proper attention."

Mamie answered as best she could. "Just a minute! You said five? Six? Change hasn't come. I can't help it, ma'am!—Yes, it's five in a package. Snow? yes!—I'll wait on you in a minute."

She spoke evenly in a monotone. But she was doing her work mechanically. In fact, Mamie wasn't "all there." Her fingers, her lips, kept working but the real Mamie seemed in a trance. Sunburst after sunburst of faces shot the air before her, a loud sea-noise of voices swept her brain, and she felt deathly sick. Every nerve in her body ached. It seemed as if her feet were broken and were bleeding. She was horribly nauseated and dizzy. She felt as if she were going to faint. By sheer force of grit she clung to the counter, she kept upright; she moved, talked, worked. On and on it went, minute by minute, and still the faces crowded, the voices rang out, the packages had to be delivered, the change made, the checks written out.

Afterwards it seemed to her that her whole year had been rushing toward this Christmas climax. Most of that year she had worked in a cheaper store—worked 9 1-2 hours a day for $2.62 1-2 a week. As this was not enough to live on, she had boarded with an aunt in Hoboken, paying her $1.15 a week. But it took her an hour and a quarter to get to work and she rose early before dawn to get to her counter at eight sharp. Carfare cost her $1.26, which, with the board, left her twenty cents a week. No recreation, no fresh air. And every few nights she was up till midnight laundering her clothes that she might be neat appearing. This work, she felt was killing her, so she left it and took a position in the larger store for $4.00 a week.

But she had to figure close. She slept nearby in a charity dormitory for six cents a night. She went without breakfast; lunch and supper consisted of coffee and rolls for ten cents each. Laundry was twenty-one cents a week. Clothes and extras came close to $2. In this way she spent all her wages—toiled from 8 a.m. to 6:15 p.m. and on Saturdays till 9:0. Strength does not come on coffee and rolls, nor in nine and a half hours of standing indoors, nor on lack of pleasure and mental growth. Mamie grew sickly, wrinkled weaker day by day, she was afflicted with violent headaches, and at seventeen she was already a aged and aged woman, unfit for marriage and child-bearing and housework, with no future but incessant toil, and no savings against sickness or old age.

This was bad enough. But when the holiday rush began the store was kept open until 11:30 at night. Mamie grew feverish, had dizzy spells, was too sick to eat. Her condition grew worse each day and now on this last day she had come to work at 8 in the morning feeling that she could not endure a half hour of standing up, nor the crowds, nor the noise, nor the foul air. That day was a wild show for sure, measured by minutes, endless and pitiless. On and on it went, on up to noon, on from 12:45 to 6 on from 6:30 to this very minute.

"This snow? How much? See here, where's my change? Do you think I can wait all night? Say, I'll tell the floor walker. Yes, wrap me up six, in two packages, please. Isn't there anyone else waiting at this counter?

Sun-burst after sun-burst of faces, a-roar of talking, dazzling lights, confusion, ha-ha, noise, hands flying, lips moving, and this would go for another hour and a half.

A man pushed his way through the crowd. "See here, kid" he cried. "You come up ten of these quick!"

Mamie leaned forward on the counter and smiled dimly.

"Ten? Ten?"

"Can't you hear? eight, nine, ten!"

"Ten. Ten what?"

She leaned further forward, she sighed, he slipped and then her arms and face and hair this bosom all slouched among the packages on the counter.

Cries went up. "She's fainted! Something's the matter! Get water! Help her up!"

The crowd jammed; the floorwalker broke his way through muttering:

"Mamie down? Thunder; and just now when we can't replace her! Why the devil couldn't the girl stick it out?"

Next morning the nurse in the hospital wished her a merry Christmas. She looked up uncannily and went off in a delirium, crying shrilly:

"It's five cents a package, ma'am! Just a minute! Yes, snow—snow for Christmas trees."

At the same moment, over the wide-spread city, the little children hopped out of bed and ran to their nighties to the parlour. There flamed the candles of the pine, there hung the ballet stocking, there lay the mysterious packages. Little eyes glistened with awe and wonder, women and men were blinded with happy tears, and the Christmas bells pealed love and brotherhood through the tingling dawn.

And one woman said to another.

"The jam was awful last night. I thought I'd never get home. And the service in the stores was insufferable."

Asked the other: "Why didn't you shop earlier in the month?"

"Why? Oh, you know how it is!"

THE FAMILY HEARTH

Christmas again, with its peace and good will and wonder! How our friends multiply and increase in value as the Day of days draws near! How the touch of human hand thrills us and the look in human eyes! To our surprise we are not ashamed to be good, to be kind, to be loving. For this little space out of the long, selfish year we are glad to be ourselves. We give freely of our love, we offer our labour without price, and we speak kindly words that are rarer far than rubies. Once more we take courage and let our hearts have their way, and life laughs and is glad. When Christmas comes the world suddenly grows better, sin less lovely, and Heaven nearer and all because a little Boy was born in Bethlehem. Perhaps—who knows?—we might carry with us throughout the year the joy of this Christmas living.

—Edwin Osgood Grover.

The Christmas Dinner.

The Christmas dinner to be enjoyable must be composed of easily digested, well-cooked and daintily served foods. In many sections of our country if turkey can be served only once a year it is on Christmas Day. In some of the older countries, however, goose is considered the correct Christmas meat. In New England turkey, being an American production, is used always for Thanksgiving; goose and boiled ham for the Christmas dinner. Whichever meat is chosen select the remaining portion of the Christmas dinner to harmonize and blend with it and the surroundings.

Never serve a sweet dessert, like charlotte russe, ice cream, fruit jelly or a cornstarch pudding, at the end of the Christmas dinner. If you cannot afford to make a plum pudding serve in its place a plain fruit or suet pudding. This may be made the day before Christmas, and re-warmed at the last minute.

The table decorations should be simple and sensonable. Hot-house flowers are certainly not in harmony with the Yuletide. Holly, mistletoe, ground pine, cedar berries and Mitchella are splendid and pretty.

If you live near the coast an oyster cocktail is appetizing and simple for the first course, but you may in perfectly good keeping serve as first course half a grapefruit, or begin the dinner with a simple soup. Do not attempt an elaborate meal unless you can have it complete in all its points. Very few women succeed in giving elaborate meals, and still fewer of their guests enjoy them. There is always a right and a wrong way of doing everything; the right way is usually simple and elegant; the wrong way is frequently difficult and pretentious. If you have but one servant, or do your own work, select foods which may be easily prepared, and, above all things, never try a dish with which you are not perfectly familiar. Menus are but suggestions to give ideas of correct routine and combinations. One starchy vegetable may be substituted for another, one succulent vegetable for another of the same chemical composition. For instance, rice may take the place of sweet or white potato, or macaroni, hominy or winter squash. Chickens may take the place of turkey or goose, or one may serve a rib of beef or a saddle of mutton. Bake the turkey or goose without stuffing. Try this method and you never again will be guilty of stuffing bread inside of poultry to draw out its juices and destroy its flavour. If you care to serve two meats for the Christmas dinner serve boiled or baked ham with the turkey, a saddle of mutton with the goose, a rib of beef with chickens.

Some Christmas Recipes.

Marrons With Whipped Cream.—Cut out some rounds of cake, white cake preferred, and place two bottled chestnuts in the centre of each round. Sprinkle over these a little of the liquor in which they were preserved, and force a ring of whipped and sweetened cream around the chestnuts using a forcing bag and tube for the purpose. Serve in very dainty thin saucers.

Fig Mincemeat Pies.—Weigh half a pound of flour, sift it, rub in three tablespoonfuls of butter or lard, add one teaspoonful baking-powder and a pinch of salt, then gradually add just enough cold water to form a stiff paste. Roll out once. Line small moulds with the pastry and fill with mincemeat, adding a few chopped figs. Bake in hot oven for fifteen minutes.

A Salmon Salad.—Garnish salmon with cucumbers, tomatoes and lettuce, sprinkle with salt, pepper and paprika; add a few drops of chili vinegar, and slices of hard-boiled egg. Cover with this sauce: Yolks of three eggs, juice of a lemon, salt and red pepper, a pinch of grated nutmeg, three tablespoonfuls of butter and half a cupful of water. Stir over the fire until thick.

Fruit Volau-vent.—For this use any fruit in season. Make a large case of puff pastry. Whip up two cupfuls of thick cream; sweeten and flavour to taste and have ready the fruit, either raw or stewed. Put a layer of it in the case, then a layer of the cream, then the rest of the fruit. Lastly heap the rest of the cream on top, and decorate with a little fruit and nuts.

Pepper and Grapefruit Salad.—Cut slices from the stem ends of three green and three red peppers. Remove the seeds and refill the shells with the pulp of grapefruit finely cut, chopped celery hearts and broken English walnut meats in the proportion of twice as much grapefruit as celery and two nut meats to each pepper. Arrange on lettuce leaves with mayonaise.

How to Make Montreaux Sandwiches.—Boil four eggs for a quarter of an hour, then pound them with two tablespoonfuls of butter, one tablespoonful of finely chopped parsley, and sufficient anchovy essence to make all a good pink colour. When well pounded add a little paprika and spread the mixture on slices of buttered bread. Serve garnished with parsley.

Noel Salad.—Scoop out yolks from two hard-boiled eggs; add one tablespoonful of butter, half a teaspoonful of anchovy paste, a few drops of lemon juice, half a teaspoonful of white pepper, and fill the whites. Cut with liquid aspic jelly and parsley. Place on tomato slices seasoned with olive oil and tarragon vinegar, adding salt. Garnish with chopped aspic and parsley.

Salad Saint Nicholas.—Blanch twenty-four button mushrooms, drain them, cut into thin strips; cut in like manner four artichoke bottoms and three pickled walnuts. Mix together with orange juice season with salt and pepper, dress with oil and vinegar. Divide into orange baskets, cover with mayonnaise, and decorate with slices of olives and chopped parsley.

How To Market.

But few young housewives, and for that matter not many old ones, know how to tell if meats and vegetables are fresh when they are bought, or how much to buy for the family.

One should, however, aim to follow one-half pound of meat for each person.

The fat should be firm, but if hard and skinny, it indicates that the animal was old, and tough; if thin, from a screwny animal.

The best veal is usually of a pale colour although the veal of a deep colour is more juicy. When examining veal see that the kidney is inclosed in fat, which should be firm and white.

The odour, if any, ought to be natural and not disagreeable.

Beef or mutton should be of a deep rose colour, and the fat a rich cream. The choicest cuts for roasting are the sixth, seventh and eighth ribs, the sirloin and porter-house cuts. Sirloin and short cut porter-house steaks are best, although many prfer the pin-bone steak.

Good pork has a smooth, thin rind, which is firm to the touch and of a light colour.

Bacon should be white and firm, not yellowish or too fat. A pink or rosy streak is considered a good sign. A steel skewer (pin for holding meat in shape) driven into bacn not ham should come out clean. If particles o fmeat cling to it or if any unpleasant smell is detected, it should not be used.

When selecting poultry see that the feet are soft and moist, the eyes clear, the flesh plump and healthy-looking. A bluish or greenish look around the veins indicates decay.

If there is any suspicion that a fowl has been in cold storage pour hot water into the inside. If any disagreeable odour is detected the fowl is not fit for the table.

A Good Bearing.

A distinguished bearing is the greatest asset a woman can have. It counts more than beauty, for what is beauty without it? It counts more than fine clothes for fine clothes worn by a woman with a stooping, uncertain carriage lose al ltheir effect.

There was a fine time when a woman was taught to carry herself well. She was taught to walk just as she was taught the other feminine arts and graces; it was part of her education.

She practised before a long mirror, with a book on her head. Up and down, up and down, until by force of habit she had attained a graceful bearing.

She sat long hours in a straight backed chair to acquire a straight and graceful back.

The French woman is taught to show the top of her collar; in other words to hold her head high. That is the secret of their "chic." One clever woman in New York makes a specialty of teaching women to see themselves as others see them.

She is a paid critic, who tells a pupil all her faults with frankness of a member of the family, for which she charges a good round sum.

When she has finished the pupil walks well and has a charming carriage; if her voice was loud and grating, it is soft and sweet; if her manner was nervous and uncertain, it is composed and easy.

Thoughts on Christmas.

The time draws near the birth of Jesus, the Christ. Over the world comes a change, momentary but wonderful. For one day the principal motives of human effort cease to act and give away to their opposites. Charity replaces greed; kindliness replaces jealousy and hate; brotherhood replaces competition. Rivalry in acquisition yields to rivalry in giving. For one day in the year the conduct of the Christian world conforms not merely in hollow pretense, but in reality, to the precepts of Jesus. There is on earth, if not peace, at last the willingness to cease from strife, and if one day is a little too brief to perfect the feeling and practice of good will toward men, still, considering how great the change is from ordinary habitudes, we contrive a fair imitation of it. Considering, too, that the Christmas spirit is expected to last for one day only, the world shows, it must be admitted, great respect to the Gallilean shepherd by taking so much pains to give an air of verisimilitude to its brief submission to this rule. For one whole day in the year we are Christians in deed as well as name.

The brotherhood of man is the most fertile of all truths. Whatever is good in modern civilization comes from accepting it; whatever is bad, by denying it. Democracy is the teaching of Jesus expressed in government, but thus far the expression has been timid, tentative and inadequate. Inventions will make it possible to express his teachings in industry and commerce. Some wholesale softening of the heart will make us apply his teaching in conduct. There are psychic waves now permeating the world which seem to indicate that some such transformation of civilization may not be faraway. Perhaps the kingdom of heaven is nearer than we think with brotherly love for its constitution and peace. Then Gethsemane and the crown of thorns will become symbols not of tragic failure, but of triumph, and the Christmas spirit will be the spirit of every day in the year.

A right round merry Christmas.

Joy be with you, peace and good will.

A happy home, health and happiness be thine.

In this world not only well wishing but well doing is a colossal virtue.

* * *

The life we live gives value to our words and wishes, and so, dear reader, we hope your kindly wishes and cheery greetings may be golden.

* * *

Christmas, the home day, the Chris day! May its lessons and its blessings gladden all hearts and make a truth of the common salutation, "A Merry Christmas to you."

* * *

"Peace on earth, good will toward men," the grandest of all carols, dearest of all angel hymns—time has destroyed none of its sweetness and has preserved all of its promise.

* * *

May love and joy cross the threshold of every home, peace cover the dear ones as a mantle, and gladness so abound, sad memories for a moment may be forgotten.

The one great and essential fact about Christmas is this; that it is the celebration of a birthday. Hence, we will do well to have in remembrance Him for Whom the day is named and in Whose honour it is appointed to be kept. And, having in mind the shepherds and the stable, we will remember how His life began in simplicity, was lived to the end of it in accordance with the beginning.

* * *

It is far more important that parents realize that this pagan error of the ascendancy of Santa Claus should not mislead our children on Christmas Day. In whatever way we may choose to celebrate the day let us somewhere, at the very beginning—before breakfast, at breakfast or directly after breakfast—keep a brief space wherein some one may read the second chapter of Saint Matthew and Saint Luke, closing with the singing of an old Christmas carol, old words to old music in the old way. Then, if you please, let Santa Claus come into the day, but let us remember well what the original Santa Claus, the good Saint Nicholas of Myra, stood for. He showed himself a friend and earned the reputation which has been his through generations by one dominant characteristic; relieving the necessities of a poor family. He went around very quietly, when nobody was looking, and put things in through the window. Thus he has right to be a modest place in our festivities. Let us follow his example. Let us do that sort of cheerful thing. Let us think of one or two, or more according to our means, to whom we may bring in a quiet, friendly way an added pleasure, with whom we may somehow share the overflowing happiness which fills our fortunate days. And this we will do in the name of Him whose anniversary we keep, remembering His own poverty, and how He went about doing good, and how He told us that we ought to love others even as He loved us.

* * *

Think of Him, who was a man of sorrows, acquainted with grief, and without a home; yet from His presence an ocean of consolation has spread and covered the earth with its waters of healing.

TERRIBLE NERVOUSNESS AND SICK HEADACHES

DOCTORS TREATED HER FOR YEARS
And Pronounced Her Case Incurable

"FRUIT-A-TIVES" RESTORED HER TO PERFECT HEALTH

The human body is the most wonderful machine in the realms of created things. Every part is related to every other part, all bound together by the marvellous Nervous System, which connects every organ to the brain. When anything goes wrong with any part of the body, the nerves carry the message of trouble and what we call "pain" is the result. Nervousness is not a disease in itself, but is the result of one or more of the really vital organs becoming diseased. It is the vain effort of the nerves, signalling for help, that weakens them and causes the excessive nervous attacks with which so many women suffer.

MRS. FRED GADKE.

What glad news it will be to such women to read Mrs. Gadke's letter and learn that they can cure themselves of the dreadful Nervousness and Sick Headaches.

LAKELET, ONTARIO, MAY 19th, 1910.

"Kindly publish this letter of mine if you think it will benefit other women who might be afflicted with the diseases I have had in the past, but am now, thanks to "Fruit-a-tives", completely cured of. It is my firm belief that every woman should take "Fruit-a-tives" if she wants to keep herself in good health.

Before taking "Fruit-a-tives", I was constantly troubled with what is commonly known as "Nerves", or severe Nervousness, and this Nervousness brought on the most violent attacks of Sick Headache, for which I was constantly taking doctor's medicines without any permanent relief.

Constipation was also a source of great trouble to me and for which the Doctors said "I would have to take medicine all my life", but "Fruit-a-tives" has banished all these troubles and I am now a well woman.

When I started taking "Fruit-a-tives", I took four at a time, but have reduced the dose so that it is only necessary for me to take one in a week, and that one dose every week keeps me well. I am glad to recommend "Fruit-a-tives" whenever the occasion presents itself and cheerfully authorize the publication of this letter as well as my photo". MRS. FRED GADKE.

"Fruit-a-tives" is the ideal medicine for women's use. Being made of pure fruit juices, the action is mild and the taste extremely pleasant. "Fruit-a-tives" not only regulates the bowels, tones up the stomach and purifies the blood—but also acts as a splendid tonic for both the nerves and the general system.

50c a box—6 for $2.50—trial size, 25c. If your dealer cannot supply you with "Fruit-a-tives", send regular retail price to Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON QUESTIONS

Dec. 11th, 1910.

The Crucifixion, Matt. xxvii:15-50.

Golden Text—He was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities. Isa. liii:5.

(1.) Verses 15-18—What feast is here referred to, and what did it commemorate?

(2.) Why was it either a good or a bad custom, for the gover nor to release a criminal, to the Jews, at this feast?

(3.) Was Pilate right in his conjecture, that the Jews had delivered Jesus to him through "envy" and what did he mean by that word?

(4.) Who was this Barabbas, and what crimes had he committed.

(6.) What was the significance of the dream of Mrs. Pilate?

(7.) How much dependence can we place in dreams of these days?

(8.) These chief Priests were more kindly disposed to a thief, and a murderer, than they were to a good man, whom they regarded as a heretic; how do you account for this?

(9.) Why have so called heretics in the past been treated so cruelly? How are they treated to-day?

(10.) What motives prompted Pilate's desire to release Jesus?

(11.) Verses 22-24—What ought Pilate to have done with Jesus, without asking his persecutors?

(12.) How much credit, if any, should be accorded to Pilate for saying Jesus was a just man, and for wanting to release him?

(13.) Verse 25—A few days before this the people gave Jesus a loyal welcome to the city and shouted, "Hosanna to the son of David," how do you account for their now wanting him to be crucified?

(14.) May God verily hold the Jews guilty of the murder of Jesus, and on what sense has his blood been on their heads?

(15.) Verses 26-30—How do you estimate the character of Pilate, who knowing Jesus to be a just man, condemns him to death to please the people?

(16.) Verses 29-30—What was their purpose in putting a crown of thorns on Jesus' head, putting on him a scarlet robe, and putting a reed in his hands?

(17.) Why did Jesus submit to all these cruel insults?

(18.) When have followers of Jesus, since then, had to suffer similar insults, and cruelty, and do they ever have to endure anything similar to-day?

(19.) Verse 34—Did they give Jesus the vinegar, mingled with gall, as an act of cruelty or mercy?

(20.) Did David know when he wrote Ps. xxii:18, which is quoted here in verse 35, that he was speaking of what was to happen to Jesus? Why or why not?

(22.) Verses 39-42 — If we were standing at the foot of the cross of Jesus, seeing him ebbing out his life's blood, ought we to be glad or sad? Why? (This question must be answered in writing by members of the club.)

(23.) Were the inhabitants of heaven, and was God glad or sorry to witness the crucifixion of Jesus? Give your reasons.

(24.) Give your ideas, as to whether God would have preferred that the Jews should have accepted Jesus, and not crucified him?

(25.) Verses 43-50—Why, as in the case of Jesus, does God often allow us to suffer, to the full limit, the agonies of pain and sorrow?

(26.) Had God actually forsaken Jesus, or was this cry result of his exquisite suffering.

For Business Use

There are a great many places and occasions when the possibility of getting extra heat immediately effects an economy by decreasing the discomfort of the worker. In the office, in the early morning or late at night, before or after the steamheat is on, it is of importance to have extra heat. In the builder's outside office, in the shipping room, in the checker's shack, on exposed lofts, in railroad stations, in studios, the Peace on Earth, Goodwill to Men.

"NO WAR or battles' sound
Was heard the world around;
The idle spear and shield were high uphung;
The hooked chariot stood,
Unstain'd with hostile blood;
The trumpet spake not to the armed throng
And kings sat still with awful eye,
As if they surely knew their sovran Lord was by.

But peaceful was the night,
Wherein the Prince of Light,
His reign of peace upon the earth began."

Peace reigned throughout the world on the starlit, wintry night, two thousand years ago, when the herald angels sang of the fulfilment of the promise of the ages, the coming of a Saviour, Christ the Lord, born it is true in a manger in Bethlehem, but a Prince, nevertheless, a Prince of Peace, the only and well-beloved Son of the King of Kings. Peace and joy mingled with awe in the hearts of the humble shepherds, who, hearing the song of the angelic host, left their flocks and hastened, never doubting, to pay homage to the long hoped for Messiah. Peace and joy in hope fulfilled compensated the Wise Men for the toil and weariness of the long journey over deserts and mountains as they knelt in adoration by the infant King and poured their treasures at His feet. Peace and joy filled the virgin mother who pondered all these things in her heart. And each recurring Christmas season through all the centuries has brought peace and good will anew to the hearts of men, good-will in the smile on the lips and the friendly greetings; peace in the fact that the joyous season is no time for the bitterness that rankles, the unpleasant bygones. Armies engaged in battle have ceased for a little their warfare and as brothers, the bitter foes have raised together their voices in a Christmas hymn of praise. Once a year, at least, there is an approach to the true brotherhood of man. The air is electric with good feeling and poor indeed is the man or woman, though endowed with all earth's riches, who is incapable of feeling the thrill of Christmas, the thrill of companionship in a common heritage with the whole world, the thrill of mystery that surrounds gift-giving and gift-receiving, the thrill that comes through adding a little to the sum total of the world's happiness, of adding immeasurably to the joy in the season of some one individual or individuals.

A Merry Christmas.

"Christmas comes but once a year," we are wont to say, Christmas with its merriment and good cheer, its holidaying for the children, its surprises for old and young, and above all, Christmas when grouches and grievances are laid aside; when ailments are overlooked and times found to be pleasant, really pleasant to those we love the most, to the friends who have borne with us, to the next door neighbors and the neighbors down the street, to the people we meet in business or professional life, to the butcher, the baker, the candlestick-maker and even to the stranger we meet in the street. This is the very essence of Christmas; not the dinner we eat, nor the value of the gifts we give or receive, but just this spirit of good-will and true courtesy. But we are a hustling, bustling, strenuous people, every one of us, young and old. We are busy with our toys, busy with our school, busy with the preparation for life, busy debuntantes caught in a social whirl, busy matrons keeping up with the pace, busy housewives oppressed with many cares, busy ministers, doctors, lawyers, busy capitalists, day-laborers, drummers, busy heads of firms, busy office boys who find life one long hustle. Perhaps we are only busy spending our money, devising means of reducing our flesh, of adding to our avoirdupois, or even busy killing time, but everyone of us is busy, busy, busy. Too busy are we as we awake in the morning to say to ourselves, "A Merry Day," and having said it, to set steadfastly about making it the best kind of a day possible, let come what will. At breakfast time we are shadowed by the tasks, the cares and the worries of the coming hours. We forget that God has given us another beautiful, new, clean, white page, and instead of writing the introduction with golden words and smiles, we blot it with our churlishness. There is no time to gladden the maid with a gift of smiles, to cheer the cook with words of commendation; no time to send husband, sons and daughters forth to the battle of life equipped with pleasant memories; no time to start little children to school with their birthright of happiness; no time for the little thoughtfulnesses that will make brighter all the day for the ones who remain at home.

Once a year we have a kindly greeting for all whom we meet, for the employer, the bookkeeper, the office boy. Once a year we have a smile for all who serve us and for all whom we serve, for those who jostle us in the highways, who crowd us in the street cars. Once a year we take out our Christmas spirit, shake out the creases, dust it, and the marvel is that we wear it so gracefully. We don it for the great occasion, for a few we do as previous, and, perchance, if our digestions are in good repair, for a few days after,—then we fold it up with moth balls and label it, "To be handled with care, not warranted to wear." Perhaps we toss it on the topmost shelf, or store it in the attic with other lumber that has seen more gracious days. Passing strange it is that it comes out each year sweet and fresh and guaranteed to fit. What a blessed old world it would be if the Christmas spirit could be donned for each and every day of the year, if the song of the angels, "Peace on earth, good-will to man," found an echo in every heart, not one day in three hundred and sixty-five, but each and every day in all the year!

THE WIDOW'S MITE

"Ring Out the Old, Ring in the New."

Fast upon the heels of Christmas comes the baby new year, a bundle of possibilities. Few and far between are the individuals who do not snatch at least a little time for mental stock taking from the closing days of the old year. Pessimist indeed is the man or woman who does not look forward with a renewal of resolutions of hope and of courage to the days that are to come. Have you failed in your purpose during the year that is quickly passing into eternity? Have resolutions been formed but to be broken again? Is your grip upon yourself less firm than it was a year ago? Have you been disappointed, bereaved? Sorrow and suffering have but opened the door upon a broader view. Only when the darkness of night has fallen do the myriads of star-jewels reveal the infinity of the universe. Have the three hundred and sixty-five days of 1910 been paved with broken purposes and shattered hopes? Even these may be transformed into "stepping stones to higher things." Do the chains of a degrading habit bind you more closely than a year ago? The little new year comes eagerly, a smile on its lips to greet you, tiny hands extended to give you a new confidence, a new hold upon yourself and upon life. Has 1910 been a happy year, a year of striving and achieving, a year of approach to the ideal, which, like "the vision with the beckoning hand, still allures and still eludes," receding to a higher plane just as it seems within the grasp?

From painting by Bonfomon
ADORATION OF THE SHEPHERDS

If such has been your lot, you have laid a splendid foundation upon which to build a greater success in the days that are to come. To everyone in the world, great or humble, learned or illiterate, rich or poor, old or young, wise or simple, is given this gift of 1911, a book in which each and everyone must write deeds great and small. Some will scarcely reach the end of the first chapter, others will write "Finis" at the end of twelve. Balance your accounts, take a little time from the festivities, the rush and worry of these closing days of the year to know yourself, to take leave of the old before entering on the new.

When at midnight the bells "ring out the old, ring in the new," may they truly ring out the "grief that saps the mind," the bitterness, the spirit of forgiving, of doubt, of meanness, of worry, of cherished wrongs. Carry over into the new only that which has been worthy in the old.

May the bells ring in only peace and joy in hopes renewed and the will to dare and to achieve.

If you have a task to perform, a habit to break, an enemy to forgive, or a friend to make, begin it:

"Lose this day loitering. 'Twill be the same story
To-morrow, and the next more dilatory;
True indecision brings its own delays,
And days are lost lamenting over days.
Are you in earnest? Seize the very minute;
What you can do, or think you can, begin it;
Boldness has genius, power, and magic in it.
Only begin it, and the mind grows heated;
Begin it and the work will be completed."

A MERRY CHRISTMAS AND A HAPPY NEW YEAR.

Angry and worry are like echoes; they do not exist until we call for them: and the louder we call the louder is their response. —Horace Fletcher.

It does not take long to learn that the good excludes the bad; that the higher always shuts out the lower.—Marden.

Robson—A Conquered King

BY THE REV. G. R. B. KINNEY

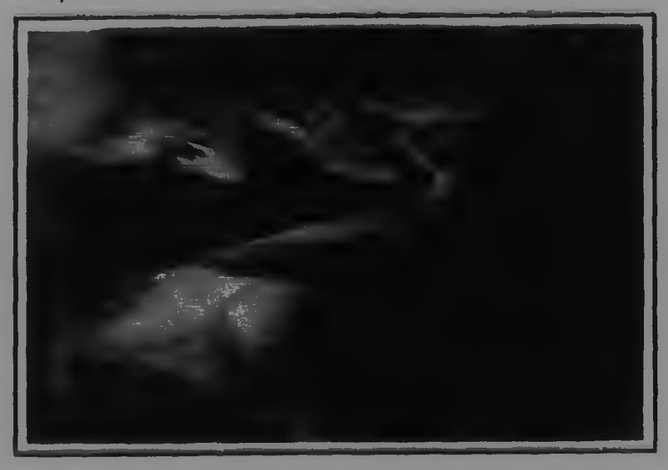
WE PUT in three seasons trying to conquer the grim, scarred old peak, Mount Robson, and it took every packhorse, and every blanket, and every ounce of grub, and every bit of muscle and nerve we could rake out of our inner consciousnesses—not to mention shuttles—to look abroad from his naked horns on the wrinkled valley of the Fraser.

Yes, we had that look—had it on Friday, August thirteenth, 1909—had the ascent of the highest peak in all the Canadian Rockies for Canada and the Alpine Club—and between you and me and the piebald bell-mule, it took most of our faculties to do it. It was in August of 1907 that I first saw the old bench-mark of 1875 on a big Douglas fir at the summit of Yellowhead Pass, where the waters of the continent divide and turn towards two oceans.

The summit of Yellowhead Pass is not a popular resort by any means. Only a very rude trail marks the progress of civilization there, yet. We knew all about that rude trail. It had been worse than rude to us for two hundred miles—ever since we left Laggan with the gay intention of climbing Mount Robson. We had hauled our ten horses, individually and collectively, out of the Pipestone muskegs; we had hewn our way and scratched our faces in the fallen timber of the Saskatchewan and the Brazeau, and tumbled off and into things innumerable times; we had seen the big Columbia Glacier, were intimately acquainted with Mounts Wilson, Coleman and Athabasca; had fed our beasts in the high pastures of the Big Horn and the Goat and the Cariboo. Yes, we knew that trail to the point of calling it by its first name, and when we finally camped on the bank of the Miette, and after building a raft, gingerly trusted ourselves and our outfit to the mercies of its tumbling waters, we almost sighed with relief.

HERE IS THE DIVIDE OF THE CONTINENT. THE WATERS OF BERG LAKE FLOW TOWARDS THE PACIFIC; THE STREAMS FED BY LAKE ADOLPHUS IN THE DISTANCE REACH THE ARCTIC SEAS

For a score or more of miles we followed the Miette.



AROUND THE SHOULDER OF MOUNT ROBSON REACHES A MIGHTY TONGUE OF ICE A MILE WIDE AND SEVERAL MILES LONG

The Rainbow Mountains, in all their gorgeous colors, flanked us on either hand, and brooded over us while we tumbled with the current, or toiled across timbered bottoms and sunny meadows where the wild pea-vine grows as high as the horses' girths. Up here is the lair of all the rivers of the continent. We were constantly fording them—wetness was the habitual condition of our collective trouser-legs, and a good share of most of our possessions. Personally, I could have got along very comfortably with a few less rivers, and I fancy the rest of the party felt the same way, after the three hundred and sixty-first ford.

The party was an Alpine Club party, however, used to such incidents, and we had a definite purpose in view, which no amount of fords could discourage: to climb Mount Robson. No white men had ever been known to reach the king of the Canadian Rockies, and Dr. Coleman, of Toronto University, had organized us from the members of the Alpine Club, with this intention.

Finally we passed the last barrier, crossed the last ford, and swung into the valley of the Grand Forks. Eight or ten miles away the great limestone wedge of the king, 13,700 feet up in the air, buttressed across the whole valley, with a fall bigger than Niagara roaring unnoticed at his feet, and the whole north side of him one gigantic, sheer, unbroken rock-faced slide from pinnacle to base, rose before our overawed gaze. The grand, isolated peak, cloaked with untold ages of snow, towering far above all the other peaks of its range, its high-flung crown almost touching Heaven, its perpendicular walls and overhanging glaciers brooding over the deep valleys with awful calm, is one of the grandest sights imaginable to man.

We did not make the summit that year, for Mount Robson cloaks himself in storms, and is not sympathetic towards venturesome human ants, but we did a great deal of investigation around his lower slopes. I, from my roving disposition, became the explorer of the party, and was constantly wandering off on solitary jaunts. My first discovery was the beautiful lake that bears my name, and nestles at the foot of Robson on his western side. It rivals Lake Louise for beauty—and in fact, the whole region, dear as Banff, Paradise Valley, Lake Louise, Yoho and Glacier are to the heart of the mountain-lover, without doubt surpasses the beauties of all the known Canadian Alps.

TUMBLING GLACIER CONSTANTLY DISCHARGES ICE-BERGS WITH THUNDEROUS CRASHINGS INTO BERG LAKE

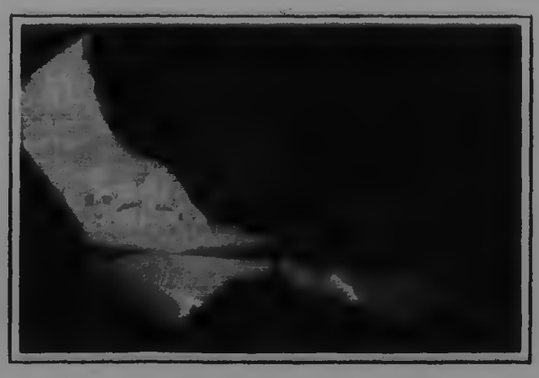
So fearful is the height of Mount Robson above this valley, and so sheer is its whole face, that the avalanches slide from its very highest peak to within a few yards of the lake, where they lie the year around, at an altitude of not more than two thousand five hundred feet.

On every side of the great "Valley of a Thousand Falls", a huge wall of perpendicular cliffs, thousands of feet high, hems the valley in closely. Here and there, on sheltered ledges, patches of spruces relieve with their dark greens, the greys of the rocks, while everywhere the numerous streams from the great glaciers all around plunge over the high precipices in countless falls of spray. A mighty tongue of ice lolls over a cliff at the head of the valley and curves so low as to reach the valley floor, while here and there in the bottom of the valley are huge springs from which flow full-fledged streams. A high-up glacier on the west side has such a large field of snow at its source and flows down so steep an incline that huge chunks of ice are constantly breaking off its precipitous front and crashing into the valley below. The most fearful avalanche I ever saw came from this glacier, and it took ten minutes by my watch for the foremost chunks of ice to reach the valley bottom.

At the head of the valley and to the north, rises Mount Turner, a splendid peak of some twelve thousand feet altitude, while to the right, at an altitude of between two and three thousand feet above the valley, the Grand Forks, swift flowing from Berg Lake, leaps from the cliff and forms a superb falls as high as Niagara, then plunges in a number of beautiful cataracts down a very narrow gorge, till it sweeps across the floor of the valley. And from the Goat Trail, that winds in and out among these overhanging cliffs, truly the "Valley of a Thousand Falls" is a marvel of Alpine scenery.

Failing to climb Mount Robson in 1907, owing to climatic conditions our party returned the next summer, and made several heroic attempts up the east side of Mount Robson.

MOUNT ROBSON ON THE NORTH IS ONE SHEER SWEEP OF NAKED ROCK FROM BASE TO SUMMIT, TOWERING 13,700 FEET IN THE AIR ABOVE FALLS HIGHER THAN NIAGARA. THE CROSS MARKS THE SITE OF CAMP HIGHEST-UP, FROM WHICH MR. KINNEY MADE HIS CLIMB TO THE PEAK



THE SNOWY HEAD OF MOUNT HELMET RISES 12,000 FEET IN THE AIR, AND IS CLOSELY ATTACHED TO MOUNT ROBSON AS TO SEEM ALMOST A PART OF THE MAIN PEAK

We Toiled Across Sunny Meadows where the Wild Pea-vine Grows as High as the Horses' Girths

We camped high up on the big glacier three different times, only to be driven back by storms. We succeeded in making two splendid climbs up the great cliffs of ice and snow on that east side, reaching an altitude of 10,500 feet the first time, or as high as the top of Mount Stephen, and 11,700 feet or higher than Mount Temple, the second attempt. All day long on each trip we labored among extreme dangers of avalanche and crevasse, but our efforts to reach the peak that year were not crowned with success.

Failing as a party, I made a two-day try up the rock face of the north shoulder of the mountain by myself. I slept on a snow-covered ledge, 1,000 feet above tree line, and then toiled on the next day till the middle of the afternoon, reaching an altitude of nearly 11,000 feet, but a blizzard drove me down, so that attempt failed also.

This year, 1909, hearing that an American party was about to seek the coveted prize, and being unable to obtain companions for a party, I got together a pack train of three horses and three months' provisions and left Edmonton alone to capture the mountain, hoping to pick up a companion on the trail.

Countless difficulties retarded my progress, horses would get stuck in the muskegs and packs come off; flooded rivers had to be crossed, in one of which I nearly lost my whole outfit.

At the place where I swam my horses across the Athabasca, I fortunately fell in with Donald Phillips, a young Ontario guide, and persuaded him to go along with me.

We followed the route of the Grand Trunk Pacific over the Yellow Head and down the Fraser as far as the Moose River, which we followed to Moose Pass, and from there we reached the east side of Mount Robson by way of the Upper Smokey.

A year before when I went up the valley of the Smokey with Dr. Coleman and party, a terrific electrical storm was raging, followed by a heavy fall of snow. But this year Phillips and I found the place flooded with glorious sunshine and a cloudless sky, and as we swung around a promontory, six miles away Mount Robson stood a startling wonder of mighty height and dazzling purity.

On Saturday, July twenty-fourth, Phillips and I made our permanent camp at tree line, on the north shoulder of Mount Robson. We turned our horses loose to wander where they pleased, and for three weeks they fattened on the sweet grasses of the mountain meadows.

Monday dawned fine and clear. Shouldering our heavy packs, we climbed the cliffs and rolled up in our blankets that night in a sheltered nook on the west side, nearly ten thousand feet above the sea. The next day we fought our way up the almost vertical north side of the peak and chopped our way up the steep ice of its couloirs, but by three o'clock we had attained an altitude of not much more than eleven thousand feet, so we returned to the permanent camp at the foot of the mountain to re-provision for another trip.

Wednesday night, July twenty-eighth found us camped on a narrow ledge several hundred feet higher than our high-up camp of the Monday before.

While eating our supper of warmed-over beans and stew, we feasted our eyes on the wonderful scenes around us. With only one or two exceptions, the peaks were all on a level with or below us. Countless glaciers of purest white hung in long crystal curtains from the peaks and dotted the landscape for hundreds of miles as far as the eye could see, as if a mighty sea of swirling billows had been turned to stone and its foaming fury to ice. The setting sun had bathed this scene in a flood of red and gold. But the blues shaded off into purples, and the purples to deepest indigo till the gathering night rose out of the valleys, eight thousand feet below, and changed those gorgeous sunset tints to sombre blacks and greys, save where the snow-fields gleamed under the light of the stars. We wrapped ourselves in rabbit-skin robes and eiderdowns to keep out the biting cold, while the wind, though only a zephyr in the valley below and coming out of a fine weather sky, drowned the orchestra of a thousand waterfalls and swept our high-up shelf with the fury of a fierce gale, while now and then the avalanche boomed and roared. Then the early morning brought again the sun and painted the scene anew. Oh, it was well worth the desperate fight just to see the sun so rise and set.

In that early morning light we tackled a new route up that wall of rock before us with such success that by nine o'clock we had attained an altitude equal to the highest we had reached Tuesday, July twenty-seventh, over 11,000 feet. But at this height every possible lodging place was filled with snow and ice, and so fearful was the work of step-cutting in the ice that it was afternoon before we had climbed higher than 12,000 feet. That northern edge of the peak seemed only a few hundred feet above us when we turned back for camp.

At a little below eleven thousand feet I left Phillips in charge of the packs and set off to explore a better route for our next climb. Following a ledge around to the west and south for half a mile, I rounded the north-western shoulder to find that the great west side of the peak offered far better climbing than the cliffs of the north, and hope sprang up afresh in my heart. All we needed was good weather.

That little side trip had so delayed us that it was long after dark before Phillips and I got back to "Camp Higher-up" on the little ledge, so we had to spend another wretched night in the cold. A snowstorm rose in the night, and by early daylight the drip from the rocks above us had so soaked our bedding that cold, wet and breakfastless we were finally routed from our little bed and, plunging through the screaming-gale, sought the comforts of our camp at the foot of the mountain.

From July thirtieth to August ninth, it stormed incessantly on the mountain. As we were almost completely out of provisions, we spent the time in exploring the country and getting whatever game we could find, ptarmigan, blue grouse, marmots and gophers. On August ninth, though the weather was still very unsettled, we sought to make our "highest-up" camp on the knob of the northwest shoulder. We each carried a fifty-pound pack on our back to an altitude of ten thousand feet, when a fierce blizzard suddenly stopped our work. Three inches of snow fell in the first ten minutes. Realizing our danger, for avalanches were already roaring about us, we cached our packs in a niche in the cliffs and hurriedly at no small risk, sought the valley below.

Three days later we succeeded in worrying our packs up to the "knob," between 10,500 and 10,700 feet altitude, on the west, where we succeeded in making a bed on a snow-covered shelf. Our sleeping place that night, as to altitude and surroundings, would closely resemble the very peak of Sir Donald or Stephen, excepting that the valleys below us were much deeper and at the low altitude of little more than two thousand feet. For hundreds of miles the peaks lay at our feet. Scores of miles of the Fraser valley lay open below us like a map and the mighty Fraser was but a tiny, crooked thread of silver. Then the valleys disappeared and we were alone with the stars and the snow-white peaks and the grinding avalanches.

Friday, August thirteenth, dawned clear and cold, and by the time the sun rose we were on our way to the peak. The many cliffs we had to climb were only from ten to a hundred feet high, but those hard, smooth, icy slopes between were tipped at an angle of from fifty to seventy degrees. One slip on the part of either of us meant a fearful slide to death thousands of feet below.

The storm-clouds of sleet swept down and engulfed us while we were at little more than eleven thousand feet altitude. We had not enough provisions for another two-day climb. This was our last possible chance and we despaired of ever reaching the peak. But fortunately, though the clouds were very dense and cold, but little snow fell. The storm was a blessing in a way, for though it spoiled our chance of getting pictures, it shut out of view those fearful sheer slopes below.

In five hours of steady work we reached the peak. The clouds broke open for one brief minute, revealing to us a wonder world, with the Fraser more than 11,000 feet beneath us; then the storm swept in worse than ever.

It took us seven hours to reach our "highest-up" camp, so dangerous had the softened slopes become on account of the storm, and by the time we reached our camp in the valley the climb had cost us twenty hours of hard work—but we had finally captured Mount Robson for our country and the Alpine Club of Canada.

Our provisions were gone, and we were hundreds of miles from anything like civilization. We made the trip back on what mountain-gophers and small birds we could pick up, and the only reason why we didn't eat locusts was that they wouldn't sit still long enough to be caught. Finally I reached Edmonton on September sixth, only to find that Cook and Peary were monopolizing the interest of the world, and leaving no room for such small fry as Mount Robson and me.

The Cratchets' Christmas Dinner

THERE never was such a goose. Bob said he didn't believe there ever was such a goose cooked. Its tenderness and flavor, size and cheapness were themes of universal admiration. Eked out by apple sauce and mashed potatoes, it was a sufficient dinner for the whole family. . . .But now the plates being changed by Miss Belinda, Mrs. Cratchet left the room alone too nervous to bear witness to take the pudding up and bring it in.

Suppose it should not be done enough! Suppose it should break in turning out! Suppose—— * * * All sorts of horrors were supposed.

Hello! a great deal of steam! The pudding was out of the copper. A smell like a washing-day! That was the cloth. A smell like an eating house and a pastry-cook's next door to each other, with a laundress' next to that! That was the pudding! In half a minute Mrs. Cratchet entered flushed, but smiling proudly—with the pudding like a speckled cannon-ball, so hard and firm, blazing in half of half a quartern of ignited brandy, and bedight with Christmas holly stuck into the top.

Oh, a wonderful pudding! Bob Cratchet said, and calmly, too, that he regarded it as the greatest success achieved by Mrs. Cratchet since their marriage. * * * *

At last the dinner was done, the cloth was cleared, the hearth was swept and the fire made up. The compound in the jug being tasted and considered perfect, apples and oranges were put upon the table and a shovel full of chestnuts on the fire. Then all the Cratchet family drew around the hearth. . . . . .

Then Bob proposed—"A Merry Christmas to us all, my dears. God bless us!" which all the family re-echoed.

"God bless us every one!" said Tiny Tim, the last of all.—Dickens' Christmas Carol.

Lowrie's Good Will

By S. E. Kiser.

MUCH snow had been piled in a drift upon the window sill, and the wind was blowing madly through the deserted streets. Lowrie looked out and the feeling of loneliness which had possessed him all day was intensified.

"Christmas," he said half aloud, "and here I am without a friend to wish me well; with nobody to care whether I am merry or sad and with no one to whom I may even offer a friendly greeting. I suppose the boy in the elevator or the porter would be glad enough to exchange a word or two with me, if I made it worth while, but—"

He suddenly ceased to think of his loneliness and stood in a listening attitude. In the adjoining room a woman was singing. The notes were faint, but sweet and clear, yet there was a pathos in them that strongly appealed to him. He inclined his head to hear the words:

"Lead Kindly Light, amid the encircling gloom,
Lead Thou me on!
The night is dark and I am far from home—
Lead Thou me on."

The singer paused and Lowrie stood looking out at the whirling snow which was falling so thickly that the light of day was almost shut out. The afternoon was well advanced. Soon the electric lights would begin to glow in the streets, and the candles on the Christmas trees would be lighted. Happy children would shout with glee; fond parents would join their little ones in giving expression to the spirit of the occasion; eager lovers would be greeting each other with delight and he would be sitting down to eat his Christmas dinner alone, with no one but a waiter who expected a tip to give him a word of cheer.

"Here I am Without a Friend to Wish Me Well"

Between his room and the one which was occupied by the singer there was a door, evidently to be opened only in case the two apartments were used as part of a suite. Lowrie, who was far from home and alone in a big hotel for the first time in his life on Christmas day, looked curiously at the door for a moment and then went over to it and putting his ear close to the panel, listened. After a little while he could hear a faint sound as of some one rocking on the carpeted floor, and presently, very softly and sadly the words:

"And for bonnie Annie Laurie I'd lay me down and dee."

Then there was silence again. Lowrie straightened up, walked to the window, and after looking out for a moment turned back with a smile. Taking one of his cards from his pocket he wrote on the back of it: "Merry Christmas," and pushed it under the door.

He drew a chair over near the door and sat down to await developments. It was rapidly growing dark, but he forgot to pity himself for his loneliness and neglected to turn on the electric light. He was wondering if his card had been seen and trying to picture to himself the kind of woman his neighbor might be.

"Perhaps," he thought, "she is stout and has gray hair. She may even have grandchildren. Well, in any event, she has a sweet voice, and it is a certainty that she is lonely."

He had closed his eyes while he was musing, and his thoughts winged away to the place where his mother and sisters were probably entertaining their friends and wishing he might be with them. At length he came out of his reverie and, looking down, at the place where he had pushed his card under the door, saw something small and white. He picked it up eagerly, turned on his light and read:

"Thank you, and may your Christmas be a thousand fold merrier than mine."

It was a woman's writing in the fashionable scrawl, but no name was signed to the message. She had merely used a strip of the paper furnished by the hotel, so there was no hint of her identity. Lowrie's interest was aroused, and he decided to pursue the adventure. On the stand in his room were several sheets of paper, in addition to pen and ink. He sat down and wrote:

"I am here alone, a stranger. Is it fair that a Christian should be friendless on Christmas?"

This message was pushed under the door, and almost immediately the corner that had been left protruding on his side disappeared. Evidently the lady had expected a continuance of the correspondence. Lowrie forgot that he was lonely; forgot that a big hotel far from home was a dismal place to be in at Christmas time. He was busy wondering whether there would be an answer to his note and what it would be.

He was not kept long in doubt, and the thrill which he experienced when he saw the folded piece of paper gently pushed under the door was one of distinct pleasure. With nervous eagerness he picked it up and went over to the table under the chandelier. As he opened it the world suddenly became dismal again. It was his own note that had been returned to him. But his disappointment was brief. Under his message the lady had written the one word, "Ditto."

After he had studied the matter for a time Lowrie sat down and spread the paper out before him. He looked at it curiously and again tried to picture to himself the lady in the adjoining room.

"Pshaw!" he thought at last, "she is probably a good, plain old soul who is the victim of some such combination of circumstances as that which has placed me in my present predicament. If she were young and beautiful she wouldn't be alone and neglected. A young and beautiful woman never has to sigh for attention or companionship. Yet, why should I permit her to remain there alone and unhappy merely because she is unfortunate enough to be unable to claim youth or beauty? This is a time when good will should prevail, a time when every one should make an effort to be kind."

Then he took up his pen again and wrote:

"May I be permitted to offer the greeting of a well wisher, and to hope that I shall not be considered too bold if I suggest that it might be possible for us to have a little Christmas festival of our own? Though we are strangers to each other there is no reason why we should not at such a time as this be friends. Elliott Lowrie."

He pushed the paper under the door and listened, with his ear against the panel. He heard the lady cross the room to get the message; heard her as she picked it up, and experienced a curious feeling as he realized that they were separated only by an inch or two of wood.

"What curious beings we are," he thought, "and how we shut ourselves out from one another. We sit in loneliness and despair when beyond the thin walls against which we lean there may be others who, if they knew of our troubles or were aware of our existence, might have it in their power to lend us happiness or rescue us from misfortune. It is all because of the foolish conventionality by which we are enslaved. I hope she may at least wear her hair in a becoming fashion. Almost any woman can be attractive if she knows how to wear her hair."

He heard the lady go away from the door and cross the room again, and, fancying her sitting at her table and dipping her pen in the ink well, he went to the window. The lights were glowing in the street; the snow was coming down in a slanting deluge, and a few people with upturned collars and bowed heads were hurrying along far below. As he stood looking out it occurred to him that a warm room in a big hotel was not a bad place in which to be, even at Christmas time and far from home. The answer he expected was waiting for him when he turned from the window. This is what the lady had written:

"Thank you for your kind greeting. I hope I shall not be considered too bold if I suggest that you propose some way in which we can determine whether we shall care after we have seen each other to have a Christmas festival of our own. It would be awkward if we were to decide to have a festival and then you were to find, on seeing me, that you did not care to go on with it, or if I were to have a similar feeling after seeing you. We ought to decide upon some plan which will leave each of us free to advance or retreat without making it embarrasing for the other. You seem to be resourceful. I leave it to you to suggest a mode of procedure. "Constance Hallock."

It had not previously occurred to Lowrie that the lady might after seeing him be inclined to wish to continue to treat him as a stranger and he was disposed at first to be a little resentful because she had hinted at such a possibility. It was Christmas time, however, and he generously forgave her. After having done that he began working out a plan in accordance with her suggestion. In a few minutes he had it formulated. It all came to him as if he had been mysteriously inspired, and he made haste to write it out, thus:

"My Dear Miss (or Mrs.) Hallock: In a little while the few unfortunate people who are stranded here will begin assembling in the dining room to partake of such Christmas cheer as may be had there. I propose that we join them. If you will take a seat at one of the small tables at the east side of the room, I will watch for you as you enter. In case I desire, after seeing you, to complete the arrangement which has been suggested, I will enter shortly after you. I will pretend to have forgotten something, and, just after getting inside the room, turn to go out. Before leaving the room, however, I will glance over at you and pause for an instant. If you bow to me I will know that the Christmas festival is to proceed, and after I have gone out for a moment I will return, greet you as if you were my dearest friend and sit down beside you. In case you do not bow to me when I pause before going out I will not return. Or if when I have seen you, I do not wish to go on with the programme I will not enter the dining room at all. Thus we shall both escape any embarrassment. If this plan meets with your approval I will go downstairs in fifteen minutes, and take a position from which it will be possible for me to see you as you direct the head waiter to give you a seat at the east side of the dining room. "Elliott Lowrie."

"You are Ten Minutes Too Late, Miss Hallock"

In a little while this answer was returned: "Your idea is a very ingenious one; but make it twenty minutes instead of fifteen. I shall need that much time to get ready. (Miss) Constance Hallock."

Twenty minutes later Lowrie stood near the door of the dining room. Only four ladies had entered, and they had all been accompanied by men. Then there came a woman who was unaccompanied. She was very tall, very angular, very much made up, and she bestowed upon him a silly smile as she passed near where he stood.

With a feeling akin to homesickness he watched her as she lingered near the entrance until the head waiter approached. Lowrie saw her point toward a small table at the east side of the room, and sad at heart, he turned away. Hardly realizing what he did, he rushed over to the elevator and returned to the fifth floor. Then, still downcast, and completely oblivious of the fact that it was a time when good will should have prevailed, he hurried along the hall toward his room, intending to shut himself up there until the next morning, when it would be possible for him to escape from the hateful place.

As he was half blindly fumbling at the keyhole the door of the adjoining room opened, and, looking up, he beheld a lady, young, graceful, beautiful and tastefully dressed. She seemed to be surprised to see him and paused for a moment as if she intended to retreat. But she thought better of it when Lowrie took off his hat, looked at his watch and, smiling in a way that caused all her doubts to flee, said:

"You are ten minutes late, Miss Hallock, and those ten minutes almost caused me to miss what I am sure is going to be the most delightful experience of my life."

A year later they occupied these rooms again, and the door between them was open. But they were on their wedding journey, then.

Be always ready, of course, to strike the iron while it is hot, but be ready, also, to make it hot by striking.

GRILLES AND NOVELTIES

During the past year we have added to our plant the works formerly carried on at Trenton by Thomas McGrachie & Son, who manufactured all kinds of Grilles and Novelties. The above cut is one of the numerous designs shown in our latest Catalogue. The workmanship on these Grilles is superior to any on the market to-day, which a visit to our works by intending purchasers will be readily acknowledged. Everything we manufacture in this line is entirely new and an inspection of our designs will bear us out in this claim.

Economy Bottle Crate

We have also the exclusive right to manufacture in Ontario the McGeachie Patented Economy Bottle Crate. These crates save bottles, space, labels, time, covers and money, and are extensively used by large dealers in the United States, and have also been adopted by several companies in Canada, amongst them the Calcutt Brewing and Malting Company of Peterborough, who have decided to use them exclusively (after giving them a severe test.) We will gladly demonstrate this crate to users of bottle crates; also to any citizen interested in a new patent, who call at our works at any time. We find it necessary and intend to enlarge our buildings in the near future to take care of the increase in this branch of our business.

Planing Mill Department

Don't forget when you want Sash, Doors, Blinds, Interior Finish and Lumber, that we can save you something on all work entrusted to our care. And the workmanship will be second to none.

The Flowers of Many a Flock

THE CHILDREN AND CHRISTMAS

WITHOUT the children how much of the joys of Christmas would be lost to us! Of all holidays, this, the last of the year, arouses more anticipation and brings more real pleasure to the little folks than any of the half-dozen or so which precede it. Children look upon Christmas as THEIR holiday, and upon the rest of humanity as mere lookers-on. And it is well it is so. But we lookers-on have this advantage—that in watching the little ones we can enter into the spirit of their enjoyment, and in a way and for awhile live the happiest part of our lives over again.

THE SANTA CLAUS FICTION

WHEN the child ceases to have faith in the existence of Santa Claus—a real person age with jolly countenance, flowing beard, sled, reindeers and the rest of it—he ceases to enjoy Christmas as best it is enjoyed, and we older ones to that extent lose our interest in Christmas. As we watch the child and observe the first evidence of skepticism we feel sorry for him. But he treasures his earlier belief as long as he can, and finally, when he makes bold to declare, "There is no Santa Claus," we feel sorry for him, for we know that for him Christmas has lost some of its joys.

THE NEW YEAR'S WISHES

NOTHING could be more eloquent than the concluding sentences of Dickens' charming story, "The Chimes": "So may the new year be a happy one to you, happy to many more whose happiness depends on you! So may each year be happier than the last, and not the meanest of our brethren or sisterhood debarred their rightful share in what our great Creator formed them to enjoy."

THE OLD WORLD

IT'S a world full of hearts and it is a world on which the sun never rises but it looks upon a thousand bloodless battles that are some set-off against the miseries and wickedness of battle-fields; and we need to be careful how we libel—Heaven forgive us!—for it is a world of sacred mysteries, and its Creator only knows what lies beneath the surface of His lightest image.—The Battle of Life.

A JEWISH RABBI ON CHRISTMAS

IF A JEW may offer a word of Christmas counsel in this season of commemoration of the Jew who has given His name to the age, I would urge that "Peace on earth, good-will to men" be not only a word of the Christmastide, but the work of Christendom throughout the year. Even as the church is not to preach at the toiler one Sunday in the year. Labor Sunday, so-called, but to preach for the toiler every Sunday in the year, so the church is to fulfil the message of the Christmas season by translating it into fuller life. "Peace on earth" means—an end to international war, an end to racial prejudices, an end to irreligious bickerings, an end to industrial strife. "Good will to men" means—justice to all, freedom to all, love to all, fellowship of all! Have we such peace and good-will? Do we really wish to have such peace and good will? Until we do, is there glory to God in the highest?

Mother Songs

By Eunice Tietjens.

Mother's Christmas.

Little, white soul in my keeping, mine to guard and mine to sway,
Little heart so pure and tender, (May God keep it so alway!)
Baby mine, we must rejoice, for to-day is Christmas day

Christmas is the day of babies, is the best day of the year,
When the whole glad world rejoices for the Christ Child that is here,
And a mother's heart lies trembling with a wondrous joy- and fear.

Lullaby.

Sleep, mother's flower of heaven,
Sleep, little rose of mine!
Haloed with gold more precious
Than gleams on eastern shrine,
Looking with eyes of sapphire
On a world that seems all divine.

Fain would I follow thee, sweetheart,
Into the world of dreams,
Catch the bright shimmer of heaven
That on thy vision gleams,
Share thy white soul's wanderings
On banks of perfumed streams.

Only to thee comes the summons:
Mother must vigil keep,
Stand at the gate of dreamland
Guarding thy slumbers deep.
Sleep, little flower of heaven,
Sleep, mother's rose-bud, sleep!

The Little Woes

Hush, baby sonling! Mother will banish
All of the little woes.
To the Land of Nowhere they will vanish
Where the little shadow goes.

Where the little shadow runs to hide him
When the brave, gold sunshine glows.
All the little woes shall run beside him,
For mother, mother knows!

Waking Song.

Wake, mother's baby, so warm and wee
Soft and sleepy, so cosy to see;
Rub pink fists in rose-hidded eyes
And tell old Sand Man it's time to arise!

The Careless Angel.

Babykin, babykin, dear little mite,
Are you a mortal or are you a sprite?
Surely the angel to whom you were given
Lost your real label: "A Cherub from Heaven."

RICHARD HALL & SON

The substantial growth of a business that has established for itself a reputation for dependable advertising, conscientiously lived up to, is exemplified in that of Richard Hall & Son's, Limited, Mammoth Dry Goods and Home Furnishing Store. Believing that the confidence of the public pays better in the long run than a little present additional business gained by over statements, this Firm make it a point to adhere to the letter to every offer they make in any advertising they put out, and the result has fully justified their belief. Customers know that goods are exactly as represented, when they purchase, and this has always been the aim of the management.

To such dimensions have each of its many departments grown, that each would make a complete separate establishment. All gathered under one roof and management, make this large shopping centre, one that Peterborough may well be proud of. Just now, the preparations for the Holiday season are most elaborate, and completely metamorphise the appearance of the interior. Everywhere are displayed gift lines, of unusual merit and attractive in their exclusiveness. The smallwares department on the first floor naturally presents the greatest variety of suggestions for the Christmas buyers, the only difficulty arising when a final choice is to be made from the profusion of articles displayed, where all are distinctly appropriate.

The Dress Goods, Staple and Linen sections are equally well provided with an endless array of just such items as seem exactly suited to be the bearers of one's good wishes to near or distant friends. The second floor seems to be devoted to such articles as might appeal to members of families wishing to supply needed articles to other members, using the Christmas occasion as the time most suitable for making the thoughtful purchase. A new hat for sister, mother or daughter, might easily follow a visit to the Millinery Section. The same members could also be most appropriately remembered with a new dress, waist skirt, suit or coat from the Ready-to-Wear Department, that contains, perhaps, more exclusive styles than most city stores.

Then a visit to the House Furnishing section would at once suggest the long wished for new Curtains, Rugs, Carpets, Wall Hangings and Home Beautifiers, of every description, making the choice perhaps difficult on that account, but sure to be something in good taste and certainly most acceptable to the recipient.

Taken altogether, the Hall Store presents a dazzling and tempting array of holiday goods that will appeal to every member of the household, who visits the store.

Never Hold Malice

Oh! never "hold malice;" it poisons the life,
With the gall-drop of hate, and the nightshade of strife;
Let us scorn where we must, and despise where we may,
But let anger, like sunlight, go down with the day.
Our spirits in clashing may bear the quick spark,
But no smouldering flame to break out in the dark;
'Tis the narrowest heart that Creation can make,
Where our passion folds up, like the coils of a snake.,

Oh! never "hold malice;" it cannot be good,
For 'tis nobler to strike in the rush of hot blood
Than to bitterly cherish the name of the foe;
Wait to sharpen the weapon, and measure the blow.
The wild dog in hunger—the wolf in its spring—
The shark of the waters—the asp with its sting—
Are less to be feared than the vengeance of man,
When it lieth in secret, to wound when it can.

Oh! never "hold malice;" dislike if you will;
Yet remember, Humanity linketh us still;
We are all of us human, and all of us erring,
And Mercy within us should ever be stirring.
Shall we dare to look up to the Father above,
With petitions for pardon, or pleading for love;
Shall we dare, while we pant for revenge on another
To ask from a God, yet deny to a brother?

TAMMANY HALL WAS BURNED OUT

Famous Political Headquarters Gutted by Fire This Morning—A Spectacular Scene

Special to The Examiner.

NEW YORK, N.Y., DEC. 12.—Tammany Hall, the famous "Tiger Den" from which the affairs of city and state were at one time supposed to be directed was gutted by fire this morning. There was a spectacular scene when Fire Chief Crocker went into the burning building and rescued a valuable oil painting of his uncle Richard, formerly the great Tammany leader.

COALITIONISTS HAVE A NET GAIN OF ONE

For the First Time Since the Elections Began---Asquith's Majority in the New Commons To-day is 56---The Standing of the Parties at Four O'clock To-day.

Special wire to The Examiner:

LONDON, ENG., DEC. 12.—For the first time since the elections began the Government Coalitionists show up this afternoon with a net gain of one over Unionist gains, making Asquith's majority in the new Commons to-day fifty-six. The standing of the parties at four p.m. was:

Unionists 227.
Liberals 188.
Nationalists 86.
Independent Nationalists 7.
Labourites 32.

Net Coalition gain one.

The big Liberal papers are out this morning with the assurance that notwithstanding the "trumped up" meetings arranging for risings in Ireland and despite the fact that the majority for Asquith may not be larger than in the last Commons, the government will surely carry out its veto bill and home rule measure. 'Tis expected that John Redmond will be an ardent supporter of anything the government introduces leading up to this measure.

SENSATION IN TRIAL

Mrs. Glover Seen Coming Away From the Laundry the Night Husband Was Murdered

Special Wire to The Examiner.

CAMBRIDGE, MASS., DEC. 12.—There was a great sensation this morning in the trial of Hattie Lebaue, the Canadian girl, charged with the murder of the wealthy Clarence Glover, when Nellie Walsh, a domestic employed by presiding judge Bond, living on the same street as Glovers, says she saw Mrs. Glover come from the direction of the laundry the night Glover was murdered there.

ANOTHER STRIKE

Hinted at if the Trainmen Do Not Get Satisfaction From the Government

Special to The Examiner.

OTTAWA, ONT., DEC. 12. — Vice-Pres. Berry, Chairman Todd and thirteen other officials of the Conductor and Trainmen's Organization, are here to-day to storm the House of Commons individually and collectively in regard to cases of two hundred and fifty employes of the Grand Trunk who went on strike last July and are still out of positions. Berry gave out hints to the newspaper men here that if nothing resulted from their interview with the government another strike would follow.

One Month In Gaol Sentence For A Vagrant

Ernest Williamson brought a suit against a local manufacturer for $8. He claimed that he had been engaged at the work for the last two months and had been transferred into a new department. It appears that he did not get along very well at this and on Monday last stayed at home, not going to work, on account of the illness of his daughter. When he returned on Wednesday morning his machine was occupied by another man. He was offered another machine, which he refused, and was discharged. He went to get his pay and they told him that there was none coming to him. This resulted in the action in the Police Court this morning.

The Company had three representatives in court, who explained fully the circumstances. His Worship, Magistrate Dumble, decided, however, that the Company had not given the man a fair chance, as he was not used to the work. Williamson was allowed $3.00. No costs.

A man named John Wood blew into the city from Toronto, a few days ago, an dappeared in the Police Court this morning on a charge of vagrancy. He pleaded guilty and was given a month on the bill. He had a heel and one hand frozen while coming from Toronto, and will have to be given medical attention.

Mr. W. A. Edwards, of the Crystal Theatre, was arraigned before Magistrate Dumble in the police court this morning on a charge of assaulting Alfred Ricoby. After hearing the evidence His Worship dismissed the case.

It appears that Mr. Edwards hired Ricoby to ride a horse around the street as an advertisement. Ricoby came to the theatre about 10 o'clock and waited around for his charger to be brought around, but the horse failed to appear. Ricoby was rather the worse of liquor, according to evidence given by the ticket seller at the Crystal and created a nuisance in the theatre. Mr. Edwards shoved him into a seat but he would not take it and refused to go outside. He was then assisted out by Mr. Edwards.

Ricoby claimed in court that Wm. Edwards took him by the throat and choken him for about a minute. This statement was contradicted by Mr. Edwards' witnesses. The plaintiff told his story in a very dramatical style and caused great amusement in the court, but the decision went against him.

Their store is being stocked with the best quality of goods and cured and cooked meats.

LITERARY NIGHT

The Normal School Literary Society held an interesting meeting in the auditorium of building Friday evening. The President, Mr. Clubine, was in the chair, and a large number of the students and their friends were present. The evening was given to Shakespeare's play: "As You Like It." The prelude of the play was given by Miss Nicholls, followed by the "Forest Scene," the characters in this being as follows: Rosalind, Miss Lynch; "Celia," Miss McDonnell; "Orlando," Mr. C. Haig, "Jacques," Mr. R. Sutton; "Corin," Mr. Morin, and "Touchstone," Mr. Windsor. Miss Trueman gave an essay on the balance of the play. These literary numbers were interspersed with vocal and instrumental selections, by Misses Power, Staples and Smith, vocalists; and Miss K. Leary, pianists.

MAKE THEM PAY.

Mr. Beaubarlant (well speaking) M. P. for St. Hyacinthe, has introduced into Parliament a bill which should pass into law. Heretofore civil servants at Ottawa have enjoyed a remarkable exemption. Their salaries were not attachable for debt. They might run bills for groceries, dry goods, and what not, and they were uncollectable by process of law. Under the proposed law the civil servants are to be legislated into the ranks of ordinary honesty, and respectability. The old law of exemption for responsibility for debts incurred was a premium on dishonesty. There are civil servants by the thousands in Ottawa, and it stands to reason that practical freedom from paying honest debt, must have exercised a bad effect upon merchants and business. In the ordinary course of things collection of debts is difficult enough; and this difficulty adds to the difficulty of business men making ends meet. We realize how much the payment of even a small obligation exercises a cumulative effect; a sum like, say, ten dollars, goes the rounds, so to speak, and can possibly, in a hundred cases, helps make up an amount necessary to meet an obligation, and effect a balance with the bank. Pay-as-you-go is a splendid lubricant for the wheels of business, and pay promptly when you don't pay down, is the next best thing.

WHERE THE SHOE PINCHES.

"A member of the Toronto News staff" says that he "constantly encountered in England people who looked to Canada as the land of hope." These, he says, belonged to all classes—men of capital, professional men, land owners, labourers, etc. It is declared that the Lloyd-George "unearned increment" proposals for the taxation of capital and labour, the Lloyd-George tariff reform policy, and this "holding to Canada as the land of hope" has been going on for a hundred years, ever since the days when the George budget was dreamed of. The great commercial prosperity of England, as shown in her trade returns, does not seem to indicate that the budget has dislocated business. British trade has increased the past year in far greater proportion than that of protective countries, that have, according to the News and its kind, the ideal fiscal system. The flow of British capital to Canada is no new thing and if it is increasing, it may be because Canada, as a profitable field of investment, has become better known of late years, and because opportunities have increased. If British capital, which has been, in a large way, in the past, exempt from taxation, seeks employment in Canada because it is forced to bear its share of the national burden, so much the better for Canada, and the investors to boot, and no worse for Great Britain, for the increase of trade and commercial prosperity shows that there is enough capital for home uses and to spare. Forcing the privileged classes to pay taxes is where the shoe pinches.

GIVING CANDIDATES A CHANCE

The letter of Mr. George Leader, printed in another column, is welcomed, both for its intrinsic value, and as a contribution towards remedying one of the greatest causes of civic ill-government—the indifference of the ratepayers. If every ratepayer took an active and intelligent an interest, will any one deny that our city government would be vastly improved? As he points out, here we are on the threshold of the municipal elections, and of the ten or twelve, who will sit in our Council next year only two have announced their intention to be candidates, and not one has declared the policy upon which he seeks to be intrusted with the management of our business.

The people have a right to know. In no other way can they vote intelligently. Would any member of the present council, or any other council, employ a manager for his business without knowing his qualifications and his ideas of how he would conduct the business to insure the best results? Yet they expect the people to vote blindly for candidates to manage a business affecting the welfare of 17,000 persons.

Give the people a chance to make an intelligent choice. The Examiner is prepared to make an offer. It will open its columns, free of charge, for one insertion, to any candidate's election address—a statement of his policy—not in general terms—but giving particulars, even if it requires a column. Such a declaration is not to be the usual little formal card to the electors—"if elected, will do my duty"—but a detailed statement of attitude upon the several questions that are most prominent and most demanding attention. Such an address will be printed once in our news columns, free of charge. The Examiner has no special interest of its own to serve in this. But it has an interest in having the best possible city government that can be got. Its object is to arouse the interest of citizens and to give candidates a chance to help arouse this interest, and to show some claim to be elected—not because their name is so-and-so, but because they represent some definite policy, something that they will stand behind and back up, if elected.

The Examiner gives the candidates a chance to put their platform before the people and thus the people can get a chance to know not only who they are voting for, but what they are voting for.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Of course one cannot explain how it is, but there is, as a rule, an apparently special occurrence of calamities at the Christmas tide. The disaster in British Columbia on Friday—a mine explosion, in which thirty-five were killed, is according to the rule.

The Maritime provinces are asking to be saved from themselves. They fear that the next census will show that they have made less growth than Quebec, the pivotal province, whose population, according to the Act of Confederation, determines the unit of representation—the number of electors entitled to elect a member. But what difference does representation make, or what does it matter, according to Mr. Borden, leader of the Conservative Opposition? He does not believe much in parliamentary representation; he is in favour of the Referendum, that is, the direct vote of the people.

CUMBERLAND MAKING BIG IMPROVEMENTS

The December issue of Ontario Fruit Growing contains an article entitled "Cumberland Canadians," narrating the high standard of citizenship and success shown in the native members. This month the Editor tells in word pictures of "how the transformation" was effected, and tells how the Cumberland Canadians are doing it. The fact that 1910 will see the building of 1,000 houses in Cumberland, and the investment of $2,000,000 in new industries is nothing if not optimistic. The opinions of local delegates not political. It is also amusing. His description of the officers of the Cackling Hen Merger as "men whose hatbands did not develop as rapidly as their waistbands, in other words, men whose domes of thought did not develop as rapidly as their domes of porridge" cannot fail to provide a chuckle.

In its pioneer stories, its poetry and the little pictures from life the magazine keeps close to the earth, but in the current chapter of "To be Taken With Salt" it gets away into the clouds.

Altogether it is a readable, amusing, thought-compelling little magazine. On sale at all bookstores, or from the publishers, St. Thomas, Ont.

$295,000,000 FOR WAR.

The United States War Department asks $295,257,540 in this year's estimates. Among the items are: Increase in the navy, $21,234,408, including $12,240,428 for construction and steam machinery and armour and armament in the proposed building programme for 1912 and $3,000,000 for armour on vessels already authorized. For hulls and outfits of vessels and steam machinery of vessels, $6,031,786 is asked; for submarine torpedo boats and submarine destroyers, $800,834. An estimate of $331,000 is made on account of two fleet colliers already authorized, and it is pointed out that in order to construct a collier on the Pacific coast in the Government yard Congress must increase the limit of cost of the second collier from $1,000,000 to $1,500,000.

A lump appropriation of $1,000,000 is asked to enable the secretary of the navy to establish at such places as he may deem necessary suitable depots for coal and other fuel for the purpose of warships. The estimate for naval barracks and quarters in the Philippines is $800,000, in place of the present appropriation of $375,000, and $5,000 is estimated for wireless experiments in the Philippines with a view of system having relation to the army, navy, Philippine government, and the commercial community. For dummy guns and mortars for instruction of the coast artillery $300,000 is asked. For a torpedo station "near the Pacific coast" $25,000 is asked in addition to the $145,000 appropriated for this year.

CENSUS AND REPRESENTATION.

(Toronto Star.)

The Maritime Premiers are holding a conference over the question of representation. They are afraid that they will lose representation because of the increase of the unit of population; that is, because it will require more than 30,000 persons to form a constituency electing one member, instead of 25,000. This change is attributed to the unexpected growth of the population of Quebec. Quebec has a fixed representation of 65. The unit is formed by dividing 65 into the population of Quebec. Thus, if Quebec has 2,210,000 people, the unit is 34,000.

Quebec is thus placed in an invidious position. Nobody envies Ontario or Western the Provinces when they grow, because their growth means more representation for themselves, but not a fewer representatives for others. But if Quebec grows more rapidly than the Maritime Provinces, those Provinces are in danger of losing some of their representation.

As a matter of arithmetic, there is no difficulty between the position of Quebec and that of the other Provinces. Relatively, Quebec has lost ground since Confederation. Then she had 65 members out of 181, or nearly 36 per cent. of the whole. Now she has 65 out of 221, or a little more than 29 per cent. of the whole. But a relative loss does not wound sentiment like an actual loss, such as the Maritime Provinces may sustain.

The soreness caused by the decline in the representation of the Maritime Provinces, and possibly Ontario, has created a certain jealousy of Quebec, and has even led to charges that in that Province the census is stuffed. This is an unfortunate state of opinion. We have no right to be jealous of the legitimate progress of Quebec. We ought, as Canadians, to rejoice in that growth. We have no right to assume that our Quebec fellow-citizens are less honest than other Canadians. Might it not be well, instead of giving the Maritime Provinces fewer members, (to give Quebec more, say 70 or 75, whatever she may be entitled to by her actual increase in population) It would require a change in the British North American Act, but this would not be difficult to obtain. Under this plan the representation of Ontario would be increased, and there would be still larger increase in the representation from the Western Provinces.

LOCAL DELEGATES FOR BOYS' WORK CONFERENCE

Things look bright for the Boys' Work Conference to be held in Ottawa at the end of the year. St. Paul's church will send two boys and two men to represent the Sunday School and Brotherhood of St. Paul. Other churches are falling into line and also the Boy Scout patrols. It is confidently expected that this city will send a large delegation to this important Conference. The delegates will be shown every courtesy while in the Capital City. They will be received by the Governor-General and Premier Laurier, who will also address the delegates in Convention. Every organization in the city which is doing work for boys should be represented at this conference. The delegates expect to make definite and permanent plans for boys' work in this city.

DR. CHASE'S OINTMENT

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY.

An opportunity is afforded to Canadian business men manufacturers fruit importers, capitalists, etc., to personally investigate business conditions and opportunities for investment in the West Indies and British South America. H. C. MacKenzie, Cornish, managing editor of Canada and West India Magazine, has arranged with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to secure the S. S. Lake Manitoba, a roomy, comfortable ship, provided a hundred and twenty-five persons signify their intention to take the cruise. It is proposed the steamship will leave St. John, N.B., January 14th, 1911, for a six week's cruise, returning on or about February 24th, which will permit a visit to Cuba and Havana, the various ports of Jamaica, Trinidad, Georgetown, Demerara, St. Kitts, St. Lucia, St. Vincent, Antigua, Grenada, Barbadoes, Martinique, Porto Rico, San Domingo and Bermuda, returning to St. John. This ship will be especially equipped with electric fans, orchestra for dancing, etc., a fine motor launch for special shore trips, a dark room for the convenience of photographers, deck awnings, hammocks for those who desire to sleep on deck, etc. The well-known high-class service of the Canadian Pacific Empress steamships will be provided. It is the desire to give Canadians an opportunity for the expansion of commerce between these various countries, and nothing will be left undone to assure the maximum of comfort for the minimum of expense. The number will be limited to 150 passengers, and the fare for the round trip will be from $200 to $300, according to accommodation. This trip has received the endorsement of the Department of Trade and Commerce of Canada.

TWILIGHT MUSICALE WAS GREAT SUCCESS

A delightful twilight musicale was held in the Conservatory of Music Hall on Saturday afternoon, between 4 and 5.30 o'clock. Some two hundred and fifty people were present and the splendid programme rendered was greatly enjoyed. There were three selections by the Conservatory Orchestra, a violin solo by Miss Julia Choate, a piano solo by Miss Lulu McGill, of the Conservatory, and two numbers by the Imperial Male Quartette, who also responded to several encores. The musicale was under the auspices of the Women's Art Association, who are to be congratulated upon its success.

To Grow Hair on a Bald Head

By a Specialist

Thousands of people suffer from baldness and falling hair, who, having tried nearly every advertised hair tonic and hair grower without results, have resigned themselves to baldness and its attendant discomforts. Yet their case is not hopeless; the following simple home prescription has made hair grow after years of baldness, and is also unequalled for restoring gray hair to its original colour, stopping hair from falling out, and for destroying the dandruff germ. It will not make the hair greasy, and can be put up by any chemist: Bay Rum 6 ounces, Lavoris de Composee 2 ounces, Menthol Crystals 1-2 drachms. If you wish it perfumed add half to one teaspoonful of To-Kalon Perfume, which unites perfectly with the other ingredients. This preparation is highly recommended by physicians and specialists, and is absolutely harmless, as it contains none of the poisonous wood alcohol so frequently found in hair tonics. Do not apply to the face or where hair is not desired.

Song Service At The Crystal

The song service conducted last evening at the Crystal Theatre under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A. was one of the best yet held. The Imperial Male Quartette had been secured and rendered two very pleasing and effective selections. The first was "Remember Now Thy Creator" and the other "Your Mother is Praying." The audience was one of the largest that has ever attended the song service and as a result the singing was extra good. Next Sunday one of Peterborough's good soloists will sing and there will be introduced a few new songs, or the other old ones with which the people of this city are not familiar.

"The Choice Of A Bride"

"The Choice of a Bride" was the subject under discussion by Evangelist McMurdo at a well-attended meeting in the old Ashburnham town hall, last evening. The singing of the Children's Choir was an appreciated feature of the programme. The address by Mr. A. McMurdo opened with a discourse in Proverbs 31 as a description of the ideal bride. He then read the story of Isaac and Rebekah, from Gen. 24, his text being V. 58: "Will thou go with this man?" The closing part of his address was a reference to Christ as the true Isaac, and the Church as His bride, and the question for all to decide was "Will thou go with this Man"; in other words, "Will thou accept Christ as thy Saviour?" Mr. R. McMurdo closed with a personal appeal.

Three lectures will be given by the McMurdo Bros., on Hungry, illustrated by A. McMurdo, on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday next at the town hall at 8 p.m.

The Members of Shepwood Forest Comp., No. 50, are urgently requested to attend the regular meeting on Monday evening, December 12th. Business of importance and Election of Officers. 2d-136-3158

THE WEATHER

The lowest temperature Sunday morning was 2 degrees below zero; this (Monday) morning, 8 degrees below. It has moderated somewhat to-day, but is still quite sharp. The thermometer has already been below zero on nine different days so far [illegible] probably constitutes a record for so early in the winter.—W. P.

"ASHTON-KIRK, INVESTIGATOR"

By John T. McIntyre. Copyrighted and All Rights Reserved

"I am glad that you approve of what I did," she said. "I confess I had some hesitancy, but not enough to prevent my carrying out the design. But when the first effort proved without result, I set about making a study of all the Humes in the directory. I had my secretary make me a typed list of them, with their addresses and occupations, and I pored over this for hours at a time.

"There was one that caught my eye after a while; probably this was because of the unusualness of his business. The directory gave him as a numismatist; but I drove by his shop in my car, and the sign over the window said that he was also a dealer in curiosities of art.

This gave me an idea. Mr. Morris is an ardent collector; his hobby is engraved gems, and for a man of his means his possessions in this line are quite remarkable. It was easily within the range of possibility that he had had transactions with this particular Hume—at least that he was acquainted with him. The more I thought of this, the more curious I grew; and one afternoon I paid the place a visit. It is on the second floor, the entrance is through a side door and up a narrow, dusty stairway. Then I had to make my way along a dark windowless passage to the office, or shop in front.

"This shop was well lighted, and literally stuffed with what were well termed 'curiosities of art.' I never before saw such queer curvings, such freakish pottery, such weird and utterly indescribable bric-a-brac. At a table sat a flabby looking man with a short sandy beard. One glance told me that he was an habitual drunkard, for he had the sodden look that is unmistakable. But when he arose and bid me good evening his manner struck me like a blow in the face. Allan Morris had spoken of a mocking person who jeered and smiled. And that described this man exactly. There was mockery in every glance of his dull eyes; every twitch of his mouth was a jeer; with each gesture he seemed making game of one; sneering incredulity was stamped all over him."

Ashton-Kirk leaned forward with keen interest.

"My manner must have betrayed me," the girl went on, "for I saw an inquiring crease come into his forehead. When he asked the nature of my business his voice was sharp and insistent.

"I had not thought as to what I should say, what excuse I should give in this case. But almost instantly my mind was made up. About the most conspicuous thing in the room was a squat Japanese idol—a fat, grinning, hideous thing which sat upon a sort of pedestal near the door. So I laid my hand in it.

"'I was told of this,'" said I, examining the idol minutely, and came in to see it."

"'Ah, yes,'" said he. But it was plain enough that he did not believe me.

"I inquired the price of the figure. He named a high one; and I believe I astonished him by purchasing it without another word. The idol was delivered late that afternoon. I had it unpacked at once and placed where Mr. Morris could not fail to see it when he called."

"A clever plan," commented Ashton-Kirk, admiringly.

"He saw it when he entered the room and greeted me. He was smiling; and the smile froze on his lips, his face went pale, and he turned a look upon me that filled me with fear, it was so wan and startled.

"I had intended telling him the full truth if my ruse succeeded. But after that look I could not. I convinced him by a nonchalant manner and story, that I had come by the idol accidentally. At least I think I convinced him, though I noticed his watching me steadily from under very level brows more than once during the evening. But if he had any suspicions that I was deceiving him, he did not put them into words."

Here Miss Vale paused for a moment. Then she resumed.

"I tried, in various ways, to gain a knowledge of the relationship between my flatter and this unsettling shopkeeper, but they were all ineffectual. Mr. Ashton-Kirk, this occurred fully three months ago, and the situation remains the same as it was upon that night."

Then with a suddenness that startled the young man the lifted two trembling hands to her face and began to sob passionately. When she took the hands away there were no signs of tears, but her beautiful face was drawn with pain and her voice shook as she said:

"I don't think I can stand it much longer. I beg of you not to think lightly of my story, for the thing that stands between Allan Morris and my self is deadly. As I watch him I can see that his heart is breaking; his health is failing, there is a look of fear in his eyes."

She reached forward and her hand rested upon the sleeve of Ashton-Kirk. "He is at the mercy of this mocking monster that I have described to you. It is killing him, and though him it is killing me, also. Help me, please."

Ashton-Kirk patted reassuringly.

"As far as I can see," he said, "this case is a simple one. I will look into it at once, and I am sure that I can put the matter right. Please leave it entirely in my hands, and I am sure you will regain health and happiness."

"Thank you," she said as she rose, "and you will begin to-day?"

"You can trust," the lad set his hand; he took it. "Thank you, again.

Stumph appeared, in answer to the bell. She turned to go.

"There is nothing more that you can tell me?" he inquired.

"Nothing."

"I had supposed that. Your recital sounded pretty complete."

When the door closed upon her, he stood for a few moments in the middle of the floor, his head bent forward, his hands behind him. Then he turned and touched another of the system of bells.

Immediately a brisk, boyish looking young man presented himself.

"Fuller," spoke Ashton-Kirk, "I want instant and complete information upon one Hume, a local numismatist, and Allan Morris, consulting engineer."

"Very well, sir". And Fuller turned at once and left the room.

CHAPTER III.

THE PORTRAITS OF GENERAL WAYNE.

When Ashton-Kirk returned that evening from the theatre, where he had gone to witness a much-heralded new drama, he sat down in his library; and, stretching out his length in great comfort, he smoked and smiled, and thought of what he had seen and heard.

"The drama as a medium of expression is necessarily limited," the young man was saying to himself; "and of course, in sifting human action to its narrow bounds, the dramatist is sometimes tempted to ignore certain human elements. In spots, the people of the play acted like puppets; upon seven different occasions, by actual count, the entire matter would have been cleared up if some one had sharply spoken his mind. But he did not, and the thing was allowed to become hopelessly involved because of it."

He knocked the ashes from his cigar; and a smile came to his lips.

"It would not have served the purpose of the dramatist, I suppose; his play would have ended abruptly, and far short of the prescribed time. He tried to tell a human story and chose an unhuman method."

There was another pause; the smile now disappeared and a thoughtful look came into his face.

"And yet," he mused, "is the playwright really so far wrong? Is his stage story very far removed from actuality after all? In Miss Edyth Vale, we have a girl of most unusual character, of splendid education, apparently. And yet in the building of her own drama she has outstripped the inventive of story-tellers in the matter of hesitancy. Her natural submission urged her to take a firm stand; but other feelings pruned the strongest, and she held her tongue much after the fashion of the girl in the play."

He was pulling at a second cigar when there came a knock on the door and Fuller entered.

"Well?" said Ashton-Kirk.

"I thought you'd perhaps like to look at this data before morning," said the young man, as he laid a number of typed sheets and a photograph at Ashton-Kirk's elbow. "As you required instant action I got Barnes on this Hume end of it last night. They lunchcont took in Maple Shade."

"Thank you," said the other.

"Morris," with a nod toward the photograph, "is rather interesting, personally. And it was no very difficult matter to get the facts concerning him. But Burgess had a much more interesting time. Hume seems to have lots of colour as a character. Not that there was a great deal shown—the time was too short. But the indications are promising."

When Fuller had gone, Ashton-Kirk took up the sheets and began to read them carefully. They were neatly printed, and evidently the work of men who were familiar enough with their business to eliminate all unnecessities. The fact ran so:

"Allan Barnett Morris, Consulting Engineer. Specialty, Marine Work. Address, 1414 Chestnut street, Apartments. Built October 15, 1906, Overlook of Corinth Plan of Park. Special honors, Bronze medal. Was at one engaged by the New England Dock Building Company. Resigned in 1906; has since been in the employ of the Government. Has the position of a grown man in his line, and is admitted by competent persons to be an expert.

He is unmarried and has no family. The last of these to die was his father—a little more than three years ago. The father had a reputation for great brilliancy and hard drinking. He was an inventor of some note. See the Morris Smoke Consumer—the Morris Propeller—the Morris Automatic Brake. But he never made much out of any of these. The appetite for liquor forced him to surrender, for very little, interests that made fortunes for other men.

"Young Morris is clear of the drink habit, and is a hard and persistent worker. He is a member of the University and the Brookdale Field Clubs; goes into society, and is reported to be the accepted suitor of Miss Edyth Vale, daughter of the late James Vale, manufacturer of structural steel."

"A clean bill of health, as far as it goes," commented Ashton-Kirk. "However, surface inquiries tell very little, sometimes."

He turned to the remaining pages.

"David Purtell Hume, Numismatist, philatelist, dealer in objects of art and curiosities. Resides at his place of business, second floor of 478 Christie Place.

"Hume located in this city in 1898. Where he came from is not definitely known, but there is some slight cause for supposing that he is an American, who had been living abroad. However, an examination of the steamship passenger lists for 1896-98 fail to show his name.

"Is well known in his line and is reputed to be wealthy. Is much disliked by his neighbours and others in the same trade. Even those who patronize him have an aversion to him; but as he is an authority, and his stock always contains rarities, they do not take their custom elsewhere.

Your Time Is Not Yours

It Belongs to Those Depending on You. For Their Sake Preserve Health and Strength.

You never thought of it just this way before. While not feeling well you have neglected to take active means of restoring health, thinking all the time that you were the only one to suffer by delay.

Not so. For who among us has not someone depending on him for comfort, happiness or the means of livelihood?

When you lie awake nights, worrying over little things, get nervous and irritable, have indigestion and headaches, you may be sure the nervous system is becoming exhausted.

Time is not yours to delay. You must call a halt to the wasting process. Otherwise you will have a rude awakening some day, when prostrations, paralysis or locomotor ataxia lays you low. For such is the natural and inevitable result of neglected nervous disease.

You can restore the nervous system by using Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food. Being composed of Nature's most potent nerve restoratives, it cannot fail to benefit you. Every dose must of necessity bring you nearer to health, strength and vigour.

Mr. William Brandon, Victoria street, Strathroy, Ont., writes: "Some time before Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food my nervous system caused all sufferings. I could not sleep; had no appetite, hands and feet were cold, all digestion was poor and I had pains in the back. The first box of Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food helped me and I continued until I had taken twenty-four boxes. This treatment made a perfect change in my condition, and I can highly recommend Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food to all sufferers."

50 cents a box, 5 boxes $2.50, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

Mad Severe Pains In His Back.

Could Hardly Work.

Mr. Alfred E. Davis, Gorrie, Ont. writes:—"For some years I suffered from severe pains in my back and could hardly work at all, and when I stooped down to pick up anything felt as if my back would break. I was advised to try Doan's Kidney Pills, and after taking two boxes I was entirely cured, and feel that I cannot speak too highly of their merit.

"This was nearly four years ago and I am still cured."

There also have been many troubled with kidney trouble do not know the suffering and misery which these ailments cause.

When down in aching back means that the kidneys, and when the kidneys remain out of order the whole system becomes deranged.

Doan's Kidney Pills are a specific for all kidney troubles.

They help the kidneys to flush off the acids and poisonous impurities which have collected, thus clearing out the kidneys, bladder and urinary passages.

Price 50c per box or 3 for $1.25, at all dealers or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto, Ont. The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

CHRIST'S VIEW OF EXEMPTION AND TAXATION DISCUSSED

Interesting Sermon by Rev. J. H. Webb at Murray St. Baptist Church upon a Subject That is Being Widely Discussed in Peterborough.

"RENDER UNTO CAESAR, Etc"

"If the institution represented before the Council this week is, as was stated, doing exactly the same work as some already exempt from taxation, it is hard to see how the Council can consider itself consistent in its action. On the other hand, if the petitioning institution is one which is known to be wielded for political purposes, it was dishonest impertinence to ask the favour." said Rev. J. H. Webb in addressing the Murray street church congregation last evening, on the subject "Christ's View of Taxation and Exemption."

He took his text from the 20th chap. of St. Luke, 25th verse, "And Jesus said, render therefore unto Caesar, the things that are Caesar's, and unto God the things that are God's."

The scribes and high priests tried to set hands on Jesus and sent out spies to watch Him. But, with spies to watch Him, and scribes against Him, He had power over all. The fact is that Christ made men ask Him questions. He never lacked an answer when He was asked questions and angered by the men we read about in this chapter. I suggest the question, could there be any plainer statement of the wish of Jesus Christ as the questing of the church and state? You citizens owe something to your God. Pay it."

"There are men who would have the church a state church, but it is not. The ideal condition is the church supported by its membership and that only, the state by its citizens and when we get away from that way we are on the way to misery and embarrassments. In the first place it is a great pity for the divine ideal to be in such a state, to see the church begging from an unfriendly world. If there are those in our city, who believe not in Christ and His gospel, they should not be asked to pay for it. All the Christian churches should contribute and pay we are going to raise the standard, and if this were done in the city of Peterborough, there would be a difference in the taxation. There are in Peterborough church properties valued at $400,000 not taxed.

If one church steps out and says, 'we will pay the taxes on this,' they may, and yet not be doing what they believe. The only way in which justice may be proven is to go back to the ideal. You all know that.

No citizen should have less or more privilege than another, because all should be alike. Wherever there was an injustice done, Christ noted it, and when the men in the text feigned themselves powerful as they did, He revealed the one truth, of their claim. Jesus passed a coin to the people and asked what image was on it, and they said, 'Caesar's,' and He said, 'if Caesar had a right to issue coinage he had a right to demand taxation.' And He said, 'render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and unto God the things that are God's.' Speaking of current business you take an interest, but speaking of your debt to God, you become indifferent. God has a right to demand certain things of us. There will come a day when this debt must be paid. You are trembling at the thought of meeting the Creator. There is no exemption and no excuse for the debt you owe Him, therefore ye are without excuse. The one who paid all, to Him you owe all."

NEW KNOX CHURCH OPENING MARKED BY TIMELY AND ELOQUENT SERMONS

Handsome New Edifice Was Filled to its Capacity at all Services Yesterday---Able Discourses by Rev. Robt. Johnston, D.D., of Montreal---"The Conquering Gospel" His Morning Subject.

Another era in the progress of the congregation of Knox church was marked yesterday, when the splendid new edifice at the corner of Rubidge and Wolfe streets was dedicated and formally opened. The progress of this church since its incipiency, has been phenomenal, it having kept apace with the rapid advancement and growth of the South End of the city. Knox Church, under the capable pastorate of Rev. H. J. Keith, has embraced a large membership, which, constantly increasing, necessitated a much greater building, and as a result of the earnest and indefatigable efforts of an enthusiastic congregation, the fine brick structure at Rubidge and Wolfe streets, was opened for worship. The opening services were largely attended, and were of an especially interesting character, eloquent sermons being preached by Rev. Robert Johnston, D. D., of Montreal. The choir was augmented by voices from St. Paul's and St. Andrew's churches and under the leadership of Mr. E. Thompson, acquitted themselves in a manner that reflects great credit on the careful and painstaking training of their leader. The services were bright and joyful, and all through them breathed a spirit of heartfelt gratitude to God for the prosperity vouchsafed to this congregation, thus enabling them to build such a beautiful house for His worship and adoration.

At 10 o'clock the church was dedicated, there being an appropriate service in connection with the dedication. Numerous gifts, donated by friends to the Church, were also dedicated at this service. The pastor, Rev. Mr. Keith, welcomed the many visitors, who had come to join in the opening services of the new church. He spoke of the honour he felt in having with them on such an occasion Rev. Dr. Johnston, of Montreal.

The Sermon.

At the morning service Dr. Johnston preached a forceful and eloquent discourse on "The Conquering Gospel," taking as his text part of the sixteenth verse of the first chapter of St. Paul's epistle to the Romans. "For I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ." Before coming to his subject, the preacher spoke of the unparrelleled privilege he felt at being present on this occasion. He hoped the message he would leave with them would strike the keynote of the coming messages they would hear, the truth for which the church stood. "If a soldier has the right to speak of war, the commander of his battles of the sea, the statesman of statesmanship and the state," continued the speaker, "then Paul who had been all these, had a right to speak of the methods of the evangelist." Paul was a veteran in Christian warfare. He had met adversaries on many a field. It was a veteran who addressed this epistle to the Romans. It was to Rome, where the pulse beat of the whole world throbbed, that he was coming to wage the Christian warfare. Here was to be a great battle. "What weapons does he carry to Rome?" asked the reverend gentleman. Paul had all the old and new philosophies, the myths and traditions of the Jewish church, but he did not take these. He said "I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ."

What is That Gospel?"

The eloquent divine, continuing, took up the consideration of what this Gospel was, which Paul regarded as his chief asset, what was the ground of his unaltering and swerving attitude towards it. All through Paul's epistles he opened up what he regarded as a revelation of God's method of reconciling men to Him. It was the method of absolute grace. It was the thought that characterized every religious fad and fancy of the present day, that man must fit himself subjectively or objectively to make himself acceptable to God. The Gospel of Jesus Christ lifted man up from the chaos of helplessness and sin. His grace was infinite. Rev. Dr. Johnston spoke of Paul's conversion on the way to Damascus. Paul believed on Jesus Christ because he experienced His power. In this regard, it was essential that Sunday School teachers and parents should endeavour to realize this great power in the instruction of children. Referring to Paul's unswerving loyalty to the Gospel of Christ, the preacher spoke of his profound investigation into its claims. He was convinced that Christ was the Messiah of God, and the Saviour of men. In places, the reverend gentleman said, there was the statement that the Gospel had won out. If the students of to-day were to give Gospel matters the same investigation that Paul gave them, there would be no request for another gospel. Paul had the witness of the triumphs of the Gospel. He had experienced its power. In Corinth he had seen its people in sin and wickedness rise to be truly followers of Christ. In Rome, the cesspool of iniquity at that time, he had seen the evidence of what the Gospel had done. Had he been told then that the world needed another Gospel he would have said: "I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Jesus Christ." "We are facing great perils in the present day," Dr. Johnston said, in conclusion. "Never has there been more serious conditions arising out of new philosophies, the restlessness of the age in realms theological and philosophical, and the revision from old truths. It behooves the church to ask itself 'what is its message?' Paul faced a situation just as perilous. If he was to stand in our midst to-day he would recommend us to God's grace in Jesus Christ."

At the deliberate service preceding the regular morning service, the moderator of the Presbytery, Rev. Dr. Marsh, of Springville, presided.

ANNUAL BRITISH SOCIAL AND DANCE WAS A SUCCESS

A large gathering of old country people assembled in the C.O.F. Halls, Simcoe street, Friday evening for the first British annual social and dance, and a splendid programme of dances was very much enjoyed by all that participated in them, reminding them of the host of good old times often indulged in at home, and nights well for many such successful dances in the future. In the first interval delightful refreshments were served by Coleman Bros., after which the following programme was well rendered, and judging by the applause was appreciated very much:

Pianoforte solo.
Popular choruses—Mr. C. Barret.
Song, "The Old Church Choir"—Mr. W. Milburn.
Song, selected—Mrs. Reid.
Song, Lachie McGraw—Mr. A. S. Watson.
Song, "The Lodgings I'm Leaving Behind—Mr. Campbell.
Song, 'Tis the Last—Mr. W. Milburn.
Song, Mona—Mr. Campbell.
Chairman—Mr. J. Milby.

After this dancing was resumed and the fun was kept up till 4 a.m. A vote of thanks was passed to the committee for bringing the dance to such a successful issue.

ANNUAL BANQUET

Of the Sons of England Will be Held on Wednesday Night

The annual banquet of Lansdowne lodge, Sons of England, will be held on Wednesday, December 14th, in the S. O. E. Hall, Hunter street, at 7 p.m.

Messrs. Coleman Bros are the caterers and a sumptuous repast is assured. The arrangements are in the hands of a strong committee and they have already filled out an excellent programme.

The lodge has initiated during the past year, 25 new members and this has been achieved without the assistance of any canvasses or any special campaign.

This should stimulate the members to even greater efforts and it is hoped that all the new members and old members, too, who are in the city will make a special effort to attend the banquet.

This invitation is also extended to every Englishman in the city, who can still appreciate an evening spent in the company of fellow Englishmen.

Come, bring your wives and spend a pleasant evening with the Sons of England. Tickets 50 cents.

WHAT TO GIVE

WHAT WILL WE GIVE DAD ?

Ah! that's the question little sister and little brother are trying to hatch up a solution to these days. Heads together, notes compared···, same old story. You know dad's not hard to suit, he likes almost anything, except ink wipers of course,···but, he always likes something he can wear, that we know. Guess it's up to us to go and see what Cressman's are showing in their toggery windows and in their cases. We can surely get suited there if we can any place. Along comes mother and big sister and the same role is gone through with the same conclusion. We all know that a man appreciates something to wear, so long as it is in good taste and correct in style ··· Dad knows, so does big brother that Cressman's Toggery Shop is the reliable place for up-to-the second togs for men.

Miss Van Studdiford A Comic Opera Singer Who Can Really Sing

In these days when so many stars in light or comic opera have one or two notes in their vocal treasury, it is a pleasure to chronicle the appreciating appearance in our city of a star who could literally give away an ending octave from her range of notes and yet be richer by far in vocal accomplishment than all the other pseudo-stars combined. Miss Grace Van Studdiford is the star who sails into this commonly prodigal phrase. However, anybody who has ever heard Miss Van Studdiford sing all these will see that she stands without a peer upon the American light opera stage, if indeed her superior is to be found in grand opera. So many anomalous cats have lectured upon her splendid tone and vocal supreme notes, there is little else that can be said in its praise. It is interesting though in the era of star performance in the new comic opera "Bridal Trip" by Smith-Daniels, which is slated for a hearing at the Grand on Wednesday next, Dec. 14.

To review briefly her professional career.

Miss Van Studdiford first appeared in "The Black Hussar" at the Schiller Theatre in Chicago. Jefferson De Angelis thereupon made her a member of his company then presenting "The Jolly Musketeer." Longing like all real artists for a try at the best and most difficult in her chosen line, she next essayed with complete success the historic grand opera roles of Marguerite in "Faust," Micaelain "Carmen," and Lenora in "Il Trovatore." Returning to light opera, she became a member of the world-renowned Bostonians and then followed success after success. Perhaps her greatest triumph was "Maid Marian," though many believe it to have been "Red Feather." Last season she again starred in "The Golden Butterfly"; but this season, it is said, she is singing in greater purity and strength than ever before in the new Smith-Pixley comic opera.

The seats for this are on sale.

ST. JOSEPH'S BAZAAR IS NOW IN FULL SWING

Market Hall Has Been Converted Into a Fairyland—A Great Chance to Buy Christmas Presents.

57th BAND TO-NIGHT

In the annex also may know the gentlemen as a place where ladies and gentlemen may meet and have a cup of tea and coffee, a rest as the weather may get cold enough as a rest for the ladies. A refreshment has been secured by the committee of the hall by the ladies of St. Peter's and Sacred Heart Parishes, in connection with the bazaar, and side of fancy goods, among the articles of the ladies of St. Joseph, which opened today, and which will continue until Friday of this week. The ladies in charge are to be congratulated upon the artistic manner they have arranged for this attractive and delightful place of refreshment and the attractive display of the various booths and departments, which have changed the somewhat severe and austere appearance of the market hall into a veritable fairyland. The booths are prettily decorated with evergreens, and the whole place is lighted with a large number of electric lights. Pretty girls, ladies, aged and others, stationery, candies, handkerchiefs, dolls; these are only a few of the lines that meet the eye as one strolls around the big hall. A couple of lottery tables and a fish-pond afford plenty of opportunities for the people, who believe in their luck to test it in a way that may prove profitable and that will certainly cause plenty of amusement. A prominent feature in connection with the bazaar is the dining-hall, situated in the north end of the building, in which dinners and suppers are being served daily. Christmas delicacies form a large feature of the bill-of-fare, with roast turkey a strong favourite, in spite of the fact that the price of the same bird continues to soar like a Curtiss biplane. Mrs. McFadden, Mrs. Merrill and Mrs. Ball are the ladies in charge of the commissariat and they are assisted by a bevy of charming and efficient young ladies.

The bazaar serves a double purpose, inasmuch as it affords an opportunity to assist a meritorious object, while it gives the public a splendid chance to secure their Christmas presents.

The 57th Regimental Band will be present at the Bazaar this evening, and will render a choice programme.

Following is a list of the different booths and departments, with the ladies in charge of each:

President—Rev. Mother Superior.
Secretary—Mrs. Justus Dunn.
Treasurer—Mrs. N. DeLaplante.

POST CARD COLUMN

To the Editor of the Examiner.

Dear Sir,—This is now the twelfth day of December and we are still in the dark, both as to who are intending to come forward as candidates at the forthcoming elections and also as to their policy, or opinions on questions which concern the welfare and progress of the city. Why is this? What account have the present members of the council, who may be seeking re-election, to give of themselves? Have they anything to say in defence or extenuation of the policy of drift which they have so consistently followed for the past twelve months, and, if elected, is their past to be taken as a guide as to their future action?

Here we have a city, in many respects, unequalled, as far as situation and opportunities are concerned and, apparently, we have not public men who will take hold of the government of the city in a way that will make the most of those opportunities. What new men are preparing to come forward? Surely we are not expected to cast our votes for a name at the last moment given out without a hint as to the men's ideas on city government.

As an elector I ask for an expression of views from the men who seek my vote. I want to know:

(1) Will they organise a proper sanitary system of garbage collection for the city?

(2) Will they so look after the streets that they shall not be a danger to the citizens and a disgrace to the city?

(3) Will they promote and support progressive measures of improvement on the lines recently outlined in the Examiner consistently with forethought and economy?

(4) Will they see that the rights of every ratepayer is respected, and that special privileges are granted to none?

(5) Will they watch the expenditure of the ratepayers' money that we may get full value for the money spent?

I do not think this is asking too much. I think it is an insult to the intelligence of the electors to ask them to vote a person into a position that they have not a shadow of evidence as to that person's ability to fill. We would not hire a chore boy without more investigation than that.

Thanking you, in anticipation, I remain,

Yours, etc.,
GEO. LEADEN.

CHRISTMAS DINNER

Will be Held by the Park Street Baptist Church

The chief event of importance so far as Christmas is concerned in Peterborough this season, will be the old-fashioned Christmas dinner to be held at Park street Baptist church, December 25th, in the parlours of the church under the auspices of the Helpers Band Bible Class.

The dinner will consist of roast beef, plum pudding, mince pie and other delights that are good.

The programme at the close of the supper will consist of old English Christmas carols.

Further announcements will appear later on.

FOUR MEN ARE KILLED IN A HEAD-ON COLLISION

Light G. T. R. Engine Crashed Into an Intercolonial Passenger Train at St. Hyacinthe---Crew Were Killed, with the Engineer of the Passenger.

Montreal, Dec. 12.—At 5.30 Saturday evening a light G.T.R. engine with Engineer R. Jamison, Fireman Dionne and Conductor C. Briggs (G.T.R.), on board, running from Sherbrooke, collided head-on with an Intercolonial passenger train at St. Hyacinthe. The three men were killed instantly, also Engineer W. Walker of the passenger engine and the Fireman on the latter was taken from the wreck with his legs badly smashed.

J. Champeoux of Nicolet was the only passenger on the I.C.R. train seriously injured, he having had his elbow bone fractured.

The conductor of the light engine was evidently trying to jump out of the cab window when he was caught and crushed to death, his limp body hung from the window, a ghastly sight. The bodies of the other three victims were concealed in the wreckage of the two engines.

Strange to say the two engines remained on the track, the two smokestacks being in close contact, so great was the impact, the tender of the light engine slid forward six feet against the passenger engine, the pan causing the death of the three men on their engine.

The cause of the accident is not clear. The light engine came on the track on its way to St. Hyacinthe at terrific speed, passing Windsor Mills station at probably forty miles an hour. At St. Rosalie, two miles beyond St. Hyacinthe, the switch must have been turned off the main line, as at this point the engine took to the left track and for nearly two miles ripped along at apparently unreduced speed, meeting an outbound passenger train, which left Montreal at 4.15 o'clock.

The terrific crash reduced the fronts of the engines to debris, the baggage car party telescoping the passenger tender, the express car in turn partly telescoping the baggage car.

The passengers were hurled from their seats in all directions and, though many were bruised, it is not thought that any were seriously injured. So well did the wrecked engines keep to the track, that the main line next to it was not blocked, the Portland train for Montreal, passing at that time, being delayed but a short time.

Railway men cannot understand how it was that the crew on the light engine did not notice, immediately after passing St. Rosalie, that they were on the wrong track. An auxiliary was sent for, and the crew is now at work removing the bodies.

BRITISH ELECTIONS

Returns Are Nearly All in and Parties are Practically on the Same Footing as Before the Elections

SCOTTISH RETURNS

London, Dec. 12.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—With nearly all the constituencies heard from, the polling on Saturday shows three turnovers in favor of the Liberals.

In the Saffron seat of Essex, the Unionist majority of 272 was turned over on the Liberals by 40 majority. The seat was Liberal previous to the January election.

In Lowestoft, the Unionist majority of 230 was turned to a Liberal majority of 250.

The Lord Advocate for Scotland, Hon. Alex. Ure, was returned in Linlithgow.

Premier Asquith's majority in Fife East was reduced from 2,099 to 1,799.

The Unionists are shaking hands with themselves over the results of the elections in Scotland. Although no Radical seats have been won, the Unionist has lost, but the Radical majorities of last January have been cut down and the Unionist majorities increased.

Liberal organizers confidently anticipated recapturing some county seats lost in January, and are greatly chagrined at their failure. Both with Liberal and Labor members in the majority of English borough, the Liberals are hoping that their predominance will be maintained, and with a fair amount of good fortune they are looking forward to a clear majority on the whole representation of England and Wales. Yesterday's returns already show two Liberal gains.

Business men, both Tories and Liberals, are [illegible] against the long drawn out battle. They complain of too many [illegible], considering that a deciding might be arrived at in one or at most two rounds.

This elections is probably the last that will be prolonged over three weeks. Changes that will be proposed are that [illegible] elections [illegible] one week after the issue of writs, and the county in a fortnight.

Lord Milner, speaking at Bodmin, said he was prepared to stake a good deal that tariff reform would be the policy of the nation before a decade.

Balfour at Hyde complained of Asquith's silence as to details of the home rule bill. All desired to see purely local affairs locally managed. His personal conviction was that the Government meant to do as little for home rule as they found they could without quarreling with Redmond.

Bonar Law, at Radcliffe, said if the final result showed the Government had lost ground, he did not think even Asquith or any member of the Government could go to the sovereign and ask him to upset the constitution of the country.

Riotous scenes are taking place in many of the Irish towns. As the result of a riot at Thurles Saturday night, John Dillon was unable to leave town, and had to remain hidden as a crowd waited in the road leading to the railway station to waylay him. The trouble began at a meeting addressed by Mr. Dillon, which the O'Brienites tried to break up. The police had to make several charges to quell the fighting.

The Times declares a "scratch" coalition majority could have no moral authority to fundamentally change the constitution.

Only One Issue.

London, Dec. 12.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—John Redmond, speaking yesterday at Tyrone, said that the only issue in the election was "the people against the lords." It was the gravest question they had ever faced as Irish people. Compared to it, even that of Catholic emancipation faded into significance, for it was the question of the emancipation of the whole nation.

MARINES MUTINOUS

Second Brazilian Disturbance is Easily Quelled and Rebels Are Almost Wiped Out

BATTALION REVOLTED

Rio Janeiro, Dec. 12.—The naval battalion in the barracks on Cambria [illegible] mutinied in the bay a short distance from this city, anchored on Sunday night.

[illegible] were [illegible] by the fire from the land batteries and two Brazilian warships, losing more than 200 killed and wounded.

The seditious movement, it is believed, has now been completely frustrated, but the Senate, in spite of the opposition of Ruy Barbosa, the former candidate of that body, voted to declare a state of siege for thirty days.

The revolt broke out Friday night, when the seditious marines, quartered on the fortress on Cambria Island, captured their officers and sent them to the mainland.

The insurgents were supported by the fleet, ship after [illegible] to the [illegible] part in the naval revolt of last month.

For a time there was danger an attempt in the city, and the Government officials hurriedly met and decided on prompt and energetic measures to suppress the outbreak.

The shore batteries fired the loyal warships in the harbor were ordered to fire upon the rebels.

At five o'clock Saturday morning guns were turned upon Cambria Island and a furious cannonading continued for several hours.

At 11 o'clock the white flag appeared over the barracks, and the mutinous crew ceased. It was reported that the rebels from under a formal offer to surrender.

The bombardment of Cambria Island was resumed shortly after 11 o'clock, the shells [illegible] surrendered.

IN THE WORLD OF SPORT

Brock Street To Open For Season To-night

The Brock street rink will open for the season this evening with a splendid sheet of ice available, in fact the best ice that Mr. Thirnbeck has ever had this early in the season. There will undoubtedly be a very large crowd in hand for the opening, which was to have taken place on Saturday night. Owing to a number of pipes having been frozen and burst, however, it was impossible to get the ice in shape for Saturday. It is perfect to-day, however, and will be inaugurated with a hockey practice at 7 o'clock, with skating beginning at 8 o'clock.

The Toboggan Slide will be open to-night.
Peterborough Radial Ry. Co.

Curling Rink Now Open For Season

The curling season in Peterborough is now in full swing. A number of games were played on Saturday and to-night the whole seven sheets will be in commission. The ice is in grand shape for this early in the year, and no doubt there will be a large gathering of the knight of the stone and besom at the Charlotte street rink to night.

CHANGES HANDS

Brock Street Rink Purchased To-day by a Syndicate

An important deal was completed this afternoon when the Brock street rink, which has been owned and operated by the Peterborough Hockey Club, Limited, was purchased by a syndicate of local gentlemen. As far as the general public is concerned there will be practically no change as the rink will be carried on and operated as usual.

SOME HOCKEY HAPPENINGS

There will be an important meeting of the executive of the Peterborough Hockey Club on Tuesday night, at 7.30 o'clock at the Examiner office. A full attendance is requested to take up important business in connection with the grouping of the clubs and other matters.

The first hockey practice of the season will be held to-night at Brock Street Rink between 7 and 8 o'clock and there will undoubtedly be one grand turn out of junior and intermediate players as the cold weather has set the hockey bug buzzing with a vengeance. The ice is in fine shape. All players who intend to play the game this winter are invited out. The regular practice hours will be arranged this week, likely to-morrow night, when the executive will meet to discuss the grouping arrangements they will advocate at the meeting of the O. H. A. on Wednesday night.

LOW RATES FOR CHRISTMAS AND NEW YEAR'S

At fare and one-third, good going December 31st, 1910, to Monday, January 2nd, 1911, inclusive, valid returning until Wednesday, January 4th, 1911. Secure tickets and full information from Grand Trunk agents.

GREAT RUSH FOR TICKETS—GOOD SEATS LEFT YET

Judging by the rush to get seats started this morning when the plan for the Belmont Club Minstrels on Thursday and Friday of this week, went on sale at the Grand, there will be two record crowds to see the production. The greatest interest is being displayed in the forth coming event and the seats went fast this morning, although there are many choice seats yet to be had. In view of this morning's rush, however, the public is warned to secure their seats as early as possible if they do not want to be disappointed later on. Rehearsals by company is diligently being under the direction of Mr. Shepard.

"Loafers" Discussed By Good Fellowship League At Interesting Meeting

A successful meeting of men was held in the Princess Theatre yesterday afternoon under the auspices of the League of Good Fellowship. The subject of an interesting address and discussion was "Loafers."

The Rev. C. Carpenter said the term "loafer" meant practically good for nothing. He pointed out that all present (himself included) were loafers in one way or another; all had to work, and each one had to reproach himself, at times, for work badly done or neglected altogether.

Everybody knew the loafer of the streets, with his hands in his pockets and his untidy appearance—the man who will not work. There are others not so well known, at the opposite end of the social scale, and who, having plenty of money and time, are very little removed from the street corner loafer, as they neglect their vast opportunities of elevating humanity.

There were 8 other kinds of loafers he wished to mention: 1st the man who scamps his work, and takes as his motto, "what the eye never sees the heart never grieves over." He does his work for the sake of his wages only, and does not do it with the best that is in him. And who is surprised that his slip-shod methods result in his constant shifting from one power to the other.

2nd, Allied to him is the "loafer" who says that his work is good enough for the money he gets for it. In his case there is something missing.

Third. Then there is the man without any ideal and without ambition. Her may be honest and often is, but his outlook is too confined. He can't look beyond his job. He works with his hands and muscles, but not with all the powers of his brain and body. Plodding toilers but still 'loafers' in neglecting many of the opportunities of life. Satisfied with himself he fails to grasp the highest.

4th. The man is a loafer who has only one string to his bow, when he should have four or five. He confines himself to his own specialty, with no attempt to enlarge his mind, and when his string collapses, he regretfully finds that he has been but a loafer.

Fifth. Another loafer wastes his odd moments. Odd moments should be carefully husbanded. Men should not sit lasing. They should fill them up by reading. If only the scientific and other interesting columns of the newspapers. Something that will develop thought in the man himself and if he neglects to do this he is a 'loafer.'

Sixth. Then there is the busy-body loafer. Rushing about always in a hurry, neglecting his own work and looking after some other person's. Spoils an his work by not concentrating his mind.

Seventh. Then there is the 'loafer' who does not know the full extent of his own ability. Great men have always recognized their own potentialities. He quoted an Arabic proverb, and drew especial attention to the part of it running, "He who knows and knows that he knows follow him."

Eighth. Finally he dealt with the Sunday loafer. This, perhaps, comprised the largest class. There should be plenty of time for walks and reasonable relaxation for those who are engaged all the week. Relaxation is a necessity and for this end the Sabbath was ordained, but we are loafers and not doing our duty if we do not attend some place for the worship of Almighty God. Otherwise we cut ourselves away, by our loafing from Christianity.

He urged all to develop the highest and the best of which they are capable, to develop their faculties and to put in force all those faculties for elevating our fellowman and making all better citizens of the world. A discussion followed. Messrs. Packman and Woodworth sang a duet, "Weary Gleaner."

WEYBURN, Sask.

THE TOWN WITH A CITY FOUNDATION

A Few Facts Concerning WEYBURN

WEYBURN is one of the most important C. P. R. Divisional points in Southern Saskatchewan.

THE GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC

is building a line through Weyburn to the International boundary. This line is completed to within a short distance of the Town to-day.

THE CANADIAN NORTHERN has surveyed two proposed lines to within a short distance of the Town. With all these Railway lines running into the Town, Weyburn is bound to become a great Railroad centre, consequently a great distributing centre.

WEYBURN'S IDEAL LOCATION as a natural distributing point for Southern Saskatchewan, is recognized by the large wholesale houses, many of which have already located there.

THE WEYBURN DISTRICT has been blessed with good crops this season, and can still boast of never having experienced a crop failure. Last year nearly a million and a-half bushels of wheat were marketed in the seven local elevators, and that amount is confidently expected this season. The Weyburn District lies about 1,600 feet above the sea level. The average rainfall is about twenty-seven inches.

WEYBURN lies in the centre of Southern Saskatchewan, and is surrounded by the most fertile and productive wheat belt in the Canadian West, and now has the reputation of producing more wheat than any other point in Western Canada; yet only about 25% of the land around Weyburn is under cultivation. What will it mean when it is all cultivated?

THE FIVE CHURCHES are all splendid edifices, and a feature of the town.

WEYBURN HAS A SPLENDID system of waterworks and sewerage, and owns its electric lighting system. The supply of drinking water is inexhaustible.

OF THE FIVE HOTELS in Weyburn, three are among the finest in the Province.

NEXT Spring McKinnon & Company will erect a departmental store in Weyburn. The building alone will cost $100,000

NO BETTER Criterion of the Town's growth, and prosperity, could be desired than that of the building and local improvement expenditure this season. It is conservatively estimated that this total will not be less than $475,000.00.

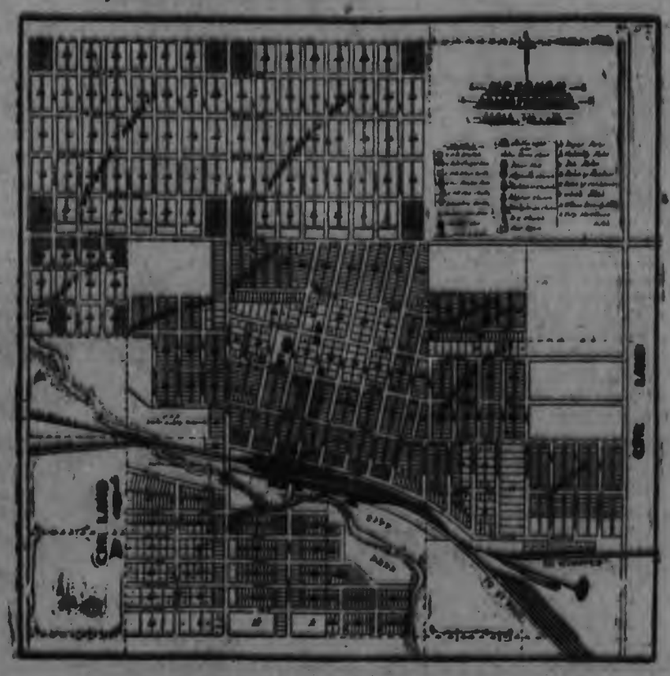
WEYBURN offers a Safe and Paying Investment to Those Who Buy at Present Prices

WEYBURN enjoys the distinction of being the only town in the Canadian West to possess its own CHARTERED BANK. It is named the WEYBURN SECURITY BANK, and has opened branches in several neighboring Towns. Among its financial institutions, Weyburn numbers three of Canada's greatest Banks, namely, the Canadian Bank of Commerce, the Union Bank of Canada, and the Bank of Montreal. The WEYBURN SECURITY BANK is the only Bank operating solely in Western Canada. The Weyburn Security Bank is erecting its Head Office building in Weyburn, it being three storeys high, with a handsome, white terra-cotta front, and will cost $80,000. The fact that this Bank takes the name of the Town, and considers Weyburn the best Town in the West to make its headquarters, should be sufficient information to induce a man to, at least look into the Weyburn Real Estate proposition.

MANY RESIDENCES, costing from $5,000 to $8,000, are nearing completion, and in every part of the Town new cottages and houses, costing from $1,000 to $5,000, are under construction.



Highfield Park

BUILDING LOTS offered for sale range from $120 upward, according to location.

THESE LOTS are all within the Town limits at an average distance of one half mile from the centre of the Town. They are located within three quarters of a mile north of the C. P. R. station, in which direction the town is rapidly growing, and which is certain to become the finest residential district.

ALL THIS LAND has been inspected by clients, who increased their holdings after viewing it, and every lot is absolutely guaranteed to be high, dry land, splendidly situated for building purposes.

Ask to see photographs taken in Weyburn, which illustrate the direction in which the town is growing.

CONCRETE SIDEWALKS have been laid and water pipes, sewer pipes and electric lights have been installed as far north as Highfield Park.

If you have any money which you would invest in an exceptionally good real estate property, you are doing yourself an injustice if you do not learn of the prospects and possibilities that await an investor in this growing Town of Weyburn

That Bald Spot

Don't let that bald spot grow! Go to your druggist at once and get a bottle of Parisian Sage and if that don't check the falling hair, and cause new hair to grow, nothing will.

Dandruff is the cause of baldness. Dandruff germs cause dandruff. Parisian Sage kills the germs; eradicates dandruff, stops falling hair and itching scalp. We will refund your money, if it fails to do this in two weeks. Parisian Sage will cause the hair to grow, if the hair root be not dead. It causes the hair to grow thicker, more luxuriant, and puts new life into it.

The girl with the Auburn hair is on every package of Parisian Sage. It is sold for 50c. by all druggists or sent postpaid by the Giroux Mfg. Co., Dept. Erie, Can., on receipt of price. Sold and [illegible]

The Boys' Brotherhood will meet on Friday evening at 7.15.

OBITUARY

CHAS. F. RAYMOND.

Word was received in the city from Guelph to-day of the death in that town at the home of his mother, of Chas. F. Raymond, formerly editor of the Peterborough Review. Mr. Raymond left here for his home in Guelph about three weeks ago. He was widely known throughout Ontario as a newspaperman and has a host of friends who will be shocked to learn of his death.

UNNATURAL THINNESS EASILY CORRECTED

By Clever Prescription Which Can be Filled at Any Drug Store.

No Need to Be Thin Now as Reports Show This Method Effective.

People who are very thin and unwary ought not to be so. Undoubtedly they are more subject to disease and consumption than the normally fleshy. Thinness is usually accompanied by weakness and weakness subjects any one to colds, coughs, consumption, pneumonia, etc. It has been discovered, almost by accident, that tincture cardamomic, when combined in a prescription with proper accelerative medicines, becomes one of the most valuable, effective, and reliable [illegible] flesh making medicines [illegible] science. It is especially beneficial to men and women between the ages of sixteen and fifty-five who [illegible] a lack of proper nerve force and digestion, remain undeveloped in body, limbs, arms and bust. A well rounded symmetrical figure in man or woman indicates health, magnetism, stamina and happiness.

The reader who wishes to add from ten to forty pounds should not fail to begin with this valuable prescription:

First, obtain of any well stocked druggist, three ounces of essence of pepsin and three ounces of syrup of rhubarb in an 8 oz. bottle. Then add one ounce compound essence cardiol. Shake and let stand two hours. Then add one ounce tincture cadomene compound (not cardamom.) Shake well and take one teaspoonful before each meal, one after each meal. Drink plenty of water between meals and when retiring. Keep up this treatment regularly and of a certainty from one to three pounds will be added to the weight each week and the general health will also improve.

JOHN L. WEST CHARGED WITH SELLING LIQUOR

LINDSAY, DEC. 9.—At the police court this morning the adjourned hearing of the charge preferred against Professor West came up for consideration. The charge is:

"That John L. West, of the town of Lindsay, on Dec. 3rd, 1910, did sell certain poultry, to wit, three turkeys and four chickens, unwholesome and unfit for food, of man, to Frederick Taylor, of the said Town of Lindsay, contrary to Public Health Act and by-law of said Town made in that behalf."

The Magistrate found the accused guilty and imposed a fine of $15.45, or one month in jail. It is likely the fine will be paid.

PALE, ANAEMIC GIRLS

The languid, semi-invalid girl is no longer popular. Firm flesh, rounded form and a sparkling glow to the complexion are the results of using Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food. Mrs. Goodson, 404 Sackville St., Montreal, Que., writes: "My daughter's appetite was bad and she was pale and sleepless. Since using Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food there is a marked change in her condition. She is stronger and health[illegible] every way."

A Brigham Young Widow Dead.

Salt Lake City, Utah, Dec. 13.—Amelia Folsom Young, 72 years old, a widow of the famous Mormon prophet and leader, Brigham Young, is dead at her home here of paralysis.

Mrs. Young was born in Buffalo, N.Y., Aug. 14, 1838, her father being William H. Folsom, who joined the Mormon Church and became prominent in its affairs.

Half-Million For Dartmouth.

Hanover, N.H., Dec. 13.—The gift of half a million dollars for the further enlargement and strengthening of the teaching force of Dartmouth College, from Edward Tuck of Paris, a graduate of Dartmouth class of 1868, was announced by President Ernest Fox Nicholls, at a meeting in Webster Hall late yesterday.

Washington, Dec. 13.—When Ambassador Bryce returns here Dec. 21, he will bring with him a new private secretary, W. E. Gladstone, only grandson of the famous British statesman.

LIBERALS WILL PROBABLY HAVE BIGGER MARGIN

Coalition Force Have Now 22 Gains to 21 for the Unionist Party---Elections To-day Will Say Whether or Not Wales and Scotland Will Remain Loyal to the Government.

London, Dec. 13.—The polling results show monotonous regularity and the returns yesterday leave the Government near sent to the good, the Unionists having gained 21 seats from the Government, and the Government coalition 22 seats from the Unionists in the election of 518 members out of 670. The position of the parties last night is as follows:

Opposition: Unionists 198.

Lancashire, by increased Unionist and decreased Liberal majorities, is displaying a consistent tendency in favor of the Unionists, while the county district contiguous to London are following the lead of the capital in favor of the Liberals. Thus the Right Hon. Louis Marcourt retains his seat for Romsendale with a greatly reduced majority, 1,896 less than he received in the last election, while Tottenham and Walthamstow, in Middlesex and Essex respectively, give big Liberal votes.

The pollings thus far show no very decided movement in either direction, except such as might be explained by the local circumstances. To-day's 41 polling will include a number of Scotch and Welsh constituencies and will indicate whether Scotland and Wales remain loyal to the Government.

Chancellor Lloyd-George, speaking at Newtown last night, declared that no home rule bill will give the Catholic in Ireland any power over religion. A clause would be provided to prevent any religion from being established, whether Catholic or Protestant.

Attorney Likens Mrs. Glover to Kipling's Character—More Damning Evidence in the LeBlanc Case

AN ALTERCATION

Cambridge, Mass., Dec. 13.—The evidence upon which a jury will convict or acquit Hattie Leblanc of the murder of Clarence F. Glover was completed shortly after the beginning of the afternoon session of the trial yesterday, and the remaining two hours was occupied by Melvin M. Johnson, the leading counsel for the little Cape Breton girl, in the opening of his plea for her life. The lawyer declared at the outset that the little girl was brought from the provinces solely for the white slave traffic, and then, turning to Mrs. Lillian M. Glover, who induced her to leave her home, Mr. Johnson denounced the widow as a vampire, and recited Kipling to emphasize his point. He will finish his argument to-day.

District Attorney J. J. Higgins yesterday made one last effort to introduce Glover's alleged dying statement that Hattie Leblanc had shot him, but when he declared that Mr. Johnson himself had said that Hattie had admitted the shooting, there was a burst of passionate protest from the defence. Again Judge Bond ruled the evidence out of the case.

When Mrs. Glover was on the stand, the district attorney became involved in a heated argument with Judge Bond upon the admissibility of some of her evidence, and the colloquy became so bitter that the district attorney was threatened with expulsion.

Two more witnesses were introduced, who declared that they saw Mrs. Glover close by the laundry on the evening of the shooting, while the widow denied that she was out of her house on that night. Then after a breathing spell of half an hour, the principal defender of Hattie Leblanc began his final effort to obtain her freedom.

It is expected that Mr. Johnston would close before noon to-day, and that the rest of the day would be taken up by the district attorney.

Hattie Leblanc is facing another danger nearly as terrible as a verdict of guilty. She may soon become totally blind. Optic atrophy has attacked her. There is one hope, her youth, and skilful oculists believe there is a chance to save her sight. Even if decay of the optic nerve is arrested, however, she will always be partially blind.

Engine Rolled Down Embankment.

Edmonton, Dec. 13.—While a C.N.R. engine was running on the new Wetaskiwin line it left the rails and rolled down a 25-foot embankment, which resulted in the death of one man.

The accident was the outcome of an open switch. The dead man is Fireman Thomas Wallace, who was on route to the old country for Christmas. Those injured are: Thomas Lowe, engineer; E. C. Reich, brakesman; Frank Cook, yardmaster, and Brakeman John Mead.

WAITING FOR HAYS

Government Cannot Move in C. T. R. Trainmen's Case—International Extension Comes Up Again

THE DAY IN THE HOUSE

Ottawa, Dec. 13.—In the House of Commons yesterday afternoon the action of the Grand Trunk Railway Co. in not reinstating a number of its employes who participated in the strike last summer was discussed by R. L. Borden. The leader of the Opposition interpellated the Minister of Labor on the subject. Hon. Mackenzie King reviewed the course of the negotiations and showed that the Government took almost a hand in the dispute at the instance of the men. It appeared strange, however, that no action had been taken to enquire into the case of any individual who had just been taken back into the employ of the company. Charles M. Hays, president of the company, was a railway unlicensed judge to determine whether a man should be guilty of any act of violence which would preclude him from enjoying the terms of settlement.

The yearly discussion over the extension of the Intercolonial Railway into the counties of Nova Scotia where no railway facilities now exist, occupied the balance of the afternoon. Hon. George P. Graham defended the item, and intimated that when Mr. Fielding returned to the House some definite policy might be announced.

When the House met, Hon. Frank Oliver introduced a bill to amend the immigration act. Its object is to prevent the evil complaints with certain financial interpretations of the measure, framed last session, and does not interfere with the principle of the law.

R. L. Borden introduced the question of the reinstatement of employes of the Grand Trunk Railway, who have lost their places on account of participation in the strike of last summer. He wanted information in respect to a number of points, more particularly as to the meaning of the words "as soon as possible," in the agreement, and finally, if the Government had, or proposed to conduct an enquiry into the number of men guilty of disorderly conduct.

The Minister of Labor then explained, under the present situation, the company claimed that the terms of the settlement had been fulfilled, or, in other words, that the men who had not been reinstated had been guilty of acts of violence.

Pressing the result of the action of the company, Mr. King said the Government had considered it advisable not to take any further steps. If the action of the company in the end was not satisfactory, the Government would take such steps as it deemed advisable to see that justice is done them.

D. D. McKenzie (Cape Breton) presented a resolution to the House that the time had arrived in the development of Nova Scotia when the Intercolonial Railway should be extended by Mines question of that province that was not provided served with railway facilities.

Wages Conference Agreed On.

Washington, Dec. 13.—The State Department yesterday announced successful consummation of the long-continued negotiations looking to the gathering of an international conference, with the object of suppressing the opium traffic. With one exception, all of the nations addressed on this subject have agreed to the conference, and word comes from The Hague that they, too, will have practically unanimously accepted on the date, and The Hague on the place for the conference.

The American commissioners have not yet been appointed, but it is probable that the chairman, who presided over the recent Conference at The Hague, will be named. They are Bishop Chas. Brent of the Philippine Islands, Dr. Hamilton Wright and Charles D. Tenney, Assistant secretary of the United States legation at Pekin.

Olympia Is Total Loss, But Her Company Is Rescued.

Valdez, Alaska, Dec. 13.—All the passengers of the Alaska Steamship Co.'s steamship Olympia, which went on the rocks at Bligh Island, Prince William Sound, Saturday night, were taken off the ship at four o'clock on Sunday afternoon, together with the mails and baggage, and were conveyed to Valdez and Ellemar. Most of the passengers are here. Those at Ellemar are well cared for in the little village.

The Olympia left Cordova Saturday evening, after unloading a large quantity of coal in her after-hold, and soon ran into a fierce gale. The empty stern stood too high out of the water, and in the tempest the ship became unmanageable, and was spun about by the wind. About midnight she went hard and fast on Bligh Island reef.

Wireless Operator Hayes sent out the distress call, which was picked up at Cordova and Valdez, and also gave as much information of the wreck as he could, for the water soon put out the fires and made the wireless unworkable. The Government launch Dennison, from Fort Liscum, and the steamer Juno left at once for Bligh Island, and took off the passengers without mishap to any of them. The mail also were saved.

It is hoped to save the freight on the Olympia, but it is feared that the vessel will be a total loss. There is a rock through her No. 1 hold.

Burned Three Blocks.

Dauphin, Man., Dec. 13.—The worst fire in the history of this town broke out Sunday night in the hardware store of A. R. Macpherson, and before it was extinguished three wooden blocks had been destroyed.

The loss is estimated at $75,000, with insurance of about 50 per cent. The fire-fighting apparatus proved a failure.

Struck by Train and Killed.

Tweed, Dec. 13.—J. F. Waller, manager of the Queen's Hotel, Tweed, received a telegram from North Tonawanda, N.Y., yesterday, stating that his son, William Waller, had been struck by a passenger train at that place. No further particulars were given. Mr. and Mrs. Waller left for North Tonawanda yesterday afternoon.

Sermon by CHARLES T. RUSSELL Pastor Brooklyn Tabernacle

God's Great Plan Hidden in Abraham and Family.

The Mystery Which Was Covered So Long Is Now Made Plain.

Omaha, Neb., Dec. 11.—Pastor Russell of Brooklyn Tabernacle visited our city yesterday as the guest of the International Bible Students' Association. He gave two public addresses, which were heard by large and intelligent audiences. We report his address from these words of Scripture:

"And Isaac brought Rebecca into his mother Sarah's tent, and she became his wife and he loved her."—Genesis xxiv, 67.

When we mentionmen speak of Abraham, Isaac and others as types we should not be understood to mean that they were mainly types—that the Bible stories respecting them are fictions. A person or thing is a type when, in addition to the actual experiences, the Scriptures indicate that it prefigures and illustrates on a small scale some person or things yet future. As, for instance, Adam in certain respects, as the head of the race, was a type of Messiah, the Second Adam.

The first Adam was the head of our race, but failed to give the eternal life desired. In God's providence Messiah is to be the Second Adam, in the sense that he will regenerate, as his children, all the posterity of the First Adam. Messiah is thus declared in prophecy to be the Everlasting Father of mankind—the Father or Lifegiver, better than Adam, and who will give to our race everlasting life, instead of a heritage of weakness, imperfection and death.

Similarly, Moses not only was a real character, the leader of the nation of Israel, but, additionally, he was a type of a greater Mediator—Messiah. As Moses mediated the Law Covenant for Israel, so Messiah, the Prophet like unto Moses, or antitypical of him (Acts iii, 22), is to be the Mediator of Israel's New Covenant, under which the Abrahamic blessings will reach them and through them reach all the families of the earth (Jer. xxxi, 31).

Similarly, Aaron was a type of the higher priesthood and its better sacrifices connected with the New Covenant. So, also, the under-priests and the Levites, additional to their own experiences, served, in God's providences, as types of the higher institutions by which the New Covenant will be inaugurated shortly.

On this occasion we ask your attention to Abraham, known in the Scriptures as the friend of God, as the father of the faithful, and to his son Isaac, the Son of Promise, born out of the natural order, miraculously, when his mother was old; also to Isaac's wife, Rebecca, selected by Abraham to be the companion and joint-heir with his son Isaac in his inheritance. These personages lived their lives wholly unconscious of the fact that God was using them and over-ruling their affairs, so as to make of them prophetic pictures of his own great Plan of the Ages. These type-pictures are always to be read in full harmony with the inspired writings of the Bible and never to be understood in contradiction of the same.

Not everything that Abraham did, however, is to be esteemed typical. In a general way this grand man of the past looms up before our minds as a monument of faith and integrity and justice. The blessings promised to go through him to his Seed, which would constitute him the father of many nations, made of him, as St. Paul points out, a type of the Almighty, from whom flows every good and every perfect gift — from whom proceeds the blessing which ultimately is to flow through Messiah, his Son, and through Israel, his people, unto all the families of the earth.

All Christians, presumably, are aware of St. Paul's interpretation of Abraham and his family as types. As Abraham typified God, so his wife typified the Covenant through which the fidelity of the promise ultimately produced the Seed of Promise—Isaac the type, and Messiah in the antitype. St. Paul also explains that Sarah's servant, Hagar, at Sarah's with, became for a time her representatives with Abraham and brought forth Ishmael. Hagar, St. Paul explains, typified the Law Covenant, vitalized by the gracious arrangements of the same God and Father. And Hagar's son, literally Abraham's first-born, typified the Jewish nation, the first development under the Covenant.

As Abraham loved Isaac and desired a blessing upon him, so God loved Israel and desired a blessing upon Israel, the offspring of the Law Covenant. Nevertheless, as Ishmael, the offspring of the bond-woman, was declared not to be the primary heir of the Abrahamic promise, but a secondary one, as the children of Israel, the offspring of the Law Covenant, were not intended to be the Spiritual Messiah through whom the promise declared that the blessing should first proceed.

In the type, we see that Sarah, Abraham's wife, who represented the original Abrahamic Covenant, brought forth a son of her own, Isaac, long years after the bondmaid, her substitute, had brought forth Ishmael. When Isaac was born, Sarah repudiated Ishmael and no longer acknowledged him as her son, but, instead, claimed everything for Isaac. The antitype of this is that from the time that God began the development of the Spiritual Israel and put forth the "Covenant by sacrifice," through which this Spiritual Israel would be developed—from that time it began to be clearly manifest that the chief portion of the promise of God to bless the world was not to be fulfilled through the Ishmael Seed, natural Israel, but through the Isaac Seed Spiritual Israel.

From the first there was manifested a competition for the Abrahamic blessing. And as Ishmael mocked at the infant Isaac, so the Jew, in his considerable development and strength, mocked at the Antitypical Isaac—Jesus and his comparatively ignorant and unlearned followers—and persecuted them. In order to continue the type, that Abraham might typify God, he was commanded to send forth Hagar and her son into the wilderness. That sending forth typified the Divine disfavor which came upon the Jews eighteen centuries ago and which has made them outcasts from God's favor, as Hagar and Ishmael were cut off from Abraham's presence and family and care. The bread and water which Hagar took with her, by which she and Ishmael were nourished in the wilderness for a time, pictures and types the promises of God through the Law and the prophets which still belong to the Jew and upon which, for eighteen centuries, he has been nourished, and without which the hope of the nation would have perished.

Now we come to the dire moment pictured in Genesis xxi, 18-19. The water provided by Abraham had been consumed. No more was to be had. Ishmael was dying. Hagar, his mother, separated herself from him. At the opportune moment the angel of the Lord appeared to her and pointed her to a spring of water, where she freshed herself and Ishmael with new life.

The antitype of this is now to be seen before us. The Jewish people, separated more and more from the Law and the Prophets, are becoming weak and faint as respects hope. They are about to die! But no, the Lord graciously points out a well-spring of the water of life at this critical moment. As Ishmael was rescued from death by this water, so the nation of Israel, whom he typified, is now about to find in the providence of God that their portion of the Abrahamic Covenant is the earthly one, not the heavenly one, not the spiritual. They are about to be refreshed and to enter upon a new career. That career, however, will not mark them as Ishmaelites, nor will their New Covenant relationship be symbolized by Hagar, the Old Law Covenant. Thenceforth they are represented under a new type.

If, at first, our Jewish friends might be inclined to feel disappointed that they were represented in Ishmael, and not in Isaac, by the Hagar Covenant, the Covenant of bondage to the Law, instead of being formed free from the Law, there is a consolation. Their consolation is that Isaac typified the Messiah and that Israel is pictured as the nation on whose behalf Messiah will mediate the New Law Covenant. The Messiah must be spiritual, in order to be able to confer the great blessings indicated in the Covenant made with Abraham. The nation of Israel never expected to be spiritual and had no such promise in the Bible. To the Jews will come exactly what they have always been expecting—greatness as an earthly people, honor as the elect nation through whom the New Covenant blessings will be opened up to all the world of mankind—the Gentiles.

As already pointed out, Isaac, the son of Abraham, typified the Messiah of glory, the Son of God and heir of all the promises—the one through whom alone eternal life may be obtained and restitution to that perfection which will enable Israel and the world to keep the Divine Law perfectly and merit the gift of God, eternal life, according to their New Law Covenant by and through the great Mediatorial Seed.

In the type, Abraham sent his trusted servant Eleazar (typical of the holy Spirit) to select a Bride for his son Isaac. Eleazar might not go anywhere. He was directed to go only to those of Abraham's family, thus implying that none would be called to be the Bride of Messiah except such as were already in relationship to God through faith, obedience and justification. When the servant had found Rebecca he put upon her certain jewels, explained to her and her relatives the nature of his mission, and asked her if she were willing to come and be Isaac's Bride. He said, my master, Abraham, is very rich and all that he hath he hath given unto Isaac.

Thus the great riches of God are again illustrated in Abraham and the fact that Messiah is his Son and the heir of all the promises of God, the One through whom, Israel and all mankind shall be blessed. Rebecca promptly responded and thus betrothed herself to the unseen Bridegroom and hastened with the servant to Isaac. As her kinsfolk bade her goodby they wished her a blessing in these words, "Be thou the mother of thousands of millions" (Genesis xxiv, 60).

We read that "Rebecca arose and her damsels (maids, servants) and they rode upon the camels and followed the man Eleazar."

Here we find, in harmony with other Scriptures, a picture of this Gospel Age, and its work of bringing to Messiah a special Bride class of saintly ones. First amongst these saints were some of the Jewish nation, according to the Divine Rule; as the Scriptures set forth—"to the Jew first." This Bride class has been selected from every nation, people, kindred and tongue, yet in all will be but a little flock—"Fear not, little flock, it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the Kingdom"—the spiritual, unseen Kingdom of Messiah—joint-heirship with him in his throne—not the earthly Kingdom which has been promised definitely to Israel.

Other Scriptures have shown us that there are two classes amongst these saints. A few, peculiarly devoted, will constitute the Bible class. And a larger number, not so courageous of the Truth and righteousness, will constitute her companions, her servants, as Rebecca traveled accompanied by her servants. These two classes are particularly specified in the Scriptures (45th Psalm), where we read of the Messiah-Bride and Queen. In her resurrection glory she is pictured as the Queen robed in Ophir with fine needlework—the glory representing the divine nature which will be granted her and the fine needlework representing her glorious righteousness, embellished with with the fruits of the holy Spirit. The Psalmist tells how she shall be brought into the presence of the great King Jehovah and then adds that the virgins, or companions, that follow her shall also be brought into the presence of the King, showing that there will always be a difference of rank on the spiritual plane. These two classes are again pictured in the Law as Priests and Levites, the Bride class being represented by the Priests, owing to their willing sacrifices of the earthly portion in favor of the heavenly.

We are not to identify the Bride class with the nominal Christian Churches of to-day any more than we would identify the Apostles with the Jewish Church of their day. The Apostles were a select few, and similarly all the members of the Church throughout the Age have been a select few out of a nominal many. "The Lord knoweth them that are his." The true Church has been selected, not only from all of the twelve tribes of Israel, but from every other nation, people and tongue, even so many as the Lord our God has called.

Rebecca's leaving her father's house typified the personal consecration of each one who, led of the Spirit, accepts the Divine invitation to joint-heirship with Christ. The first jewelry given to Rebecca, when first she heeded the invitation and invited the servant to her home, represents the earliest blessing received by believers. The jewelry she received after she had decided to go to Isaac and become his wife represents the blessings of the Holy Spirit which come upon the fully consecrated, those who determine to walk in the footsteps of Jesus in the narrow way into the Kingdom, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit.

Arrived at the end of her journey, she found herself in the presence of Isaac, and immediately alighted from her camel and covered herself with a veil. Thus, pictorially, is represented the fact that the Church, when having experienced the change of the First Resurrection and in the presence of the heavenly Bridegroom, will no longer need the guidance of the holy Spirit, through the Scriptures. This part of the picture, of course, is yet future. The Scriptures, however, indicate, and outward conditions corroborate the fact, that the time of this glorious change is nigh at hand.

Isaac immediately received Rebecca and took her into his mother's tent. Sarah had died and Rebecca became her successor. Thus is beautifully pictured the fact that when the Bride of Messiah shall be complete on the plane of glory, the Sarah Covenant will be at an end and her place, as a channel of blessing, will be taken by the glorified Church. Then will be fulfilled the prophetic blessing of her relatives, "Be thou the mother of thousands of millions." These thousands of millions represent the world of mankind, which will be regathered, or granted new life by the great Messiah during the thousand years of his reign as the Mediator of the New Covenant.

Messiah will be the regenerator and his Bride will be the nourisher, instructor, helper of all mankind under the New Covenant, because it will be this antitypical Isaac and his Bride that will mediate for Israel, and through Israel for the world, the New Covenant of Restitution blessings (Acts iii, 19-26). "In thee and in thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed," applies primarily, as St. Paul shows, to Messiah and his Church in glory—the starry-like being past, the spiritual nature being attained as a reward for the sacrifices (Galatians iii, 16, 29).

Whoever will first receive Messiah and come into harmony with the [illegible] of his invisible Kingdom [illegible] shall be blessed. [illegible] will be no obstacles in his matter, for God is no respecter of persons. However, because of their past experiences and earthly hopes and trust in the Law and the Prophets, the Jews will be the first amongst the nations to accept the new order of things and ally themselves with it; therefore, to them will be blessings go first and through them, as instruments of the Kingdom, the blessings will extend to all.

While thanking God for the glorious prospects of that glorious time which is nearing, let us, dear friends, seek to make our calling and election sure to membership in the Body of the Bride of Christ.

The Kidneys Wear Out

But many people of advanced years have learned how to keep these organs healthy by using

DR. CHASE'S KIDNEY-LIVER PILLS

The kidneys are often the first organs of the body to cause trouble. Their work of filtering the blood is greatly increased by excessive eating or by the use of highly seasoned foods and alcoholic drinks.

As advanced age comes on most people suffer more or less from derangements of the kidneys. With some there are years of pains and aches, with others Bright's disease is soon developed and the end comes quickly.

Fortunately a great many have learned about Dr. Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills, and are enabled by their use to keep the kidneys healthy and active.

This medicine is entirely different from ordinary kidney treatments, and invigorates the action of the liver and bowels. To this combined action is attributed its remarkable success.

Mr. Richard Preston, Osborne, Lambton county, Ont., writes:—"I want to testify to the wonderful curative properties of Dr. A. W. Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills. Seventeen years ago I began the use of this medicine, when my back was so bad that to stoop or rise was torture to me. The kidneys were in bad condition, but these pills entirely freed me of back pains. I have used them ever since, whenever the kidneys would get out of order, and now, at eighty years, am well and hearty, thanks to this grand medicine."

Dr. A. W. Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills, one pill a dose, 25 cents a box, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

Once you have used

PURITY FLOUR

you will readily pay the little more it may cost.

WESTERN CANADA FLOUR MILLS COMPANY — Purity — MANITOBA HARD WHEAT

Until you have actually tried PURITY FLOUR you may demur at the trifle more it costs you than lower grade flours cost——but your first sack will show you why that seemingly higher price is a real economy for you

PURITY FLOUR

That trial sack (which you ought to order this very day) will teach you what Purity Flour is worth to you, as contrasted with an ordinary flour.

PURITY FLOUR is milled from only the kernels of the choicest Manitoba hard wheat—the world's wheat standard.

From the 84 grain elevators which we own and operate, we select the finest wheat of the year's crop. This, at our mills, is so treated that only the most richly-nourishing part of the wheat berry gets into a PURITY sack or a PURITY barrel.

The result is a flour so strong that it produces more bread for the quantity used than ordinary flour

But bulk of product is not all you are to expect of PURITY FLOUR. You are to expect lighter, snowier bread; bread that has the nutlike, sweet, wholesome taste every housewife tries to put into the bread she bakes.

PURITY FLOUR, moreover, is not merely a bread flour. It is an every-purpose flour. It makes the kind of pastry you can be proud of—cake that invites praise—biscuits that suggest an encore.

Not only is PURITY the flour for economy's sake, you see, but the flour for quality baking. Thus, the few extra cents which it may cost you actually insures you against baking disappointments. PURITY FLOUR is the flour you will never be without, once you fully test its unusual merits.

Begin with a small trial sack, if you are dubious. Your grocer can supply you.

"Bronchitis"

This is an acute inflammation of the mucous membrane lining the air tubes in the lungs.

The disease begins with a tightness across the chest, difficulty of breathing, hoarseness, and there is a dry, harsh, croupy cough.

After a few days mucous begins to be raised. This is at first white, but later of a greenish or yellowish color and is occasionally streaked with blood.

Cure the first symptoms of Bronchitis by the use of Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup and thus prevent it becoming chronic and perhaps turning to Consumption.

Mrs. D. J. McCormack, Cleveland, N.S., writes: "My little boy, two years old, caught a bad cold which developed into Bronchitis. He was so choked up he could hardly breathe. Reading about your wonderful medicine, Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup, I decided to try a bottle, and with such good result I got another which completely cured him, without having a doctor. I cannot say too much in its praise and would not be without it in the house as I consider it a sure cure for Colds and Bronchitis.

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup is put up in a yellow wrapper; three pine trees the trade mark; price 25 cents.

V.—Bathing For Health

By EUGENE L. FISK, M. D.

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

ANY one who has watched a group of small boys diving from the docks of our seacoast cities does not need a scientist to tell him that they are thoroughly at home in the water, but the scientist may suggest that this "at homeness" is an instinct transmitted from remote ancestors in the silurian age and in support of this view will point out that human beings in the early stages of their development exhibit certain definite characteristics, which warrant the belief that away back in dim antiquity our ancestors were quite as well adapted to water as we now are to land.

The practical application of the above reflections is that bathing has a wide range of usefulness aside from its cleansing effect. Every self respecting American citizen desires to be clean and will bathe for that purpose more or less frequently, but the thinking should not be made of bathing upon the bath simply as a cleansing process. Possibly for the reasons suggested above the mere contact with water stimulates and invigorates the body entirely apart from the influence of temperature and the removal of dirt.

Warm water and pure soap are considered the essentials for a cleansing bath, but a cold bath, followed by vigorous rubbing, will accomplish all that is really necessary for cleanliness.

Dangers of Warm Bathing.

The vast amount of supposed dirt removed by the Turkish bath is mostly epithelial scales from the various layers of skin. To remove an excessive amount of this scarf skin may impair its protective qualities; hence the advisability of not taking the Turkish or Russian bath oftener than once a week. However, the warm bath gives a greater feeling of cleanliness in one's cleanliness than the cold bath and is doubtless beneficial if not employed too often and to the exclusion of the more valuable and tonic cold bath.

It is a good plan to spray or sponge the neck and chest with cold water after finishing the warm, cleansing bath. This precaution should always be taken by those who rely solely on the warm bath, especially if they bathe every day; otherwise undue susceptibility to colds may develop. As a rule, the warm bath should be taken in the evening.

Most people who have employed the cold shower or plunge will testify to its delightful and invigorating effects, but there is no reason why it should be forced upon delicate children or feeble adults.

Baths For Babies.

A daily bath for the young baby is of the utmost importance. At first the temperature of the water should be 98 degrees F., but by the end of the first month it may be reduced to 70 degrees F.

When the child reaches eighteen months a cold sponge may be given as a finish to the warm bath.

Delicate children who have not been thus trained may be gradually inured to the cold bath and enjoy its benefits if caution is used. For such children the temperature of the water should be warm or tepid at first and daily reduced until it is obvious that a vigorous and healthy reaction will not follow a further reduction.

It is really dangerous, not to say cruel, for obstinate nurses or parents to force an anaemic child with a poor circulation to take a cold bath from which it is physically incapable of reacting.

Very often the cold shower or sponge bath is well borne if one stands in a tub of warm water.

Value of the Cold Bath.

The cold bath is a most valuable nervous and circulatory stimulant. When well borne it improves the circulation not only in the skin, but in the internal recesses of the vital organs.

The cold bath trains the nerve centers that control the production of body heat and those that control the blood vessels in such a way that the system is fortified against exposure and drafts. An earnest effort, therefore, should be made to accustom oneself to this valuable tonic and protective measure.

Barring physical disability, no one can offer a valid excuse for neglecting the daily bath. A tin tub, a jug of water, a sponge and a coarse towel suffice for a bath quite as refreshing as could be had in the luxurious halls of Caracalla.

Dangers of the Cold Bath.

Personally I question the advisability of the ice cold plunge as a daily practice. The shock of this plunge is well resisted from by many, but there is danger in some cases of undue strain upon the arterial and internal organs.

The moderately cold plunge or shower fulfills all purposes of health, and it is the part of wisdom to be moderate in this as in all things.

The ice cold bath is to be avoided by those suffering from heart or kidney trouble or rheumatism, but such subjects may still enjoy a daily tepid bath, especially if it is followed by a vigorous rubbing of the skin with a coarse towel. Also those suspecting they harbor tuberculosis against colds by lightly sponging the head and chest with cool water.

The best time for the cold bath is before breakfast. Following the bath, vigorous rubbing with a coarse towel and a few exercises adapted to the strength and endurance of the individual are advisable.

A very valuable measure in cases of nervous exhaustion and occasionally in cases of insomnia is the drip sheet bath, employed as follows:

The patient, stripped, should stand in a tub of warm water. A sheet dipped in cool or tepid water, the temperature depending upon the ability of the subject to react, is then wrapped around him from head to feet. Friction of body and limbs is applied by an attendant, and the patient should keep out the head of the wet sheet on the arrival of a physician such a bath should last but a few minutes, and then the bather should be put to bed.

Bathing in Fevers.

When typhoid fever, pneumonia or other serious illness calls the specialties of cold plunge baths to the attention of physicians, it is their invariable custom to employ such baths in the interest of their patients. Hence ordinarily such cases should not be supervised by the family physician, but by a trained nurse, who has had experience and who will follow the physician's directions implicitly. Under such circumstances the cold bath is a most valuable remedy in the early stages of a cold, especially if the patient is wrapped in heavy blankets while taking the bath and its action is assisted by some simple hot drink, such as flaxseed tea, lemonade, etc., with a view to inducing a profuse perspiration.

Value of Hydrotherapy.

The other applications of water, massage, etc., in disease come within the province of the attending physician, and his judgment must be exercised in each individual case. We believe that such remedies are not employed as frequently as they should be. The failure to use them results not from lack of knowledge on the part of physicians, but because it is difficult to carry out such measures in the ordinary household without employing skilled nurses. The average patient prefers to swallow a few pills rather than put himself to any inconvenience. This explains the resort to so many irregular lines of treatment when drugs have failed to effect a cure.

CAUTION! A smaller quantity required than of any other extract.

HOW TO GIVE A BATH TO SUCH GIANTS.

New Bed Covers.

Among the specialties of the new bed covers are those of printed cloth in French element designs. These are made with a border in one colors to match the wall decoration and an inner of the bed have a large wreath or unit of design.

The covers are made long enough to hang over the bed, almost to the floor all around, and are drawn up over the bolster roll.

Another good looking cover is in cretonne effects embroidered and over a ground cambric in all over pattern. The lining is a soft cern. This can be brought over the roll when in use by day.

Many women who have either insufficient bed clothing or who are subject to chilly feet at night will find these bed covers a great comfort.

Inexpensive Table Plate.

A country wife gives the secret of what a fancy dinner cloth or plate to match the linen at her dining room she makes the following suggestion:

Let her take some layers of crepe paper between three layers of paper like paper she wants the cloth, cut out the edges of the cloth and hem with deep thread lace and then, just as does a napkin. This gives a smooth, the paper gives the necessary body and protection, and there is no fussy work to stick to the glossy paper of the cloth where a hot dish is put upon it.

Suffered Greatly From Heart Trouble.

NERVES WERE VERY WEAK.

Mrs. John Farrell, Nine Mile, P.E.I., writes:—"It is with the greatest of pleasure I write you stating the benefit I have received by using Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills.

"About five years ago I suffered greatly from heart trouble, and my nerves were weak. After using several doctor's medicines, I got no relief, and a friend told me of your Heart and Nerve Pills. I sent two boxes and they effected a complete cure. I also recommend them highly to all nervous and run-down women.

"I have advised many others to try them and they have all been cured of the same trouble."

The great action of the nerves, as controlled by the well-being of the heart, causes nobody sees the need of your system of the nervous system. If there be nerve derangement of any kind, it is bound to produce heart disagreement.

In Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills is presented a combination that will meet all cases of heart disorder, as well as all the heart troubles that are the result of nerve weakness.

Milady's Mirror

Persons whose noses are red usually find the trouble increased when eating or sitting in a warm room. When freezing, which always shows brightest about the nose, it combines it is really an indication that circulation is defective and the blood thin. In recognizing these two facts and changing them into the secret of cure.

Rarely will external applications be of any real value, for they are simply strong astringents, calculated to shrink the tiny blood vessels that have become distended. Before these lotions can accomplish this shrinkage, however, they may dry the skin so it will look chapped or scaly, while the color is not lessened. So the many formulas for external application are of no avail.

But, when the blood is thin and circulation defective, treatment which will improve these conditions should be resorted to. For instance, iron is an excellent tonic to take internally, as it is bloodmaking. To cut down food because it causes one to flush is only to aggravate an already weakened state, for one must take nourishing and bloodmaking food and by building the system gain sufficient strength to overcome the tendency toward heightened color.

There is no special diet to adopt, for any food difficult to digest should be avoided, and tea and coffee, being stimulants, should not be drank.

Only tepid water should be used on the face, and the skin should be gently patted, not rubbed, for the latter brings color to the surface. Under no consideration should one stay in a room that is hot or where the air is stale, as the result in either case will be the same—an exceptionally red nose.

Exercises that will make the blood circulate rapidly should be taken regularly. For this walking is excellent, if the pace is brisk, and any one who can use dumbbells or Indian clubs should do so or take simple calisthenic exercises every morning before an open window.

All Together, Dear!

Sparrow, swinging on a branch, sang the oddest trill.
Law and long it was, full of lovely meaning.
Robin, tugging at a worm, paused and wiped his bill.
Paused and perked his head, stood his feathers preening.
To sing his song it plainly seemed he had forgotten quite.
A bee that flew from rose to lily lingered in her flight.
Hummed and hummed and hummed again, tried to give the keynote.
Wren, though busy with her nest, stopped to sing a trio note.
Thus reminded, robin chirped cheerily and soft.
Sparrow trilled his very loudest, sang his sweetest best.
Wren, upon the arbor perched, looking at her nest.
Sang with robin and with sparrow till the garden rang.

FINE SKELETONS FROM STONE AGE

Important Discovery Made During Excavations in Old Country—Are of Priceless Value

A discovery of considerable antiquarian value has been made at Astwick, near Biggleswade, North Bedfordshire, England. Workmen employed by Mr. Mariand, contractor of Ashton-under-Lyne, were laying a conduit near the bed of the old River Ivel, when they came across two human skeletons male and female. The skeletons were examined by Dr. Waddell, a well-known local antiquary, who pronounced them to belong to the the stone age ,and to be of almost priceless value. From the evidences he gathered that the male was a chieftain, and he must have been a man of magnificent physique. The woman was laid at right angles to the man, with her feet resting against the side of his body, and apparently when her lord died she had been slain and buried with him, according to the custom of the time. Both skeletons are complete and in a good state of preservation, due to the nature of the soil. Dr. Waddell is quite convinced that the remains belong to the neolithic period, and considers the discovery to be of great importance to the world of science. It is proposed to communicate with the British Museum authorities with a view to the bones being transferred to the museum when their antiquity has been authenticated.

BLOODLESS OPERATIONS

Latest Triumph of Electrical Science Reported From Berlin

Surgical operations without bloodshed are the latest triumph of electrical science. The discoverer is Dr. F. Nagelschmidt of Berlin, who has just demonstrated it to the members of the electrotherapeutic section of the Royal Society of Medicine.

The advantages claimed are that many operations can now be performed without blood being spilt, as the passage of this type of electricity through the diseased tissue coagulates all the albumen in the blood and tissues, and prevents the blood from flowing.

This will be particularly useful, the London, Eng., "Daily Mirror" points out, in the case of large cancers on the surface of the body, and particularly in the type called "en cuirasse."

The current that the doctor uses is a very distinct modification of the ordinary high-frequency electricity. It is applied as follows:—Two wires lead from the generator to two metal plates (electrodes). These are placed on each side of the part to be operated upon, and the flow of blood in the region between the two electrodes is stopped.

All blood and tissue contain a very large proportion of albumen—a substance similar to the white of egg—and this the current coagulates, so that the flow of the blood is arrested.

A LADY STRIKE AGITATOR

One of the most remarkable women in Europe is Mme. Borgue, a Frenchwoman of independent means, who, during the last ten years, has taken part in some fifty strikes. She has assisted in strike agitations all over Europe purely for the love of the thing. Many times she has been arrested, and at Milan she was put in a cage for trial at the assizes. The Public Prosecutor demanded that she should be sent to solitary confinement for five years, but public agitation against this terrible sentence, which usually drove prisoners to madness or suicide, was so strong that Mme. Borgue escaped with two months' imprisonment. She is regarded as a comrade by millions of workers throughout Europe, and her influence is such that England, according to her own confession, is the only country she has visited where she has not been followed by the police.

"OUT AND COME AGAIN"

Amongst the amusing stories told by Mr. Jessop, who made such a good right with Stevenson for the billiard championship, is one concerning a notice which he saw displayed in the billiard-room of an hotel in Cyprus when he was making a tour of the world. The notice read as follows: "Gentlemen getting their game will pay for first out, 10s (cents); second out, 5s (cents); third out, 2s (cents); any subsequent out, 1s (penny)." "Following from the experience of the cloth," says Mr. Jessop, "I should think that table must have been a veritable gold-mine to its proprietors, if he collected all the fines. Evidently the notice was 'Out and come again!'"

EXPLORING NEW GUINEA

Dr. Eric Marshall Meets With Tremendous Difficulties by Mountains, Jungles and Rivers

A thrilling story is told in letters to London from New Guinea dated July 25th, of the journey made by Dr. Eric Marshall, who started off without any European companion from the camp of the British New Guinea expedition at Tipue to discover a route to the Snow Mountains. After a trying trip of nearly three weeks, in which his carriers deserted, Dr. Marshall succeeded in finding his way back to camp.

The young explorer (who was a member of the Shackleton South Polar expedition) left the camp at Tipue on June 18th, accompanied only by three Gurkhas and with twelve native carriers, to find a road to the mountains, which were the objective of the expedition.

He turned eastward, and after wading knee-deep for two miles, struck the Watalkwa, the largest river he had then seen. Shortly afterwards he came on mountains which rose sheer from the river for some hundreds of feet and made progress with loads almost impossible.

Leaving two of his three Gurkhas in camp, Dr. Marshall then started with one Gurkha and five natives and attempted to advance over a hill 1,500 feet high, covered with dense jungle and dead and fallen trees.

"Pullman (the Gurkha) and I," says Dr. Marshall, "went ahead cutting a path, which the grumbling natives evinced every desire to desert, but were afraid to do so. It was a very stiff climb, but about half way up I obtained a good view of the sea and coast—the first for six months. It was good to get a glimpse of the horizon again after six months' imprisonment in this deadly jungle. It now began to pour as it only can in this country, and we had to find a spot where we could descend by means of tree trunks, and six hours after the start, sliding and stumbling, again struck the river."

On the following morning Dr. Marshall again started off with two natives to see what lay ahead, and, alternately wading and cutting through the jungle, ascended the valley for two miles. The natives were very loth to proceed, declaring that this was the country of "the little men." On this march the explorer was saved from being precipitated into the deep and rapid torrent by a native, who snatched him out of danger just as he was being swept off his feet.

On the following [illegible] miles up the mountains and seven days from camp, he was deserted. "Here I am absolutely alone," writes Dr. Marshall, "the first white man to penetrate this district. My natives have deserted, and I have sent my one Gurkha back to the last camp while I remain on guard. All the available food is four pounds of rice and two teaspoonfuls of tea, and I have given the Gurkha my gun, retaining only my pistol."

Later the two Gurkhas from the previous camp arrived and informed Dr. Marshall that all the natives had deserted. Continuing, Dr. Marshall says:

"We are now faced with the difficulty of transporting our baggage, but the two Gurkhas and myself must make it into three loads and carry it down to the next camp, and from thence by relay work to the canoe, if the natives have not taken it.

"We reached the lower camp after five hours march, and, of course, have been no signs of the natives, who have gone for good. We are now faced with getting everything down to the canoe camp, and there are at least five heavy loads.

"Unfortunately, while cutting a way through the jungle to-day I slashed my knee open for one and a half inches down to the bone, and this rather handicaps me over the rough ground."

On the following day, Dr. Marshall, finding that the natives in order to cut off his retreat had taken away his canoe, arranged to build a raft with which to negotiate the narrow rapids, but meanwhile the river was rising at the rate of eighteen inches an hour, and the torrent was rushing down within a foot of the top of the banks. "In a space of two minutes," continues Dr. Marshall, "the river rose to the top of the highest part of the bank, coming down in a great wall, and nearly twenty miles an hour; trees torn up by the roots flew past, and the great waves carried everything before them."

Finding it impossible to proceed by means of a raft, Dr. Marshall hid his stores in the jungle, and, with a load weighing fifty to sixty pounds, started to return to camp, his Gurkhas each carrying about the same weight. The day's march was a terrible one; every inch of the road had to be cut through jungle, and, after a journey of eight hours, with three brief halts, camp was pitched. The following day's experience was equally trying, but on July 27th some of the deserters returned with the missing canoe, and Dr. Marshall resumed his journey, and finally returned to Tipue, where he found Captain Rawling.

POPE'S IRISH OPTICIAN

A Dublin Specialist is Honored by His Holiness Pius X.

The fact that the Pope's eyesight continues good for a man of his years rather discounts the reports about his ill-health. Pius X. can do very well without glasses except when reading. That is sometimes spectacular, and when the aged prelate settles he takes use of the services of a Dublin specialist, who last year went to Rome for the purpose. They are on excellent terms, it seems. The Pope gave the optician a gold medal having on one side a likeness of himself and on the other a representation of the Vatican Art Gallery, and accepted from him a pectoral [illegible] cross in Irish silver.

MANUEL TO LIVE IN THE OPEN AIR

The Ex-King's Health is Said to Have Been Shattered by Recent Exciting Incidents

If ever there was a happy woman, comparatively speaking, it is the Queen mother of Portugal, who, with her Son, Manuel, escaped from Lisbon with their lives when that city was seized by the revolutionists. The agony and terror in which this poor woman has lived for more than two years is beyond description, according to one of her ladies-in-waiting who has just arrived in Paris from London. The life of the fallen queen has been one of long suffering, for she realized only too well the hopelessness of the situation so far as the permanency of the Portuguese monarchy was concerned. She tried in vain to stem the current of reckless extravagance, as friends in Paris in whom she confided, well know. Then three years ago, came the horror of witnessing the assassination of her husband and eldest son, while being able to save the life of her youngest son only by her personal intervention. What she has gone through no human being can conceive, nor realize, and it is a great relief to know that at last the strain is over and that she can rest peacefully at the country residence of the Duc d'Orleans. She is soon to make a protracted visit to France, where the Orleans family still possess a magnificent chateau. It is said in Paris that it has been definitely settled that the deposed king, Manuel, will live much in the open air for many months, for, as a result of a not altogether quiet life, his health is far from good, while his nerves have been shattered as a result of the events of the last few weeks. Steps will be taken to hinder any attempt on his part to renew his friendship with the French actress, Gaby Deslys, with whom he was greatly taken, and who has improved the opportunity of the loss of his throne to bring public attention to the fact that she was one of her admirers.

CALL ME "BERTIE"

Sir Herbert Tree has a keen sense of humor. The following story serves to illustrate this. Leaving the Carlton Hotel one evening for his adjoining theatre, he was considerably surprised to feel himself clapped on the shoulder by a young man he did not recollect ever having seen before, and greeted by the youthful stranger (possibly a chance acquaintance from the hotel) with "Hallos, Harry!" Turning a weak and retiring eye upon the clumsy disturber of his meditations, Tree quietly remarked, "My name isn't Harry—it's Herbert. But you may call me 'Bertie'!"

MISADVENTURES OF WELLMAN

The exciting finish to Mr. Wellman's attempt to cross the Atlantic in a dirigible adds one more to his list of startling experiences. Sixteen years ago he fitted out a ship for Polar work, which was crushed in the ice off Spitsbergen. Then he tried again, and this time fell into a crevice and suffered severe injury to one of his legs. Twice he has tried to reach the Pole by airship, but in the first place was driven back by storms, and in the second his airship was wrecked in its shed before he made a start.

AEROPLANES FOR AFRICA

According to the Paris "Journal," M. Merlaud-Ponty, Governor-General of French West Africa, has decided to include in the estimates of the colony a credit of $20,000 for the establishment of an aeroplane service.

ELEPHANT SAVES A THOUSAND LIVES

It Takes Pilgrims from a Submerged Island to a Place of Safety—A Story from India

How an elephant saved a thousand lives is told in the "Pioneer" by its Agra correspondent, who mentions the wild rumors afloat about the disaster at the bathing festivities at Sorong, in the Agra division, and continues:—

Thousands of pilgrims had camped on a strip of land which had never before been flooded within the memory of the oldest residents.

There was a sudden rise in the tide of the Ganges, and the pilgrims were stranded on the spot where they were encamped, which had now become an island surrounded with deep water. The pilgrims who had the presence of mind to link arms and, resist one another's attempts to reach terra firma, fell into the deeper stream and were lost.

Rescue parties, headed by the Deputy collector of the locality and the police, arrived on the scene as soon as possible, and with the aid of boats and an elephant rescued the stranded pilgrims. The work done by the elephant, named Jung Bahadur, was wonderful.

Jung Bahadur belongs to a rais named Joer Jaswant Singh, who was on a visit to the fair, and his presence was providential. With ropes attached to his trappings, the elephant repeatedly swam out to the distressed pilgrims, who would cling on to the ropes and be landed in safe places. It is estimated that this noble animal saved at least one thousand lives.

The number drowned is put down at about two hundred, but as the pilgrims had thronged from all parts of India it is impossible to say how many were really drowned.

STATE LOSES FORTUNE

Relatives Obtain Possession of a Legacy Refused by Archbishop of Paris

A curious case has just been decided by the Civil Court of the Seine (Paris), which has pronounced against the State and in favor of two natural heirs. Just two years ago the Vicomtesse de Rainneville, who was of Russian origin, died, leaving the Archbishop of Paris sole legatee of her fortune, amounting to a million francs. The Archbishop having refused to accept the fortune, and the lady's natural heirs having been disinherited by her will, it fell in the ordinary course of things to the State, and, pending the final arrangements, a curator was appointed.

Such was the situation when the sister and nephew of the deceased came forward to claim the property. Their counsel argued that Madame de Rainneville having remained Russian at heart, and strongly disapproving of the policy of the Republic, it was preposterous that her money should go to the State. On the other hand, a learned barrister, on behalf of the curator, maintained that as the deceased lady had deliberately disinherited her relatives they had no right whatever to claim any advantage from the fact that the million francs had been declined by Mgr. Amette, to whom that sum had been bequeathed. The Court, however, has pronounced in favor of the two natural heirs. The Dame de Rainneville entertained the most violent aversion for the French Government and for most of the statesmen who were in office during the last years of her life, and in most of her letters submitted to the Court she expressed herself relative to the French Government and its members in the most violent terms.

DEAD AT MADRID

Is the Last Descendant of Christopher Columbus

The Duke of Veragua, the last descendant of Christopher Columbus, has died at Madrid, after a long illness, aged 72. He was formerly Minister of Public Works, and also held the post of Minister of Marine. He went to America in 1892 as the official representative of Spain at the celebrations in commemoration of the discovery of the country by his illustrious ancestor.

HONOR DELAYED

After Forty Years English Soldier Receives Medal

Pte. Parnell, who was discharged from the Rifle Brigade, Midland, in 1880, after 21 years' service, was entitled to a medal with two clasps for the Fenian raids of 1864 and 1870, but for some reason he never received it. Now, after an interval of 40 years, he has received it through the intervention of Mrs. Walter Balmond, honorary secretary of the Derbyshire branch of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Help Society. Parnell, who is 71, is blind, and an inmate of Derby Workhouse Infirmary, where the medal has been formally presented to him.

There is fear of a street railway strike at Winnipeg, as the board of arbitration has ruled that the company was justified in dismissing men found drinking while wearing their uniforms.

John Jeffrey of Carberry, Man., was running the truck to reach his depot, when he was killed by an engine. He was a brother of Hon. Robert Jaffrey of Toronto. Deceased had lived in Carberry for ten years.

Victoria Hall, Bowmanville's municipal building, was the scene of a destructive explosion Sunday night, which damaged it to the extent of $300. Town Clerk George H. Dempsey escaped with a shaking up.

Valentine Devine, aged 19, of Lansdowne, Ont., who had been living for some time with Wm. Baker, an inspector for the Western Union Telegraph Co., was shot and killed by Baker yesterday at Detroit, after which he committed suicide. Jealousy was the cause.

Strikes with Guns.

Montreal, Dec. 13.—When Uncle Harry Pulleyne returned from play yesterday afternoon to his home in Maisonneuve, he was unable to get inside the house, owing to the presence of his brother Hart, aged 5, and nearly by the unconscious figure of his mother, with a terrible gash in her throat. It is supposed that Mrs. Pulleyne cut her child's throat and then attempted to commit suicide. A razor, smeared with blood, was found under a sofa.

Mrs. Pulleyne was conveyed to the City Hospital, and it was announced that no examination had been made of the wound by the doctors, that her chances is exceedingly and very slim, as the windpipe has been punctured. Mrs. Pulleyne is employed by the Canadian Pottery Co.

Investigation by the neighborhood say that she was around during the day, acting in a perfectly rational manner, while her husband is unable to explain the theory of the police that she must have suddenly had an access of homicidal mania.

At a late hour last night an operation was performed on Mrs. Pulleyne, which extended her chances of recovery, so the doctors say.

Police Reserve Charged.

Winnipeg, Dec. 13.—Criminal proceedings were officially set on foot by Superintendent Constantine Costle in the City Police Court against the Winnipeg Hay Elevator Co., Ltd., of East William.

Information charges that on Dec. 11, the Thunder Bay Elevator Co. "did unlawfully render an untrue and incorrect statement to the warehouse commissioner of the quantities of 1, 2 and 3 Northern and No. 4 grades of wheat commercially in store in the elevators for the week ending Dec. 10, 1910, which elevator having been destroyed by a terrible fire, and the said company having thereafter made the complainant so furnish said statements." Summonses were issued and a hearing set for to-morrow before Chas. J. H. Daly, but it is understood it will then be further adjourned.

Mayor Bartleman.

Shelburne, P.E.I., Dec. 13.—Official Commissioner, convicted of the assassination of W. J. Sharp as Alberton, P.E.I., on the 1st inst., by a jury after a trial lasting [illegible] days, was sentenced to be hanged on March 31st next. The prisoner, who is a native of Tignish, for [illegible] years was a railway station agent there, and was married to a daughter of Senator [illegible], for [illegible] years member of the Legislature for Prince county. Goderich Druggist Charged With Criminal Negligence — Tartic Emetic Sold for Rochelle Salts

A DEATH RESULTED

Special to The Examiner:

GODERICH, DEC. 13.—This afternoon J. Garnet Armstrong, a prominent and respected druggist here, will appear before Judge Doyle and the sessions of the Grand Jury at Toronto on a serious charge of criminal negligence, following the death last August of Miss Margaret Murray, of Detroit, after drinking tartar emetic wrongly dispensed for Rochelle salts at Armstrong's store.

St. Peter's T.A.S. Won The Debate At Belleville

St. Peter's T. A. S. held their return debate with the Belleville T. A. S. last night at Belleville

The local representatives were J. W. Fewer and James Dorris. The Belleville men were Messrs. Lally and Maylea, the latter being the orator of the evening.

The Peterborough representatives won by one point in the enthusiastic argument, the subject being: Resolved that a college education does not pay the average young man.

The Peterborough men took the affirmative.

Mr. Buttler of Belleville was the judge. The debate was held in St. Michael's Academy, Belleville, and the hall was well filled by an enthusiastic audience. St. Peter's T. A. S. representatives came home well pleased with the enjoyable time they spent and the excellent manner in which they were treated. A splendid talented musical programme also brightened the event of the evening, and the local men are looking forward to the time when they will have another opportunity of meeting the Belleville men.

How to Destroy the Dandruff Germ

By a Specialist

That the dandruff germ is responsible for nearly all the diseases to which the scalp is heir, as well as for baldness and premature gray hair, is a well known fact, but when we realize that it is also indirectly responsible for thirty of the worst cases of catarrh and consumption, we appreciate the importance of any agent that will destroy its power. We are, therefore, particularly pleased to give herewith the prescription which an eminent scientist and specialist states he has found after repeated tests, to completely destroy the dandruff germ in from one to three applications. This prescription can be made up at home, or any druggist will put it up for you: [illegible] Lavona de Composee, two drachms; Glycerine, [illegible] Crystals, [illegible] Bay Rum, enough to make one ounce. Apply a little of this mixture into the scalp with the finger tips, rubbing it in well. In from one to three applications, you will find that every particle of dandruff will disappear, and with it every sign of itching scalp. Lavona de Composee can be obtained from any druggist. Crystals, [illegible] Bay Rum and other ingredients can be had at any drug store. Apply a little of this mixture into the scalp with the finger tips, rubbing it in well. In from one to three applications, you will find that every particle of dandruff will disappear, and with it every sign of itching scalp. adt38

GRAND JURY'S DUTIES AT DECEMBER SITTINGS ARE COMPARATIVELY LIGHT---COURT OPENED TO-DAY

Only Criminal Case is That of Apsley Man, Charged With Burning Down His Neighbour's Barns in Month of June Last---His Honour's Address to the Grand Jury.

The December Sessions of the County Court opened before His Honour Judge Huycke this afternoon at 1 o'clock. There are only three cases, one criminal and two civil actions. The members of the bar present were Crown Attorney R. E. Wood. Messrs. W. H. Moore, K.C., E. L. Goodwill, O. A. Langley, Lakefield, and G. N. Gordon. After the opening of the Court, the Grand Jurors were called, as follows: Duncan Drummond (foreman); C. M. Blewett, C. Curtis, J. Clancy, G. Shield, E. B. Clegg, H. B. Collier, F. Dean, R. J. Beck, T. G. Milburn, David A. Lewis, Nelson Redpath, and Fred Ellison.

His Honour Judge Huycke, in addressing the Grand Jury, stated that while there were many opinions as to the usefulness of the Grand Jury, personally, he thought it was a very beneficent institution. The one criminal case with which they had to deal was that of a man charged with arson. A resident of Apsley was alleged to have burned down the barn of his neighbour in June last. It was the duty of the Grand Jury, his Honour explained, to find a true bill or not find one, as the case might be, according to the evidence. It was also their privilege to visit public institutions receiving government grants, and report as to their findings.

The Grand Jury then retired and the case of W. R. Morris versus Frost and Wood, to recover an account, was proceeded with.

"A Treat For The Eye And The Ear" Is "A Bridal Trip" At The "Grand" To-morrow

"A treat for the eye and the ear," is the way the European comic opera, "A Bridal Trip" in which Miss Grace Van Studdiford will appear at the Grand to-morrow (Wednesday) evening could be announced. Manager Daniel V. Arthur evidently gave carte blanch to the scenic artists and costumers, for he has obtained some bewilderingly beautiful results in both scenes of the opera which are laid on one of the quays at Constantinople and before the palace of a Turkish prince. Miss Van Studdiford and a splendid company of singing principals and chorus supply the treat for the ear by their inspirited rendition and chorus of the numbers of R. Planquette, the famous composer of "The Chimes of Normandy," who wrote the score of this new comic opera. The book and lyrics were Americanized by Harry B. and Robert B. Smith.

Spacious New Grillroom Opened At Coleman's Store

If you are too busy to get home to your dinner and you must stay down town, you can do no better than to drop into Coleman's Grillroom, which has recently been opened to the public. Messrs. Coleman have fitted up a large and spacious room over their confectionery store and it is an ideal place for the business man to drop in for his mid-day meal, or, in fact, for any meal. The new quarters have been completely renovated and present a very attractive appearance. The menu is an extensive one and embraces all the choice viands and delicacies that appease the appetite of a hungry man. It is needless to say that it is up to the usual high standard of excellence that goes with all dinners and suppers, prepared by Messrs. Coleman. The new grill room will be open both day and night, and the very best service is assured its patrons.

VISIT OF "BILLY" TO THE "GRAND" IS CANCELLED

The many people who were looking forward to seeing Sidney Drew in the funny farce "Billy," at the Grand to-night, will be sorry to learn that the engagement has been cancelled for the present, and the attraction will not be seen here to-night. The non-appearance of the company is due to the fact that one of the leading members of the company appearing at the Majestic Theatre in Boston, owned by the Shuberts, is ill and the company had to be taken off while the "Billy" company has been called in to fill the Boston engagement. As a result the Canadian tour had to be postponed until January.

Heavy Fines Inflicted For Selling Liquor

Heavy fines were imposed on several people in Midland last week as a result of a visit of Mr. J. A. Aycarst, provincial license inspector. Midland is local option and liquor can be only sold there. James McGregor, proprietor of the Gladstone House, was fined $100 and costs for selling liquor for sale, and four bottles of beer, bottles of whisky, [illegible] at [illegible] were [illegible]. A similar fine was imposed on Thomas Lamb, proprietor of the American House. Alfred Northam, of the Victory House, also Midland hotel, was fined $100 and costs.

Alfred Howard, the proprietor of the Royal Exchange, was found guilty on a charge of selling liquor to customers [illegible] to the hotel [illegible] hour, and on the prosecution asking for a second offence, he was remanded for a week in order that more evidence may be procured. His bartender, Sylvester Loving was fined $100 and costs and Ling Lee, proprietor of a restaurant was fined the same amount.

CASE ADJOURNED

Harvey Ellis and his wife appeared before Magistrate Edmison yesterday charged with bigamy. They were arrested last week by County Magistrate Edmison and lodged in gaol. Their home was in the Township of Belmont. Crown Attorney Wood was not ready to go on with the case and it was adjourned until Monday, next at the town hall, Havelock. Mr. F. D. Beer is appearing for the accused.

"WAIT FOR REDMOND"

LONDON, DEC. 13—Balfour's threat last night that when the Conservatives regained power they would restore the veto powers of the House of Lords notwithstanding, is laughed at by the Liberal newspapers this morning and compared sarcastically with the bravado of small boy who has lost his marbles. The London Times, the old stand of the Tories, still defiantly calls attention to the fact that one only of the four parties in Asquith's coalition is represented on the cabinet or under the control of the Liberal whips. The Times repeats the former slogan, "wait and see what Redmond will do."

Plot To Free The Prisoners By Poisoning Gaolers

Examiner Special.

ST. PETERSBURG, DEC. 13.—Revelations of a revolutionary plot to free all political prisoners in Russia by means of the wholesale poisoning of jailers were made by the government to-day.

It was officially announced that the stories of prison cruelty throughout Russia, alleged to have resulted in numerous suicides, are inventions of the Revolutionists to aid their work of raising funds to be used in the jail delivery.

It is admitted by the authorities, however, that they ordered the punishment of a number of prisoners involved in the conspiracy and that several suicides of prisoners followed. One of these reported to have committed suicide was Sagonoff, assassin of the Minister of the Interior Plevve.

PETITIONS CIRCULATED FOR COMMUTING OF DEATH SENTENCE ARE BEING LARGELY SIGNED

Many Peterborough People Sign Petitions to be Presented to His Excellency the Governor-General Asking that James Gorham be Confined in an Institution for the Insane---Reasons are Given.

Petitions are being circulated in Peterborough to be presented to His Excellency the Governor-General, asking that the death sentence passed upon James Gorham be commuted and that he be confined in an institution for the insane. The petitions which are widely signed, read as follows:

To His Excellency, the Governor General in Council.

May it please your Excellency—

Your petitioners humbly present that James Gorham at the Assizes holden at Peterborough in the month of October, 1910, was found guilty of murdering Ann Gorham, his mother.

That on the 8th day of December, 1910, the learned judge who presided at the trial, imposed the sentence of death upon the said James Gorham for the said offence, the execution to be carried into effect on the 31st of January, 1911.

That it is quite evident from the evidence adduced at the trial that the said James Gorham, whatever his intention may have been, did not intend to kill his mother.

That in our opinion the same James Gorham did not appreciate and probably did not know what he was doing, at the time the said offence was committed and that he was not morally responsible for his act.

That in our opinion, the said James Gorham is a defective, and is without a sense of moral responsibility and is mentally unsound, and should be confined in some institution for the insane.

That in our opinion, to carry out the sentence imposed upon the said James Gorham would be a grave miscarriage of justice and would be most shocking to the sense of justice in the community.

We, your petitioners, therefore, humbly pray that the sentence of death be commuted, and that the said James Gorham be detained in some institution for the insane at Your Excellency's pleasure. And we, your petitioners will always pray, etc.

MONSTER DEPUTATION URGES DEEPENING WELLAND CANAL

Special to The Examiner.

OTTAWA, DEC. 13.—Crowded to overflowing this afternoon was the big railway committee room of the House of Commons, when 200 delegates, representing the Council and Boards of Trade of almost every city and town from Port William to Montreal, gathered to impress upon the Government the urgent necessity for the immediate deepening and improvement of the Welland Canal. As various members of the Cabinet arrived they were received, but when the veteran Sir Wilfrid appeared the crowd rose enmasse and cheered. President Gage of the Toronto Board of Trade, was the leading speech maker, and spoke of the competition to which the Welland Canal was being subjected to by the deepened waterways of the United States.

At the conclusion of the interview Sir Wilfrid smilingly told the deputation that in the interests of Canada the Welland canal must be deepened, and Georgian Bay Canal built. These works, however, would cost two hundred millions, which, personally, he would be very glad to have the country borrow for the purpose, but Mr. Fielding the Finance Minister, was more cautious. He would lay the matter before the Cabinet when Mr. Fielding returned.

PRINCIPAL FALCONER BEFORE CANADIAN CLUB

The executive of the Canadian Club wish to remind the members of the address by Principal Falconer of the University of Toronto, at the Hotel National on Thursday evening, which promises to be most interesting and entertaining. ALL FOR OFFICE.

Mr. Balfour, leader of the Tory party in Great Britain defends the reference of Tariff Reform to the direct vote of the people, because it is a great national question — not a class matter. Then why does not he propose reference of Lords reform to a direct vote of the people? As far as the interests of the people and the nation are concerned the reform of the House of Lords is a great national question. It is important that the will of the people as expressed through their representatives should prevail, which it cannot do with the Lords paramount vetoing much legislation that the people desire, but only when it is of Liberal origin. In British constitutional practice there never has been anything more revolutionary than Mr. Balfour's proposal of the referendum. The history of Toryism from Runnymede to the present day has been replete with instances of rather consistent application of Tory antagonism to popular rights and privileges. It reserved all privilege for the privileged classes. Now, when Mr. Balfour wants to win an election, he throws all good old sound Tory principles to the winds and becomes more radical than the Radicals. If Mr. Balfour had included reform of the Lords in his referendum proposal he would have shown that he was not merely trimming his sails, or rather putting his helm about, to win a party advantage, and dock his craft in the coveted harbour of office. Mr. Borden should feel proud that the British Tory leader should follow his example of substituting the law of expediency for constitutional practice.

BOTH SIDES OF THE CASE.

The following from the Farmer's Magazine shows how strong a case can be presented with only one side of the case presented:

The estimates of the Dominion Government for the year ending March 31st, 1911, totaled $105,585,104. Of this large sum only $1,601,675 were voted for the direct use of the farmers. And even of this small amount there had to be deducted $372,675 as salaries of officials and clerks in the departmental offices at Ottawa. This left only $629,000 to be spent in the direct furtherance of agriculture in the Dominion of Canada. That is, there was 66 cents spent per farm!

What about other years? For the year 1909, the sum of $1,778,-299 was spent by the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa. From this we must extract the $370,000 for the actual running of the department. This leaves $1,408,299 for the actual furtherance of agriculture. This is more than was voted for the whole expenditure of the present year. What! Are we retrograding? Just a little comparison.

The Department of Militia and Defence, in 1909, spent $6,378,274 which is almost four times as much as was spent on agriculture. This may be as much for the benefit of the farmers as it is for the other classes of citizens in Canada, but the returns to the country are practically nothing. What returns are made to the people of Canada for this investment? True we are proud of the position our soldiers occupy in the army of the Empire, but if it is necessary that we expend so much money in the maintaining of our army, we should spend equally as much for the benefit of the farmers, who are doing the pioneer work in opening up the Dominion. Canada is worth the $6,378,274 which was spent for her defence during 1909. Then, surely her agriculture is worth developing at a little faster rate than $1,778,299 every year.

These figures may be technically correct, but do they represent all that government does in the interest of the farmers? There is no denying that the farming interests is far and away the most important interest in the country, and worthy of the splendid assistance it receives at the hands of the government. But there is a distinct limit to what governments can do for the farmer. This year's estimates contain a sum of $2,225,000 to be voted for the work of the Agriculture and Arts Department. This is to be expended largely in disseminating information in regard to improved methods—in helping the farmer to help himself—that is all any government can do. The real work rests with the farmer himself. He must till the soil and grow the crops—the government can only provide conditions and knowledge that will help the farmer to do this to the best advantage. As is proper, in respect of the greatest interest the government does more directly for the farmer than for any other class. The other most important class in numbers and service, is Labour, and in the interests of Labour, this year's estimates contain a sum of only $82,500 for the Department of Labour. But that is not all the Government does for Labour. It provides, through good government, and wise legislation, the conditions that conduce to national prosperity, involving employment of Labour and good wages—it aims to give labour a fair chance, which is all that labour asks. It is impossible to catalogue government expenditure so as to define exactly what direct benefit accrues to any particular interest. General government expenditure is made in the interests of the people as a whole, and in this expenditure the farmers have the largest share, because they are the most numerous. Without transportation, without means of getting his products to market in the most expeditious way, the farmer's work would be in vain. The government of Canada has expended, in providing transportation—railways and canals—actual and projected, something between 400 and 500 million dollars, and this year's estimates contain the huge item of 37 millions for providing transportation, railways, and canals. The farmer has the largest share in the benefits accruing and to accrue, from this expenditure, shared in lesser degree by the whole country. Our system of transportation is what has made Canada. It has, of course, benefitted the whole people, but the farmer most of all, for he gets the directest benefit. When we add the item of $7,500,000 for militia and defence, and that of $6,631,000 for naval service, it does not seem to bear a very close relation to farming, but if permits him, in common with the whole country, to follow his calling in peace and safety. We have a total sea-borne trade of about 800 million dollars a year. Of this the farmers' products form a large share, and its protection is the duty of any government. If we go all through the items of public expenditure we find that, indirectly, they are made in the interests of the farmer, as well as the people at large. It is impossible to spend money directly, in the literal sense, and apart from educational purposes, in the interest of the farmer. If the government were to spend ten millions a year in buying seed, grain, implements, and paying for labour for the farmers, it would be money wasted if millions and millions were not, and had not, been spent to provide protection and transportation, so that the farmer could till his soil in peace and safety—if he could not get his produce to market, in good condition. The whole expenditure of government is made in the interests of the whole people, and the farmer as the largest and most important element, get the largest benefit. We can't do too much for the farmer, for the farmer and his crops are the foundation of and strike the key note of, all national progress and prosperity. Till the farmer raises and markets a bushel of wheat all the wheels of finance and trade are at a standstill.

WHAT THE "WORLD" THINKS.

Mr. Balfour plays golf. Sometimes a golfer gets bunkered—gets his ball and himself where he can't get out. That's where Mr. Balfour has landed in the election now nearly over in England.

Asquith, to our mind, is immeasurably stronger, notwithstanding the able Canadian 'gents' who have gone over from our papers here to cable back their impressions in stilted words and flaming headlines. Asquith, at this writing, and up as far as the votes have been polled, is not only stronger, but he will be able to carry out his policy. Look at what has happened! All his progressive legislation that the lords accepted with grace, or with grimace, has been vindicated—notably the much-abused budget and the old-age pensions. Lloyd-George has filled the treasury, and he is growing in strength every day, notwithstanding the many that have gone on his trail with scalping knives. They can't get his scalp. But his battle is bloody with thistles. The Liberals grow stronger with Rabbies.

But the opposition have declared that they are willing to reform the lords, to give it but limited powers to give home rule for Ireland to the

PROGRESS OF BRITISH COLUMBIA

(Monetary Times.)

One of the outstanding features of the closing year has been the remarkable development undertaken in British Columbia. Capitalists from many lands have personally investigated the large undeveloped resources there, afterwards placing in the province their own money and that of syndicates represented by them. No particular industry has received exceptional attention. Mineral lands, timber, the fisheries, have all participated. Substantial progress has been made with the construction of railways, and even the present programme of steel-laying in the garden province of Canada insures a future for British Columbia, of which the whole Dominion may feel proud. In the East, folks are apt to say that British Columbia is "far away." But British Columbia does not think so. As the prairie and coast provinces become peopled and transportation facilities link them, so will the ties between east and west be strengthened. That means national development without provincial pettiness.

To date, British Columbia has produced nearly $348,000,000 worth of minerals, including $128,000,000 worth of gold, $109,000,000 worth of coal and coke and $66,000,000 worth of copper. Lode mining has only been in progress for about eighteen years, and not 30 per cent. of the mineral land has been prospected. Unexplored mineral bearing land, with an area of 250 square miles, are open for prospecting. In 1909 the mineral production of the province was valued at $22,600,000. Last year the value was $24,400,000. The attention of capitalists and metallurgists has frequently been called to the opportunities for the profitable establishment of the iron and steel manufacturing industries and to the exceptional facilities which exist on Vancouver Island. Undoubtedly the Dominion and Provincial governments would give favourable consideration to the establishment of such an industry on Vancouver Island. The bounties now available on iron and steel will shortly cease, but British Columbia has not participated in these. Official reports show that the iron deposits in that province are practically the only known occurrences of iron ore in quantity on the northern part, at least, of the Pacific coast. Consequently iron manufactured therefrom would have the whole of such territory as a market.

The timber reserves, next to the great industry of minerals, are probably the most readily available, if not the most important of the British Columbia's natural resources. The total forest area of Canada is estimated at 1,007,000,000 square acres, exceeding that of the United States and Europe combined. Of this, British Columbia has 182,750,000 acres. All of this is not of present commercial value, because the loggers are now choosing only the largest and best trees, for instance, as fir, sometimes reaching a height of 300 feet with a base circumference of 30 to 50 feet. An idea of the importance of this industry can be gathered from the fact that 207 saw mills are operating in our progressive coast province, with a daily capacity of 4,500,000 feet. The output of lumber in 1904 was 425,000,000 feet, which increased last year to 775,000,000 feet. Approximately $100,000,000 of capital is invested in British Columbia lumbering industries. Closely allied in the manufacture of pulp and paper, as a field for which British Columbia is possibly unrivalled. The pulp wood borders the ocean or the numerous rivers and streams, thus furnishing easy and cheap communication with deep water harbours. The pulp and paper mills of eastern Canada have markets in the eastern States and Europe, but British Columbia hopes one day to control the rapidly developing markets of Asia and Australia.

The fruit industry, too, is attaining world-wide fame. As Earl Grey once said: "Rich as we are, the separate streams of wealth which flow from your minerals, your lumber and fisheries, their joint and mighty volume will be inferior to that stream of national wealth of domestic contentment which is one day destined to grow from out of the orchards of British Columbia."

Sir George Doughty, one of the numerous British capitalists who visited Canada this year, was much impressed with the fisheries along the coast of the province. The fisheries have been neglected probably because of the fertility of the soil, the wealth of the mines, and the quality and quantity of the timber. This year British capital has been placed in British Columbia's fishing industry, and the next decade will see considerable activity in this direction. The actual mainland shore line exceeds 7,000 miles. Until recently, commercial fishing has been practically confined to the taking of salmon, but other fish abound in the British Columbia waters. The estimated agricultural output of the province last year aggregated $8,600,-000. This is encouraging, but there is still much to be desired. The importation of agricultural products to British Columbia, which amounted to $7,000,000 in 1898, rose to $11,000,000 in 1909.

STOLE FOR REVENGE

Remarkable Scene in New York Criminal Court Yesterday Afternoon—Teller Took Away $44,800

SALARY WAS REDUCED

Examiner Special.

NEW YORK, DEC. 9.—One of the remarkable scenes on record in the criminal court took place this afternoon when Walter A. Hall, former paying teller of the Herald Square branch of the Greenwich Bank, appeared before Justice Crain for sentence.

Hall, but already pleaded guilty to the theft of $44,800 from the bank. When he was brought out of the cell he told the judge he wanted to make a complete confession of his crime and read it from a carefully written statement.

"It was revenge alone that inspired me to the crime," he began. According to his story Hall was working for a salary of $1,800 a year, handling from $50,000 to $300,000 a day for the bank. One day, he said, he made a mistake of $800 in his accounts, and the bank, recognizing that the mistake was not criminal, nevertheless reduced his salary to $900 to make up the $800 he had lost.

On a salary of $900 a year Hall said he could not live and care for his wife.

"I thought," he said, "that I was being done a grave injustice, and the more I thought of it, the more I desired revenge. So I finally decided to take all I could get my hands on and decamp. On the day I left there was but $44,800 in the bank. I took it and fled to Canada. There I hung around the Erie, Windsor and Hamilton tracks and dropped $20,-000.

"Then I heard that my wife had given birth to a child, and the wild desire to see my son overcame my desire for revenge. I have come back and want to take my medicine like a man."

Judge Crain was so overcome that he remanded Hall until later in the afternoon for sentence.

POST CARD COLUMN

To the Editor of The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—A good number of factories are now making butter in the district covered by the Peterborough Cheese Board. I would suggest the advisability of establishing a board for the sale of the butter, the same reasons for holding cheese sales would apply to butter also. I am aware there is a large home consumption of butter that there is of cheese. Notwithstanding this, I have been led to believe a very considerable quantity is shipped out of the district. If parties interested would meet for an exchange of views then the course thought best could be adopted.

At the present time there is ample room for extending dairying along the line of a larger make of butter especially in the late fall and winter months.

"ASHTON-KIRK, INVESTIGATOR"

By John T. McIntyre. Copyrighted and All Rights Reserved

"Hume has been under suspicion upon several occasions. But the police could gather no positive evidence against him, either time. The robbery of the Hallesbury gallery at London, when the famous Whistler portrait of the Duchess of Winterton was cut from its frame, was traced almost to his door. But the scent died out before they could clinch the matter, and he escaped. It was believed that the thing was planned by him and executed by a confederate. Several other occurrences of like nature, but of less importance, have been laid against him. But, if he was concerned in them, he was always cunning enough to hide his tracks.

"He is an habitual drinker, of violent temper, and is reputed to have a positive genius for discovering raw spots in an acquaintance and goading him for the sheer joy of seeing him writhe. It is this trait that causes the general dislike for him in the Christie Place section.

"He is a free liver, spends much money and has a passion for music."

Ashton-Kirk laid down the sheets and threw away his cigar.

"As Fuller remarked, Mr. Hume seems to be a colourful character. And apparently one that would be likely to lead Mr. Allan Morris a very lively dance if he had a hold of any sort upon him."

He arose to his feet, a pleased light in his eye, and began walking up and down the floor.

"It is more than likely that it will prove some trifle that Morris' fears have lifted to the plane of a tragedy. But, somehow, the parts of the case seem to fall in a promising manner. I get a sort of pleasure in anticipating a possible grapple with Mr. David Purtell Hume."

For a full hour, Ashton-Kirk moved up and down the library, his eyes half closed, varying expressions appearing and disappearing upon his face. At length there came a smile of satisfaction and he paused in his pacing.

"That is probably it," said he. "At any rate it is a very favourable coincidence. However, I must have more information than the hurried reports of Burgess and Fuller to be certain. Yes, this promises to be interesting."

With that he went to his room and to bed.

The dull gray of a damp spring morning was peering in at his window when he awoke. By the light he knew that it was hours before his usual time. Something had aroused him; but he could not say what. He sat up in bed, and as he did so there came the long continued and smothered ringing of a bell.

"The telephone," said he.

"R-r-r-r-ring!" it persisted. And then again: "R-r-r-r-ring-ing-ing! R-r-ring!"

Ashton-Kirk heard a door open and close softly on the floor above; then slippered feet came pat-patting down the stairs. The wild rattle of the bell suddenly stopped; a muffled voice could be heard protesting dismally against the din. But suddenly the vague complaint gave way to a higher note.

"Alarm," said Ashton-Kirk. "Something has happened."

He reached up and turned on the electric bulb that hung above his head; then he drew his feet up under him after the fashion of a Turk and waited, calmly.

The padded steps swiftly approached his door, a sharp knock succeeded on the panels.

"Well?" demanded the young man.

"[illegible] an urgent call, sir." [illegible] Stumph—" [illegible] lady who called [illegible] from the hall; [illegible] to the door stood [illegible] Stumph," and [illegible] back to bed.

[illegible] Gazette went on [illegible] stop. A strong shudder seemed to run through her; she bent her head so that the light would not fall too strongly upon her face. In a moment however, she recovered.

"Yes, yes," she said, her voice perfectly under control. "He is dead—shockingly murdered. What I mean is, that while the event is very dreadful—still, it does not really concern me more than any other crime of the same nature, which we see staring at us from the columns of the newspapers every day. This man's being in my mind so much of late caused me to become unnerved when I heard the news."

"When did it occur?"

"Sometime since midnight."

There was a silence. Miss Vale arose and began to pace the room. The long, white cloak that had draped her fell away; she wore a ball dress and her arms and shoulders shone splendidly under the lights.

"How did you hear of it?" asked Ashton-Kirk.

There was a scarcely perceptible hesitancy; then she answered:

"Through the newspapers. We were returning from Mrs. Barron's about three o'clock. The papers had just come out, and I felt a curiosity to see them wet from the press. When I reached home the first thing that caught my eye was the account of Hume's death."

"Did you call me up at once?"

"Yes. As I have said, it was the first thing that occurred to me. And again I beg your pardon for having disturbed you unseasonably."

Ashton-Kirk gestured this aside.

"It may be that the affair will turn out to have some interesting features," said he. "And with that possibility in view, I am rather pleased than not in having an opportunity of getting so early upon the ground."

She paused in her pacing, and turned upon him a startled look.

"You do not mean to go there—to Christie Place," she said.

"I may as well. I may be of use." He looked at her for a moment steadily, then asked: "Do you know of any reason why I should not go?"

Instantly the troubled look vanished; a smile lit up the pale face, warmly.

"Of course not," she cried. "You are interested in dramatic happenings—I had forgotten that. I suppose you are really quite delighted; and instead of my crying pardon I should be attending upon you, for putting you in the way of this case."

She laughed nervously; a smile flitted across his keen face, as he rose and said:

"What has happened may make a change in the affairs of Allan Morris."

She came to him and laid a hand upon his arm. Her confusion won his admiration.

"I beg of you to forget all that I told you yesterday," she said. "I had been brooding so long that I had begun to fancy all sorts of impossible things. I feel very clearly now that this man Hume could have had nothing of any consequence to do with Mr. Morris. It was a romance—a father's foolish fancy, and a very wild one."

There was another awkwardness in her manner; and the sudden smile that hovered about her lips. It was as though a return to reason had driven away the fears of the day before—the alarmed girl had given place to a reliable woman.

(To be continued)

DRINK AND SMOKE MORE

American Government Will Examine of Money and Tobacco

WASHINGTON, DEC. 9.—The United States has just passed through a famous year for drinks, smokes and consumption. Here is the nation's record for the eighteen months ended June 30, compared with the previous year, as it figures in the figures of the Internal Revenue Bureau:

[illegible] gallons of distilled spirits, an increase of [illegible] gallons.
[illegible] gallons of fermented liquors, an increase of [illegible] gallons.
[illegible] cigars, increase [illegible].
[illegible] cigarettes, increase [illegible].
[illegible] pounds of snuff, [illegible].
[illegible] pounds of plug, fine cut, cube cut, granulated or sliced smoking or chewing tobacco or snuff, increase [illegible].
[illegible] pounds of cheroots, increase [illegible].

Distilled spirits and other manufactures of assimilable whisky are on the increase, "especially," the bureau says, "where there are State-wide prohibition laws."

Only three years have surpassed 1910 as an internal revenue producer. In 1866, while Civil War taxes were still heavy, receipts amounted to $310,000,000. Following the Spanish War, in 1900 and 1901, they were $295,000,000 and $306,000,000 respectively. But for times of peace and normal prosperity, 1910 heads the roll, with the prospect of being eclipsed by 1911.

NO INDIGESTION OR STOMACH DISORDER

No Gas, Heartburn, Headache or Dyspepsia Five Minutes Later

Why not get some now—this moment, and forever rid yourself of Stomach trouble and indigestion? A disordered stomach gets the Blues and grumbles. Give it a good eat, then take Pape's Diapepsin to start the digestive juices working. There will be no dyspepsia or belching of Gas or eructations of undigested food; no feeling like a lump of lead in the stomach or heartburn, sick headache and Dizziness, and your food will not ferment and poison your breath with nauseous odours.

Pape's Diapepsin costs only 50 cents for a large case at any drug store here, and will relieve the most obstinate case of Indigestion and Upset Stomach in five minutes.

There is nothing else better to take Gas from Stomach and cleanse the stomach and intestines, and, besides, one single dose will digest and prepare for assimilation into the blood all your food the same as a sound, healthy stomach would do it.

When Diapepsin works, your stomach rests—gets itself in order, cleans up—and then you feel like eating when you come to the table, and what you eat will do you good.

Absolute relief from all Stomach Misery is waiting for you as soon as you decide to take a little Diapepsin. Tell your druggist that you want Pape's Diapepsin, because you want to become thoroughly cured this time.

Remember, if your stomach feels out of order and uncomfortable now, you can get rid of it in five minutes.

A splendid rally of the members of the Anglican church in Peterborough was held in St. John's school last night. The Rev. Chas. Carpenter presided, supported by Rev. Canon Davidson, Rev. H. R. Trumpour and Messrs. Davies and Moore, Presidents of the sister branches of the A.Y.P.A. Choice musical numbers were kindly contributed by Mrs. R. J. Deeks, Mrs. Seward, Miss Ruth Dawson, Miss Quartermaine, Messrs. Greenslade, Dudley, Sawers and Cyril Davey, Miss Flowers and Mr. R. J. Davey were the accompanists.

A competition filling up missing letters in words was won by Mrs. Dawson, of All Saints.

Mr. Wadsworth gave a splendid recitation while supper was being served.

The committee of St. Johns are well pleased with the large attendance, which augurs well for the future success of any effort by the combined branches of the A.Y.P.A.

SPLENDID ADDRESSES IN THE NEW KNOX CHURCH CHURCH UNION INTRODUCED

By Some of the Speakers---Pastor and Congregation Receive Many Congratulations Upon the Opening of Their New Building.

The services in connection with the opening of the new Knox church were continued last night when a fowl supper and entertainment were held and proved very successful. A very large crowd was in attendance. The new church in which the concert was held, was filled to its full capacity, even the balcony being crowded. The supper was an excellent one, and the people of Knox church, especially the ladies, are deserving of much praise for arranging such a splendid repast. The supper was served in the lecture hall, after which the people passed into the new church to enjoy the second part of the programme.

Rev. Mr. Keith presided and opened the proceedings by making a few remarks on the events of the evening after which he introduced Rev. Mr Abraham, of Port Hope. Mr. Abraham stated that the message he had for them must be very short. He just wished to congratulate them upon the success of the undertaking which they completed — the building of a splendid new church. He said that the erection of a new church was an evidence of the increase in the commercial circumstances of the city and also an evidence of the progress of the gospel of the Lord.

He said that a message would be sent forth to the uttermost parts of the earth from that congregation. A congregation under the ministration of Mr. Keith must surely progress, and they would see what the erection of the fine new building would mean. The relationship between the church and the presbytery is well understood said the speaker, and that any way the presbytery could further their cause they could count upon their strongest support. Concluding, the speaker said that he just wished to bring to them the best wishes of the presbytery.

A violin solo by Mr. Wm. Wilson was then artistically rendered and drew forth loud applause from the audience.

Hon. J. R. Stratton then addressed the audience. He said that he was honoured as a member for West Peterborough to the Dominion House in receiving an invitation to be present with them, and sincerely congratulated them upon the fine new church they had erected. He also hoped that they would still progress as they had in the past, and expressed his opinion to the effect that if they did not progress it would not be the fault of the minister. Mr. Stratton stated that there were now about twenty churches in the city besides the smaller organizations, and only about thirteen hotels. This, he said, was an evidence of the progress of the gospel here, for a few years ago there were more than twenty hotels and less than thirteen churches. The church and state must work together, and it was his opinion that there was little doubt in this statement, for he explained, one works for the spiritual welfare of the people, while the other works for the material welfare.

The speaker said he did not wish to take up too much of the time, as he knew they were anxious to hear the reverend lecturer (Rev. Mr. Johnston) from Montreal. He, however, wished that the people would do the very best they could in the support of the church. He spoke of the increase in the number of churches south of Charlotte street, there being now five churches, and the money for the sixth was being collected. The advance of the church in Peterborough, said the speaker, showed the energy of the people. He believed that the union of the churches had yet to come, the increase in the church showed this fact. He believed that many years would elapse before the churches would unite. The speaker also expressed his desire to see the churches going on the way they were. He said that twenty small congregations working enthusiastically, could do more good than ten large congregations united. It was true that they were all working for the one great cause, but where there was rivalry they would work harder. Mr. Stratton again congratulated them upon the success which they had attained, and hoped that the Lord's richest blessings would rest upon them and that their greatest efforts would be crowned with a golden success.

Rev. Dr. Johnston was then introduced and spoke at some length to a very enthusiastic audience. He told them that he was going to try and make them happy. He stated that he carried to them his heartiest congratulations on the splendid new structure, and he rejoiced to see the success with which their efforts had met. He also said that they would be counted success under the administration of Rev. Mr. Keith. He told them that he liked the name that they had given their church, 'Knox.' He said he often wondered why Peterborough did not have a Knox church. He saved the British Empire for the Protestantism. The great name Knox should be a leading star for them. The speaker rejoiced that the congregation was in the new church, for a church points heavenward still brings us in contact with God. They were not to be like a seaman, who always kept his eyes on the compass, but they must look around for the sinking schooners. He thought that the churches could come together and get along better, as all the old bitterness had passed away, and a new feeling of friendship had taken its place. He rejoiced not only in the opening of a new Presbyterian church, but in the opening of a church in Canada, where a church has such a glorious chance to flourish. In concluding the speaker said that the young men should assist in the work of the church and to give their service to the great cause that existed on the earth.

Mr. Wm. Wilson rendered another pleasing selection on the violin.

Rev. J. R. Webb was then called on. He said he came to express the well wishes of the Murray street congregation. He then spoke from a financial point of view of the condition of the churches in the city. He said that he thought that some moneyed man ought to get up and say, 'I have lots of money, I am getting old and will not need it; I might as well will it to the church and relieve this congregation of the load they carry. Mr. Webb used this as an illustration of what, in his opinion, was the way every person should act. They should contribute freely to the church. He also told them that they should feel proud in having such a minister as Mr. Keith. A man, he said, who could command a salary of $8,000 a year if he was more interested in the financial part than in the welfare of the people.

Rev. J. G. Brown, pastor of St James' Methodist church, made a short address in which he congratulated the people upon their great success, and told them that they could be assured of the prayers of the congregation of St. James' were with them and that they would assist them through all their difficulties. He again congratulated them upon the fine new edifice they had erected and said that he rejoiced not only in the building of a Presbyterian church in Peterborough, but in the extension of the kingdom of God. He said that he wished that the churches would unite. He thought that they could work together harmoniously and not interfere with each other. He also expressed his pleasure at being present and having the privilege of extending his congratulations.

Rev. Robert Payne, of St. Paul's then briefly addressed the audience. He said that he wished he could be excused from saying anything, but of course he wished it understood that he rejoiced with them. He said that they all rejoiced together in the erection of their fine new church. He concluded by saying that he prayed that God would send his most abundant blessing upon them.

Dr. Malcolm McCullough moved a vote of thanks to Rev. Dr. Johnston. This was duly seconded by Rev. Mr. Keith and then Rev. Dr. Johnston responded in a suitable and appropriate manner.

Rev. Mr. Keith and the members of the congregation are to be congratulated upon the complete success of last evening's proceedings.

LOOKING FOR MISSING BOY

Chief of Police Thompson is in receipt of a letter from the Superintendent of the Mimico Industrial School, dated Dec. 10th, stating that a boy had been sent to a farmer at Norwood and did not get off the train there. He advised the Chief here so that in case he got off at Peterborough, a watch would be kept out for him. It is stated that some C. P. Railway men saw a boy, who may possibly be the missing one, get off a train here. Unfortunately no name, and not even a general description, other than a dim photo of the boy was enclosed with the communication, so that it is hard for the local authorities to trace the boy here. Judging from the picture the boy is about fourteen years of age, with light hair and about five feet high. As yet no clue to the whereabouts of the refugee can be found.

ANNUAL MEETING OF W.F.M.S. OF ST. PAUL'S CHURCH

Held on Friday Afternoon—Officers for the Coming Year Were Elected—Reports Were Read and Adopted.

AN INTERESTING ADDRESS

The 36th annual meeting of St. Paul's Women's Foreign Missionary Society was held on Friday afternoon Dec. 8th. In spite of rather unfavourable weather there was a good attendance. Miss Dickson, the president, occupied the chair. The meeting opened with the usual devotional exercises. The President, in her annual address, spoke of the wide-open doors of opportunity at the present time such as ages have not known before, and as a consequence the growing demand for more consecrated service for the work is great, its needs are urgent.

Mrs. Mitchell of Wei Hwei, Honan, China, addressed the meeting, giving a minute description of the evangelistic and educational work in her field of labour, which was listened to with marked attention. As a result of education the native Christians were enabled to give valuable assistance to the missionaries.

Miss Aleitha Davidson submitted the report of the "Fraser Mission Band," showing an average attendance of 19 and a balance of $[illegible].

The report of the "Faithful Workers' Mission Band" was read by Miss Mary Gibson, and showed an average attendance of 17, and a balance of $44.45.

Following is the Secretary's report of the W. F. M. Auxiliary of St. Paul's Presbyterian church:

In submitting the 36th annual report of this Auxiliary, your officers are pleased to record a prosperous and successful year, and with reverent and grateful hearts we acknowledge the leading of the Divine Hand in sustaining and prospering us throughout another year of service.

Interesting and profitable meetings have been held regularly on the second Friday of the month, with the exception of August. The attendance is very good, but, we to state, is not in proportion to the membership, the average being 36, about the same as last year.

We are pleased to report the addition of one life member.

By arrangement of the Board of our General Society the January meeting was devoted to prayer. When our members meet to ask a blessing on the great mission needs of our church, with its increasing responsibilities, both at home and abroad, reports of the annual meeting of our General Society, held in Knox Church, Toronto, were given by Miss M. Dickson and Mrs. Mowat, at our May meeting, and at our June meeting Mrs. Carmichael and Mrs. R. H. Hall submitted reports of the Presbyterial meeting held at Norwood.

The Society lost June accepted, with much regret, the resignation of Mrs. McLean, our beloved Secretary for the past two and a half years, and desires to express its appreciation of her faithful and efficient services.

During the winter a bale of warm clothing was sent to Ethilbert, Manitoba, and later in the year, another bale, valued at $[illegible], containing clothing for a boy 15 years of age and other supplies for the Boarding School, were sent to Mistawasis.

The systematic study of the Gospel in Latin Lands has been faithfully pursued throughout the year, two ladies having charge of the programme each month. The many excellent papers prepared on the prescribed subjects have given a great amount of pleasure and profit to the members of the Auxiliary. This Text Book does not include our foreign fields, as we have no missions in Latin lands, but it touches on many subjects of vital and historic interest, including South America, our sister continent, of whose need and darkness we are sadly unfamiliar. The annual thank-offering meeting was held in October, and was addressed by the Rev. D. J. Davidson of Dhar, Central India, who gave a graphic account of his work. The contribution was $[illegible], the largest in the history of the Society.

Mrs. Shapleigh of the China Inland Mission, addressed our November meeting. Coming in contact with our workers in the foreign field from time to time, and hearing the story of the sad and discouraging features of their work, as well as the bright side, is a great privilege, and serves to arouse fresh interest and stimulate us to renewed effort. We again subscribed for the "Interior," which is sent to our missionaries in India, also "The Missionary Review," which is for the use of the members of the Auxiliary. We again draw your attention to the necessity of each member being a subscriber to the "Foreign Missionary Tidings" our official magazine, in order to have a fuller knowledge regarding our missionaries, also a better appreciation of how our own work is carried on.

It is with sincere regret we record the removal by death, of two of our esteemed members, Mrs. Coyle Brown and Miss Elizabeth Gow, who served in our Society; Miss Gow, by her will, donated $100 to this Auxiliary, this being the second bequest from a member of this family. We desire to record our deep appreciation of these gifts, and the spirit which prompted them.

These vacancies in our ranks should solemnly impress our minds, not only with the importance of the work, but with the undoubted value of time and help us to use the golden opportunities at hand for "The Night Cometh When no Man Can Work."

In reviewing the year's work, we the progress made, but there is a note of regret that calls for earnest consideration, viz., that growth in our membership is practically at a standstill, and that so many of the women of the congregation have not yet identified themselves with this work. To Christian women no appeal for help can come with stronger claim than that of our heathen sisters, whose spiritual needs can only be ministered to by women.

May we realize our responsibilities and faithfully meet the obligations we have assumed, always keeping in mind God's great promises concerning prayer, and enter another year with fresh zeal and renewed courage in this great work of winning "The World for Christ."

SAVE THE HAIR

Newbro's Herpicide Will Do It.

No woman should have poor, thin, scraggy hair, and no man need become bald. Poor hair and final baldness are due to the dandruff germ.

Newbro's Herpicide will destroy this little germ and stop the hair from falling. Further evidence of this is found in a letter from Mrs. F. Nelsen, of Tomah, Wis. She says: "I fought the worst kind of dandruff for nine years. I have been using Herpicide now one week, and my scalp is healthy, the dandruff has gone and the itching has stopped. It is the best remedy for scalp diseases I ever saw, and I have seen many."

Don't subject yourself to disappointment and expense by accepting something claimed to be "just as good" as Newbro's Herpicide. These so brands may possibly do good, but why take chances? The genuine and original dandruff germ destroyer can always be obtained. If your druggist has nothing but "just as good" articles, go to McDermid and Jury, who will furnish you with Newbro's Herpicide and guarantee one dollar size bottles. It stops itching of the scalp almost instantly.

Send 10c. in postage or silver for sample and booklet to The Herpicide Co., Dept. R., Detroit, Mich.

An Impartial Criticism Of The Belmont Minstrels By Old Timer

Up goes the curtain. Crash, boom! goes the orchestra, and the Belmont Minstrels are off for a good start, to the tuneful melody of Sunbeam, followed in rapid succession by other tuneful ballads and catchy, tantalising airs.

Everybody on the street.

Will have a tickling in the feet on the day after they have heard the Belmont Minstrels oodge in the first part. Keen repartee and bright humour convulses the cast with stories, and the only time to snapped out and brought to a climax between interlocuter and end men, will be a revelation in amateur minstrelsy to the citizens of Peterborough. No bones. No tambos to jar the sensitive one. Everything refined, handsome costumes in keeping with refinement, enhanced by the appearance of two of Peterborough's popular young ladies, who both sing in an artistic manner in the first part, something never before seen in a minstrel show in this city.

The writer timed the first part in rehearsal, and it took exactly 55 minutes from start to finish, and not an error recorded. Everybody on their toes all the time, bright, snappy, entertaining, refreshing, and—but, "look who's here!" Christmas Holly Shepard and his charming wife. It's a pleasure and entertainment to watch Mr. Shepard's training methods, unfailing courtesy and "Quaker Oats smile."

The dancing act is a graceful movement by eight young men to the entrancing melody of the "Moon Song." A dainty number in every respect.

Holly Shepard and Geo. Clark's turn a dancing, singing monologue is a hummer. Clark is a wonder. He and Shepard run a dead heat for honours.

Look out for Geo. Wesley and the Cops in the next act. Your attention will be "arrested" by the husky policemen and their funny antics headed by the inimitable George.

Walter Davidson's new "aeroplane" monologue scintillates with bright humour, keen witticisms, local hits, and is a decidedly clever satirical oration. Don't miss "a trip up in the air" with Walter. One hundred laughs in seven minutes.

The entire assembly in the finale, in that stirring march song, "It's great to be a soldier man," headed by that sterling singer, W. Mellroy, is a rousing crescendo number, after which the national anthem is sung in a manner that will appeal to all patriotic citizens.

"In a nutshell." You will be sorry if you don't see the Belmont Minstrels. Mr. Shepard is the best minstrel-making man I ever saw in action, and under his energetic instruction and training, he has brought out the hidden talent of the Belmont boys, which is "good to look upon."

Another Attack Is Made Upon The German Carp

A short time ago a writer in the Examiner contributed a very interesting article on the invasion of the Trent Canal waters by the German carp, and made a somewhat vigorous attack upon that particular member of the finny tribe. The article in question was received with much interest by anglers here and generally. A few days later another Examiner contributor, under the nom de plume of "A Disciple of Isaak Walton," came to the rescue with a letter in defence of the maligned fish and other writers in other papers also spoke to the same purpose. The Fishing Editor of the Toronto Star Weekly, however, takes exception to anything in defence of the carp and before quoting "A Disciple of Isaak Walton," he gives his own opinion, thusly:

"Is the German carp, which has put in an appearance in Lake Ontario, Lake Erie, Lake Huron, and pretty well over all the inland waters of the Province that can be reached by an inventing fish—is he any good? Is he as bad as he is painted? Is he coming to destroy our game fish, or is he coming to fill their place when they have gone, so that we shall not be fishless? Now despised, will he some day be prized as he is at home?

An angler in Peterborough has risen in defence of the carp. Over the signature "A Disciple of Isaac Walton," he has written a letter to the Examiner in which he defends the carp from its traducers. The Fishing Editor of The Star Weekly confesses that he shares the popular prejudice against the carp. We do not like him for his looks. We do not like his sucker mouth, nor his coarse scales. So like those of the dogfish. We suspect him of dishonesty in his business methods; he is too prosperous multiplies wherever he goes, and, although without teeth with which to fight his way by the use of valor, yet he seems to dispossess the native fish of his good hunting grounds. We fear he makes war ignobly, and we incline an ear to those who accuse the carp of sucking up the egg deposits of game fish when deposited on the spawning beds, and by his rooting about so muddies the water and disturbs the game hunting of the gentlemanly bass that the latter fish quits the neighbourhood in disgust. This much seems clear, the carp eats the fat roots of the wild rice, and causes the crop to diminish, which duck hunters, as well as anglers, regret. It is evident, too, that the carp is not fastidious, for he will flourish in the dirtiest water.

CHRISTMAS

This happy day, whose risen sun
Shall set not through eternity,
This holy day, when Christ, the Lord,
Took on Him our humanity.

Pay little children everywhere
A joyous welcome still we make;
We bring our precious gifts to them,
Even for the dear child Jesus' sake.

Thou blessed babe of Bethlehem!
Whose life we love, whose name we laud;
Thou Brother through whose poverty
We have become the heirs of God.

We do remember how, by Thee,
The sick were healed, the halting led;
How Thou didst take the little ones
And pour Thy blessings on their head.

And Lord, if to the sick and poor,
We go with generous hearts to-day,
Or in forbidden places seek
For such as wander from the way.

Wilt Thou not, for Thy wondrous grace,
And for Thy tender charity,
Accept the good we do to these
As we had done it unto Thee?

If any act that we can do,
If any thought of ours is right,
If any prayer we lift to Thee,
May find acceptance in Thy sight,

Hear us, and give to us to-day,
In answer to our earnest cries,
Some portion of that sacred love,
That drew Thee to us from the skies!

Boy Broker's Effects Sold.

Boston, Dec. 13.—More than 40 men and women yesterday thronged the showrooms of a Roxbury storage warehouse to attend the auction sale of the personal effects of Robert H. Davis, the "Boy broker," who recently disappeared, leaving behind him many victims of his alleged high finance methods. Bidding was lively for most of the articles offered and more than $5,000 was realized.

A seven-seated touring car, which Davis presented to his mother about a year ago, was knocked down to "H. I. H." for $1,600. These initials are said to represent H. I. Harriman of Newton, to satisfy whose mortgage for $11,000, the auto was sold.

No Water to Run Mills.

Glens Falls, N.Y., Dec. 13.—The mills on the upper Hudson are confronted with a serious situation, owing to low water and lack of power to operate mills. The International Paper Co. yesterday shut its plant down at Fort Edward, and, at the mills in this city and in Corinth, machines are run with great difficulty. Unless rain comes and raises the river, complete suspension of operations will follow.

The Hudson River was never so low, and four inches of ice now covers the river. The Glens Falls Paper Co.'s plant is now being operated by steam power.

Not Her Child Say Relatives.

Kingston, Dec. 13.—Relatives of Gertrude Enright are disinclined to believe that the child found in Rochester is hers. It is reported that the girl made a statement that the dead baby was murdered at her request, who asked her to help get rid of it, and that she assisted in disposing of it. Chief of Police Bailey says he has had no word from Rochester to look for the missing girl. The girl's father died a year ago. There is a mother and several children. The matter is protected at the news which came to her through the newspapers.

Shot By His Wife.

Philadelphia, Dec. 13.—Herbert Mason Clapp, a wealthy gentleman of this city, is in a hospital with a bullet in his head and likely to die, and his wife is under arrest charged with having shot him. According to the police, the couple quarrelled in their bedroom at 4.30 o'clock yesterday morning, and Mrs. Clapp fired one of half a dozen shots.

Heir to a Fortune.

Trenton, Dec. 13.—Marion McCarty, a former Hindenburg, is heir to a fortune, believed to be worth in part of an estate of $1,000,000 left by James J. McClusky, the millionaire paper bag manufacturer of New York.

He Sold the Cattle.

Toronto, Dec. 13.—William Brown, who was arrested at Toronto, is wanted at Lindsay for selling a horse and rig at Bobcaygeon which he hired from F. A. Clegg at Kinmount.

Winnipeg Campaign Ends.

Winnipeg, Dec. 13.—The final day of the civic campaign passed off in quiet but strenuous efforts of the opposing forces to strengthen their respective positions in what has been the hottest of many strenuous civic battles. The Social and Moral Association made this the principal issue, and their candidates, R. D. Martin, is running solely on this ground, whereas Mayor Evans marks a third term simply as a vindication of his record. However, apart from this, there are four by-laws being submitted to the people, and, with controllers and aldermen, many votes will have to be taken to-morrow.

While both the Stonepartites and the supporters of Mayor Evans and the police commissioners profess themselves confident of the result, it depends almost entirely on how the all-important "floaters" go.

The citizens are unanimous in expressions of relief at the close of what necessarily has been a lengthy campaign, with both sides manoeuvring to strengthen their cause.

Queen's Views on Marriage.

The queen of Roumania, who recently was extremely ill, says that woman's true happiness lies in regarding marriage as a holy sacrifice and looking to sentiment and duty as the guiding principles of life.

Attacks and Abortions Women.

While King Alfonso was in London it was noticed that he admired the pretty American women. He did at the dining table in the Mansion House and grand ball, with which princes of royal birth honour American society dames and debutantes. All this calls again and the various ways in old verse of a courtly and a sensitive nature was going on at Madrid, and one only recked that happiness his mates to find that at the latest revelry.

WAS A PIONEER EDITOR

"OLD JOHN" HOUSTON EARNED FAME AS A KNOCKER."

Famous Frontier Newspaperman, Who Died on the West Coast Recently, Had an Adventurous Career — He Was Mayor of Nelson, Member of Legislature, and Finally Settled in Prince Rupert.

Old John Houston and Prince Rupert go together. Without the story of John, Prince Rupert is no more interesting than all the "new" cities you will stumble over as you explore new parts of Canada. For Prince Rupert, even though it is the western terminus of the Grand Trunk Pacific, and is to become a great distributing centre, suffers that sort of thing, is bankrupt on [illegible] so much that your eyes grow tired of straining ahead and [illegible] made of "All Fates and the Devil and the whims of Commerce. But Old John Houston is dead. It won't matter to tell about him. He is the first chatterer in the town, and wrote the first word in the beginning of its history. It would be eventually [illegible] history if Old John had not lived and quarrelled, died, and so on. Of course, there is Young Cleary, the youngest singer still in his twenties, who had charge of some big engineering works at Fort William, and who was the first man to land on Prince Rupert's soil four years and eight months ago, out of a rowboat. Cleary and some other folk [illegible] with a wharf first thing, and there is mighty lucky stuff about getting [illegible] what painted the wrong way on account of [illegible] the position of the North Star. But that happens anywhere. Cleary would rush up to it [illegible] ago, pick his [illegible], and [illegible] of [illegible] that the Hudson Bayers in Prince Rupert is going well ever in Houston-Old John.

John was still young when he died, but they called him that just the same as they call the Dominion cabinet a ministry of "Fifty" for five. John was only sixty-fifty when he died. He had been a printer, a reporter, a [illegible] of the British Columbian Legislature and all sorts of things; but in the main he was an iconoclast. That was his profession — a born "knocker." Death on optimism was full of lore. A certain island in the Gulf of [illegible], a river-boat captain, a [illegible] in the harbor after Old John on account of the thinning [illegible]. Any town that ever poked fun boys in places and at certain stages of the [illegible] evening that island was to them, at not to get hurt, the name as everyone that touched Old John, which was the reason for the name.

John [illegible] as a printer's devil among the type [illegible] town. He was said with the power of type to [illegible] to humor, to speak to annihilate. He overcame ten pleasant things that can be done in type, and went in for annihilation, cold-blooded, painstaking sane, kill-the-heretics-annihilator-the-Lord sort.

Printing offices all over the country knew John. He was always seeking new frontiers and setting up his press. He lived a long time in the mountains of British Columbia, was Mayor of Nelson, an alderman, and member of the Legislature.

Then he went south. People thought he would stay, but he didn't. He came back to the Assembly till his term was out, and then he made a rush for the end of the G. T. P., Prince Rupert.

New John was no fool, and the Grand Trunk Pacific did not want him in Prince Rupert till the proper time. When Old John arrived, the G.T.P. was making the town. They began [illegible] Old John, and did not relish his ability as a [illegible]. John could buy no land, nor rent any, on which to stand his press.

He stood there and calculated. He ran his hands through his black curly hair, and thought. Then he unearthed a copy of the provincial statutes, and under the Mining Law he staked out a claim adjacent to the G. T. P. headquarters. He built a shack and put up his machinery. He made a desk out of deal boards, and sat there watching for somebody to do something he could "jump on." There were plenty of things. Old John was as happy as a lark. The G. T. P. [illegible] were by an accident. John hits the management as shrewd. It did one thing and did not do another. And John chuckled and wrote and rubbed and chuckled.

And he was all right. It was not a mania. It was just his philosophy—to knock. To show that he wasn't a fool, he rented out portions of his mining claim after he had done the required $100 assessment work according to the law to Indian laborers, and presently the G. T. P. [illegible] called John, looked worried. And shortly bought John out for fifteen thousand dollars, 'tis said.

John moved on. He wouldn't have sold out only that his wife [illegible] herself. He saw the beginning [illegible] of Prince Rupert, with long [illegible] of water right on the point, and mountains all around. He could then [illegible] the [illegible] of the greatest [illegible] port in the world, which will unquestionably develop the shipment of the cereals of the [illegible] of acres of mixed cereals to the [illegible] and Vancouver. He hadn't [illegible] how the Mining Institute stays and support at least 10,000 people in Prince Rupert is yours to command. And to keep all about the [illegible] route from Canada to the Orient.

But he moved on. He went down to Fort Steele, and rented up the press again. He puts his desk again, and [illegible]

BIG TURNOUT AT FIRST PRACTICE OF THE SEASON

Thirty Players Out in Uniform at Brock St. Rink Last Night Including Many New Men

The hockey season in Peterborough was inaugurated with a bang last night when the first practice of the season was held at Brock street rink. Juniors and intermediates turned out together with the result that there were a score and one half youths of all sizes and ages, in all varieties of sweaters, the blue and white of Peterborough, the yellow and black of the West Ends, the red and white of the Strathconas, the blue and white of the Trenton club, the Barrie colours and a nondescript outfit of many other shades and hues. So many were out that the players had to work in relays and even then it was impossible to get a line on the men. They will be weeded out, however, after a practice or two and the dead material will go into the discard. It was about the biggest practice the old Brock street rink has ever seen, however and the executive members who watched the workout from the sidelines were very enthusiastic over the outlook. Coach Lyons, who is going to look after the juniors was on the job and referred a practice game.

Among the intermediates out were Detchell, Millie, a new goalkeeper from Woodstock, Stewart a forward from Barrie, McMillan, Ray and Weatherstone of last year's Strathconas and Roy Marshall of Deseronto. There was one grand turn-out of juniors. Among the kids in line were Heffernan, Reynolds a defence man from Trenton, Weir of the Keene City League team, Kenneally a forward from Lakefield, Coughlin of last year's T.A.S. team, Pratt of the Quakers, Mills, Anderson, Parrington, Wade, Giroux of the West Ends, Walter Cole of Deseronto, McMartin, Clancy, Hall, of last year's West Ends, Latimer and others whose names were lost in the shuffle.

Ben Dusty, the erstwhile Strathcona player and more latterly of the Brantford professional team, could not withstand the lure of the ice and was out with the squad last night. Despite the crowded condition of the ice Ben showed his old time form and shot up and down the rink as if it was the middle of season instead of the first workout. Ben has a number of offers from professional teams and will likely hit the trail in a day or two.

There will be another practice tonight between 7 and 8 o'clock for both intermediates and juniors.

Champion Says He Will Fight Winner of Langford-Jeannette Fight for $10,000

DOESN'T WANT A LEMON

Special Wire to The Examiner.

CHICAGO, ILL., DEC. 13.—"I don't want any lemons handed to me" said Champion Jack Johnson last night in insisting on an United Stateser as referee. Under this condition he will fight the winner of the Langford-Jeannette fight for twenty-five rounds in April, for twenty-five thousand dollars.

RESULTS OF THE SHOOTING CONTESTS

The results of the shooting contests at Peoples Bros. shooting gallery on Saturday are given below. D. Cole won the championship with fifty-six points. Over one hundred people witnessed the contests. Next week the prizes will be worth shooting for. There will be two prizes, one for professionals, and one for amateurs. A picked team would like to compete with teams of other cities outside of Toronto. The amateur contest on Saturday was won by W. Edmondson. The scores were as follows:

THE OTTAWA CLUB

OFFERS $125 CHEQUE

The action of the Ottawa Club yesterday in rejecting the peace terms of the players came as a rude surprise to those who anticipated an amicable settlement. The players formed a union of professionals in the National Hockey Association, decided that the salary limit must guarantee, and in other words practically told the piratical players to go to blazes.

Bruce Stuart's proposal to take the puck chasers in on a co-operative plan was thrown in the waste paper basket, as was that from a Renfrew magnate who would increase the salary limit to $8,000.

To-day the Ottawas will make another offer of $125 each to Stuart, Walsh, Kerr, Lake, and Shore. An offer will also be forwarded to Bruce Ridpath, the Toronto boy, who played last winter the most consistent hockey on the Ottawa line. In the event of the players refusing the club will at once inform them that they are retained on the reserve list, thus preventing them from signing with other clubs.

Immediately the team committee will close with an almost entirely new septet. The Ottawas count on Lasseur for goal, and the belief is also expressed that Hambly, Shore, and Myles Ridpath will be found with the officers here. In fact, this is the team which one member of the player's committee lined up to-day:

Goal, Lasseur; point, Renan; cover, Shore; rover, Currie; centre, Ridpath; right wing, Horace Gaul, and left wing, Edgar Dey. Tommie Westwick and Billy Smith will probably be carried as spares.

THE FRIENDSHIP

A Short Story

I.

The friendship between Andrew Deakin and Lewis Appleby began when the nineteenth century was young.

Though at school they swore eternal comradeship, their affection did no languish when schooldays were over. Deakin took possession of a stool in the counting-house of a great wool firm in the City of London; Appleby entered as a student at St. Bartholomew's, joyously installing the usual skeleton in the cupboard of his bloomsbury lodging. Deakin was a sturdy youth, with financial and civic ambitions, already astern of men with his knitted brows and square jaw; Appleby, slim, fair-haired, and sprightly, was of a less strenuous nature, jogging along lightheartedly from day to day, playing the flute, banging the tambourine, strumming and clattering through wonderful dances, whistling all the ditties of the day, and scraping through examinations. Deakin, who was absolutely as dead as a post, used to marvel at the ease with which his friend would attune up melodies at operas and musicales and afterwards beat out their complicated bits and quiddles. His attachment to Appleby was as of an elder to a younger brother, and unconscious of his own solid individuality, he was often impelled by a sense of duty to lecture him on his frivolities.

That was course of duty marked out Andrew Deakin for early advancement. His shrewd abilities and his eager interest in wool commended him to his employers. In his own small affairs he was not less vigilant. From the day he left school he kept an exact account of his minutest expenses. Like the industrious ant he never hovered and he never lost. He had struck deep roots of prosperity before he was out of his teens.

One day poor Appleby came to Deakin with bad news. Owing to the sudden bankruptcy and suicide of his father his student's career was cut short at its joyous height, and he was now called upon to earn his living at once without any time lost in old ground it. Deakin deserted the golden rule of his life at once, refused to place all the savings of his friend's diligent to enable him to continue his studies—a piece of generosity, timid and startling, which Appleby, however, met the spirit to refuse, gripping Deakin's hand in silent appreciation.

Appleby's difficulties, however, were soon at an end, for chance and influence combining, he applied for and obtained a curiously out-of-the-way appointment in the Far East. The idea was, of course, exciting at first; it meant being whisked thousands of miles away from all his happy haunts about town to settle down to a humdrum life at a Mission school—established under high auspices—where for a small salary he had to give elementary instruction to aborigines.

So it came to pass that Appleby sold his skeleton and packed his bags—and Andrew Deakin saw him off, lingering till the last moment on board the ill-fated East Indiaman. Thus at the age of twenty the friends were parted, and knew not when they should see each other again.

II.

Then began a correspondence between the two friends, the regularity of which, as the years rolled by, was only broken by occasional accidents beyond their control.

There were no surprises in their careers. Appleby's life went on without change or promise, yet without cares or troubles; Deakin's was marked by steady progress.

Appleby had soon adapted himself to the alien atmosphere, for he was endowed within a comparatively small radius and he had quickly made himself popular both with Europeans and natives. His duties were not heavy and his buoyant, happy temperament radiated all its ancient amiability. Yet there was in him a sufficient ground-work of seriousness to satisfy the solemn London Committee with its Ducal President that voted the annual supplies for the school. And his periodic reports to them, beginning always: "My Lord Duke, My Lords and Gentlemen," were deferential, lucid, and correctly phrased. He had not indeed fallen into the pompier style without an error or two misadventures, which had brought down on his head votes of censure, elaborately proposed, seconded, and passed, and framed by order on the minutes and likewise communicated to him by the Clerk to the Council. But experience and Deakin's shrewd advice soon taught him to curb his youthful presumptuousness in making suggestions or criticisms, and, by dint of habit, the composition of these official communications became a not unpleasant process. Such constraint as was thus imposed on his self-expression was amply atoned by the free play in which he could indulge in his letters to Deakin. These indeed, were a great factor in his life, and he would sit down to them as to an acred task. Long after almost every other tie with home had faded away an dletters from relations were of the rarest, he would look forward to his friend's with eager simplicity and reply with religious punctuality.

During the first years of his emigration, Deakin had often tried to stimulate him to some fresh activity. But one day's routine followed another as a matter of course, Appleby had not the initiative to seek out fortune and fortune became more and more the creature of his calling. He developed in face into a solid success in the capacity in which he had been appointed, and the London Committee congratulated themselves on their acquisition.

As the years advanced he became firmly established as a vital part of the Mission. His could not have imagined himself otherwise, nor could the Committee have dissociated their functions from a name that was so much on their tongues at every meeting.

One morning Appleby awoke and realized he was middle-aged. He was still a bachelor, and still in receipt of a small modest salary, despite tiny increments voted him at long intervals and acknowledged by him in terms that, when read out by the Clerk, drew the nodded approbation of the full Council. Yet he remained as cheerful as of yore, improvising on his flute, and gaily breaking into old roulades as after school he good-naturedly ministered to the natives' sprained thumbs or disembarrassed them of aching teeth.

III.

Deakin continued his prudent, prosperous career in the wool warehouse. His life of toil was a happy one, for to be a responsible and virtuous citizen was a need of his soul. He was quite conscious of his own worthiness and a trifle vain about it. But maybe that was only self-respect. And, on his side, the correspondence with Appleby was his greatest pleasure. It is true the record of his personal life had little variety, but Deakin was of a speculative turn and had serious thoughts about the world, the flesh and the devil, about foresight, nature, civilization, Divine Providence and many such other subjects. The hours spent in putting these thoughts into portable shape for conveyance across continent and oceans were of the pleasantest. The only thing that disquieted him was his dearth of return for Appleby's future. But all his exhortations seemed useless. "Don't worry about me, old man," Appleby would reply: "You know I like to take things easily, and as I haven't your terrific ambition, it's just as well I don't bother my head too much. When eating-time comes there's always plenty to eat, and when sleeping-time comes there's always a good bed ready, so I'm quite happy and contented." And, his friend could only shrug his shoulders and think with satisfaction of his own growing success.

At the age of thirty-seven, Deakin, promoted to the headship of the counting-house, paid ceremonial court to an eligible lady with a snug fortune. She had first begun to "flirate" with him when she heard from his own lips how attached he was to his friend so many thousands of miles away, and thus the carpentry for his proposal began. When he actually asked her to share his life, she replied she could ask for nothing better than to be received into such a friendship.

The couple established themselves on the outskirts of London in a commodious brick house with a double frontage, bow windows, and an immense area of basement sage. Hither Deakin proceeded by train each morning to the counting house, wearing a high silk hat and carrying a leather handbag. Richly carved furniture was relieved by great mirrors in gilded frames that blossomed luxuriantly with buds, leaves, flowers and birds amid intricate sprays and convolutions, which gave Deakin, whose imagination had been quickened by his romance, a sense of inhabiting an enchanted palace. A small cabinet in his drawing-room contained a little accumulation of Oriental objects sent him by Appleby as birth-day presents. The road was the most select in the neighbourhood, the streets of which were strictly differentiated as to social status. Deakin, who with his wife owned property all around them, was of the aristocracy of the district, but, in his heart, felt humble before the residence of the senior partner, two or three miles further out, a veritable country mansion with a great hall and acres of pleasure grounds and a score of servants. Privileged to visit there with his wife—for the senior partner by no means despised his pronouncements on the subject of leases and repairs and roofs and drains—Deakin grander than his neighbours who had no ideas above their own suburb.

IV.

Mrs. Deakin had fallen in love with the friendship as well as with her husband, and, having married both, she cherished the one as tenderly as the other. The letters to Appleby were now composed by husband and wife jointly. Nor did her enthusiasm wane even when the joys of motherhood came to her. The friendship was too ideally beautiful for that, an ever-present source of emotion. Appleby came in for many nice birth-day gifts, including beautiful things made by her own hand. Her preferences in music were almost primarily classical, the tone-deaf Andrew nevertheless severity of taste, but she stooped so far as to keep touch with the lighter music of the day in order to keep Appleby supplied for his private recreation.

As the young family progressed, the nature of the letters from England naturally underwent some change. The doings, sayings, and education of Deakin's children came to occupy a great deal of space, and Appleby who received their photographs at all stages of their growth had a vivid sense of their individual identities and felt them shooting up almost as under his own eye.

At intervals in the correspondence, the idea arose that Appleby might pay a flying visit to England. They would play with it delightedly on both sides, but invariably it became illusory and phantasmal and at last disappeared. A thousand things always necessitated the postponement of the visit, "but only for a few months, I hope," as the sanguine Appleby would put it. Eventually, as new obstacles arose, the hope would be abandoned to resurge with equal futility some half dozen years later.

And now decade after decade flew swiftly. The face of the world changed not less swiftly. Steamers sped across the seas and the old stately sailing-vessels were broken up. Then came the flash of messages to the ends of the earth. Dynasties and governments had their vicissitudes, and the boundaries of the great nations were altered. The dust of the earth awakened into myriad human life, often to be broken and maimed by battle, to be swallowed by earthquakes, to be caught by tidal bores, to be stricken with famine and ravaged by pestilence. Yet man went on indefatigably spinning and forging and baking and brewing; building new cities and enlarging old ones.

Through all the changes and fevers of the world, his career ploughed serenely forward. His very ambition was realized. At length senior partner in the wool warehouse, he inhabited the very mansion of his late principal, having purchased it, a bargain, with its grounds and the whole surrounding estate, on the decease of that venerable gentleman. He ate turtle soup at many City banquets, and his success culminated on the day on which he was elected an Alderman of the City of London with the certainty in his turn of occupying the Civic Chair.

Yet all was not as he would have wished for, in his heart, and as he had indeed confessed to Appleby, the future Lord Mayor was disappointed in his children. His sons had gone to Oxford and developed into superior persons, who, whilst they had the greatest contempt for the wool warehouse, had yet no objection to spending its gita revenues lounging about Europe on the pretence of being immersed at their mother's musical productions. Moreover they had introduced into the house—among other strange individuals—a penniless cousin upon whom his daughter had improved.

Though the friendship was still felt romantically on all sides, its glamour came from its past rather than its present. The romance lay, behind it; a romance whose last words appeared to have been written (as the last words of every pleasing romance should be written): "And they lived happy ever after!"

Even to the chief personages themselves the present stage of the friendship did not yield the same fine emotions and the same sense of the ideal as its past stages. A large side of their lives was somehow disorganized, and they were conscious of some jarring discord. The eagerly-awaited mail; the rush for the packet superscribed in the well known hand; the breathless delighted perusal of the rustling pages—also vivid like and better-editing Reviews of the far-off Oriental town; the making of oversea and the jotting down of items therefrom as they came, to make material for an many rustling pages of a reply to which their whole existence converged—all was to cease and life was left largely subservient. The Alderman was often peevish and irritable, and his wife, whose superior children were rarely at the home, began to suffer from his ill-temper.

The gap in Appleby's existence would have been still wider, were it not for his native buoyancy. Deakin at least had his affairs to look after, whereas Appleby had not even a profession to prepare, and the days were often long and desolate. But on the other hand he had soon got on excellent terms with many of his neighbours, among whom he was in request of an evening to smoke a pipe or sing a song. Perhaps he enjoyed this better than the long, heavy, solemn dinners at the great house with their heavy and silver plate, their ostentatious progress, to an accompaniment of strange courses, from sherry via hot pie champagne and port and [illegible] the Deakins were most [illegible] to do things in a manner worthy of their proximity to the Civic Chair.

But the Alderman himself sat at all events of Appleby's live superior

EXAMINER "WANT ADS" BRING THE RESULTS

The ability of the Examiner to recover lost articles is getting to be an old story. Tuesday was a slight exception to this rule. A lady dropped a parcel containing a handmade lace collarette. The contents were valuable, and naturally the loser wished to recover it. Fortunately, the finder took the proper method to get her property back. She inserted an advertisement in the Examiner, with the result that the missing lace was brought back to this office by a gentleman who found it on the street, and saw the advertisement in the Examiner.

The Examiner has also been successful in recovering a wrist-band watch, which was lost along the track between Dalhousie street and the Shovel Works.

ANNIVERSARY SERVICES OF THE GEORGE ST. CHURCH

Splendid Services on Sunday.—Concert Last Night Was a Fitting Close to the Feast.

A FINE PROGRAMME

The anniversary services in connection with the Simpson street Methodist church, were continued last night, when a splendid concert of sacred music was given in the church. There was a very large audience, and the attending programme rendered was thoroughly appreciated.

Miss Grace Merry, the well known Toronto entertainer, assisted very largely in the programme, and made a most favorable impression. She rendered several of the late Dr. Drummond's habitant poems with a keen sense of their quaintness and of the humor and pathos of the stories.

A number of other readings, some humorous and some pathetic, were given by Miss Merry. The programme was opened with a hymn, followed by a chorus by the choir, with the solo splendidly taken by Miss Hamilton.

The solos were rendered in fine voice and each excellent effect by Mrs. J. A. Thompson, and Miss Simpson and Miss Miller were heard to great advantage in several duets.

A most pleasing evening came to a close with the singing of the Doxology.

Very large congregations were present on Sunday, when the anniversary sermons were preached by the pastor, Rev. Mr. Cook. In the evening he delivered the commemorative sermon, dealing in an eloquent manner with the progress of the congregation. Rev. Mr. Cook presented two eloquent and inspiring sermons, which were followed with great attention by the congregations.

The music for the services was under the direction of Mr. F. H. Pettingell, and by the assisting artists was one of the features of the day. The last special Male quartette at 11 o'clock on Sunday morning was rendered by Messrs. Pettingell, Hall, Hall and Hall, and was much enjoyed by the congregation. The last special solo was rendered by Mr. Hall, and was much appreciated. The choir was assisted by Miss Hamilton, Mrs. Thompson, Miss Simpson, Miss Miller, Mr. Hall, Mr. Hall and Mr. Hall.

The offerings for the day were very large.

LEACH'S BOAT A NICE LOOKING CRAFT

Niagara Falls, Dec. 9.—The highest known as the "Mitchell" in which Bobby Leach will attempt to go over the Horseshoe Falls on Sunday next has arrived in the city, and is at present on a flat car in the Grand Trunk railway yards. The boat comes from Rivers, Manitoba, where the designer and inventor lives. It is built along the lines of a submarine, without the power of propulsion, and is one of the most curious crafts ever seen in this part of the country, and is the result of a mind of years of age has the greatest confidence in its being able safely go over the roaring cataract.

Near the stern and of the boat are two sliding hatches, which are held in place by iron bolts and fit each into a cast iron socket, and are also sealed. The occupant is to get his boat, which is the centre of the boat's length, several pounds of sand, measuring about four by five inches are fitted with brass fittings, and these can be removed or placed in position by the operation of levers. The sand is packed up with heavy blocks at each end of the boat, and it is believed should the boat land on end this will prevent it from capsizing.

THE NEW MARINE MONSTER.

The boat has been built on the same principle as a cabin cruiser, and is of the most substantial construction. The hull is of heavy oak and is back sheathed in red and white. The trees cage and iron bound constitute the only outside fracas. The cage has an inside length of more than 10 feet and the beam is about 4 feet. Both ends are partitioned off from the rest of the boat, and form a pair of bulkhead in which the end hatchways are fastened. The ribs are of the ordinary wherein type and are placed about three inches apart. A keel runs the whole length of the boat, and beneath this are the ballast, which weighs in all in the neighborhood of a ton. The cage is built of hardwood of an inch and a half in thickness. A ring bumper about one foot above the keel runs from stem to stern and is used as a fender or couch for the occupant. Several attachments on part of the keel which is covered with steel hooping. The frames apart from these in the middle of the boat are among the most important, as the ribs are strengthened sufficient to keep the boat in shape.

The boat was thoroughly tested by dropping it from a height of 7 feet, and in all ways it comes up to the requirements.

Leach says the boat is a dandy and is a great deal better than he expected, and thinks it will stand any amount of buffeting by the waves.

Bobby is confident of success and will make his death-defying trip on Sunday, providing the weather conditions are good and that proper arrangements can be made with the moving picture people.

THE DEATH OF MR. RAYMOND

The Guelph Mercury has the following reference to the death of Mr. Chas. P. Raymond, until a short time ago editor of the Peterborough Review:

Charlie Raymond, editor of the Peterborough Review, and author of "Just Be Glad," "Cheer Up," and "The Happy Life," and other works that have been among the sayings of hundreds without name, died at 4 o'clock Thursday morning, at the age of 56 years.

Death was due to pneumonia and though Mr. Raymond had been in poor health during the past year, the severe illness which resulted in death was a shock.

He was a writer whose works were much admired and loved by Canadian and American citizens. The beauty of his philosophy as published in his publications, spread to all who read them and won him countless friends.

His latest book, "The Happy Life," is just being brought out now at the time of his death. During the past summer and fall Mr. Raymond had been ill, with alternating the summer months at the Muskoka lakes. He returned to Peterborough comparatively well, but was stricken with pneumonia a few days before his death.

The funeral will be held on Thursday afternoon, from the late residence, 360 Charlotte street, to the Little Lake cemetery. Rev. Canon Snyder will officiate. The pall bearers will be chosen from the following: Messrs. Geo. Hall, Dr. Hall, Dr. Boyland, Dr. Hall, Dr. Hall, Dr. Hall, Dr. Hall, Dr. Hall.

OBITUARY

PINLAY WILSON.

One of the city's oldest residents passed away yesterday morning about 4.30, in the person of Mr. Pinlay Wilson, who resided at 330 Chamberlain street. The deceased was 84 years of age and has been a resident of this city for the last 70 years. He was born in Donegal, Ireland. He is survived by his nephew, Mr. T. Mervin of this city, and his niece, Mrs. P. J. Lee of Gilbert Place, Mass.

The funeral will be held to-morrow afternoon at 2.30, to the Little Lake cemetery, from 330 Chamberlain St.

ROBT JAMIESON.

The many friends of Mr. George Jamieson, of the Peterborough Fire Dept., will sympathize with him in the loss he has sustained by the death of his father, Mr. Robt. Jamieson, at Newcastle. His death occurred at 8.30 this morning. The deceased was 84 years of age and is survived by one daughter and four sons. The sons are George of the Peterborough Fire Department, James of British Columbia, Edward, of Omemee, and Louis of Manvers township. The daughter is Mrs. J. H. Pligg, of Newcastle.

The funeral will be held on Thursday afternoon from the residence of his daughter, Mrs. Pligg, Newcastle to the Pontypool cemetery.

Y. M. C. A. NOTES

The boys' department of the Y. M. C.A. will conduct their first annual church parade on Sunday, Dec. 17th. The boys will meet at the association at 10.30 a.m., then march to the Park street Baptist church, where the Rev. Mr. Biddiford will give a special address for boys. This being the first time a church parade has been attended by the Peterborough Y. M.C.A. boys' department, it is expected that every member who possibly can, will help the department to make this a success by being present. Members, do not let the boy miss this by sleeping in. All members of the Pee-wee scouts are cordially invited to attend. Time, Sunday 10th, 10.15 a.m. place, Y.M.C.A., church, Park street Baptist Business Boys' Bible Class to-night, 8.30.

Boys' cabinet meet to-night 7 till 7.30.

A meeting of the Trades and Labour Council will be held in the Y.M.C.A. Rooms, Simcoe St., Wednesday evening at 8 o'clock.

A MISTAKE

The attention of the Examiner has been called to the fact that among the photographs of children published in the Christmas edition on Saturday and which were all credited to the Bon Ami, appeared one which was the work of the Royal Art Studio. Owing to the similarity in the names there was a mistake made in the engraving department, and the photograph in question was that of Miss Annabel Lees, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Lees of Peterborough. The photograph was taken at the Royal Art Studio, and the mistake was made in the engraving department. The Examiner regrets the mistake, and takes this opportunity of apologizing to Dr. and Mrs. Lees for the error.

WOMAN SHOOTS HERSELF.

Settler's Wife, Near North Bay, Had Quarrel With Husband.

North Bay, Dec. 14.—A settler's cabin on the south shore of Lake Nipissing was the scene of a shooting affray Sunday night, following a domestic quarrel, as the result of which the wife of James Fetherley lies dying. News of the tragedy reached North Bay yesterday in the form of a rumor [illegible] and Provincial Officer McRae and a press representative drove to the scene, forty miles across the lake. The woman was found to be still alive, but a revolver bullet had entered beneath the jaw and passed completely through her head and brain, inflicting injuries which undoubtedly caused instant death.

Fetherley's story, which is corroborated by other inmates of the house, is to the effect that his wife quarrelled with a man who was helping him on the farm, causing him to leave, and [illegible] with his step-son, and he administered with her for driving [illegible] away. Words followed, and she picked up the revolver and ran [illegible] the room, where she shot herself.

The deceased is a desirable woman, and has five little children. Domestic life has not been collective to [illegible], but there is no evidence that [illegible] anything but [illegible] rumors to the contrary, that the dying woman leaves an excellent record, and exonerates her husband. Her condition late yesterday afternoon did not show any change, and she states that it is her intention to get better, notwithstanding her terrible injury. The woman is able to talk and sit up in bed, showing vitality of a most remarkable nature.

Saskatchewan Stays Wet.

Regina, Dec. 14.—The latest returns [illegible] Saskatchewan. Out of [illegible] places heard from the by-law [illegible] has been defeated in seven and defeated in 16.

The only city to go dry was Moose Jaw, which [illegible] defeated the [illegible] by 2 votes and Saskatoon by 30, while Prince Albert defeated it by [illegible] of a majority.

Generally speaking, the by-law has been defeated in the cities and towns, only one town out of eleven going dry and one city.

In the rural districts the measure received the greatest support.

Both sides express satisfaction, the temperance people taking the vote as a sign that the movement has made great progress and will be successful next time.

In Saskatoon tenders are being called for the erection of the proposed local option hotel.

In Moose Jaw the business men voted against the measure.

INTEREST FAILING IN THE BRITISH ELECTIONS

Britons Are Becoming Weary of the Campaign—No Change in Situation Yesterday—Philip Snowden Promises to Press Against Plural Voting System.

London, Dec. 14.—The election continues to drag wearily along. The public has lost interest, and the newspapers have given up publishing late editions. Front street and other points where returns are shown, are deserted.

The summary of the parties last night was as follows:

Opposition: Unionists, 272.

There were 40 polltags yesterday, but the results in only six constituencies were announced last night. No change was recorded in these. The coalition has, therefore, one gain to the good in the election so far. In Monday's elections the results were announced yesterday afternoon. The Liberals won in Newmarket, and the Nationalists in Mid-Tyrone, both from the Unionists, while the latter equalized matters by capturing Bodmin and Torquay.

Party feeling continues to run strong in Cork, where there are conflicts daily between the opposing factions. David Sheehy, member of the House, in a riot yesterday, was struck by a stone and so badly injured that he remained unconscious for some time. Not less than 100 persons have been surgically treated in the Cork infirmary since the elections began, and 30 were admitted in one night.

Philip Snowden, the Socialist Member for Blackburn, announced last night that after the veto question had been disposed of, the Labourites would press for the passage of an electoral reform bill, to abolish plural voting, to which he ascribed the Unionist successes in many districts.

GRANGERS ARE FIRM IN DEMAND FOR RECIPROCITY

Farmers Would Improve the Old Country's Position in the Canadian Markets and Grant Either Free Trade or Reciprocity on Farm Implements.

Toronto, Dec. 14.—The Dominion Grange yesterday convened in Victoria Hall for its thirtieth annual convention, preparatory to the agricultural assault on the Ottawa Government on Friday on tariff matters.

The evening session was devoted mainly to discussion on a committee report of the articles which the western associations wanted put on the free trade or reciprocity list. The report was as follows: "That this committee is in favor of reciprocal tariff with the United States on agricultural products, agricultural implements, vehicles and parts thereof, and free trade in all articles in which it may be obtained, also that the British preferential tariff be raised from 33 per cent. to 50 per cent., thus cutting the tariff on British imports one-half."

"After some warm discussion the report was carried by a small vote, only to be rescinded again a few minutes later. Some of the delegates declared that to give the United States a preference over Great Britain in articles manufactured and exported from the latter place, was manifestly unfair. Finally it was moved to drop out the clauses relating to free trade in other articles, and this motion was carried unanimously. As England exports no agricultural implements or products, the delegates were of the opinion that reciprocity or free trade in these would be beneficial.

"The tariff as it is now is extremely objectionable to farmers," said the report of the legislative committee. "Not only does it bear too heavily upon their industry, but it has created an avenue for the production of trusts, combines, and formed monopolies to rob agriculture of its honest earnings and detract from it the labor it so much requires to prevent a backward tendency in its productiveness. Our position has assumed a marked change since we last met. In the past we have been asserting our opinions and then lapsing into silence. Now we are before the church demanding that our desires receive recognition and that the pillars of our industry be at least sustained.

As for reciprocity with the United States, the committee said: "We desire to urge that any step that the United States may take toward closer trade relations with our people may be cordially met by our Government, and that our delegates now about to proceed to Ottawa, especially promote this question and let no petty jealousies of national preparedness interfere with a question so vital to the interests of agriculture."

The report of the committee also very much regretted that our Government has undertaken the creation of a Canadian navy, notwithstanding the evident opposition of the public to such a policy, and we think it were yet advisable to have the verdict of the people in a plebiscite before continuing such a question that is calculated to plunge an unwilling people to a greater duty ahead."

The delegates left for Ottawa last night, and, after convening with the delegates from the western associations, will join forces with them and march on Parliament, where they will demand tariff reduction. It is expected that over one thousand delegates will participate.

FARMERS HAVE DAY

Cold Storage and Abattoirs Were Discussed in the House Yesterday—Canal Deputation Heard

TALK LIVE STOCK

Ottawa, Dec. 14.—[illegible] yesterday morning the House of Commons dropped another amendment to the [illegible] supply, moved by Dr. [illegible] (East Grey). That the Agricultural and Animal Industries of Canada would be much benefited by the establishment of abattoirs and a cold storage system of cold storage, with Government supervision, and in the opinion of the House the Government ought to give immediate and effective consideration to the subject.

It was farmers' day in the House yesterday, and had not the vote been one of want of confidence on going into supply, it would probably have received the support of western members on the Liberal side. W. H. White (Alberta) said, but for that consideration, he would have supported Dr. Sproule's amendment.

The vote stood: Liberals, ayes, 111; Conservatives, noes, 69—the Government majority being 42. Arthur Gilbert (Dorchester) and Arthur Sauvé voted with the Government.

Anticipating the arrival of a large number of eastern farmers the Conservative party has apparently taken this means of securing a tactical advantage over the Government.

On the motion to go into supply, Dr. Sproule (East Grey) brought up the question of the development of [illegible] as the result of agricultural [illegible], with particular reference to the stock-raising industry, which, he said, was not keeping pace with the other farming industries.

Dr. Sproule reviewed the findings of the Manitoba and Alberta Beef Commissions, the Alberta Park Commission, and Dr. Rutherford's report to the Government regarding the animal tuberculosis industry. He said the gist of them was that the cattle of the country were becoming less each year in Western Canada, for the simple reason that it was becoming unprofitable to raise them, because of lack of a steady market. All the reports agreed that this could be remedied by the Government taking up the question, establishing a system of abattoirs and cold storage, [illegible] co-operation in the establishment of the dead meat trade.

The dairy State of Canada, he noted, had been affected seriously by the preferential tariff with England, and the removal of the duty on woollen goods. He said there were 1st fewer sheep in the country to-day than there were a few years ago.

He condemned the Government for having undertaken nothing to develop this industry, which, he said, had been brought to the attention of the Minister of Agriculture for years.

Continuing, Dr. Sproule moved an amendment to the motion to go into supply, calling for the establishment of a system of cold storage facilities and abattoirs, under the supervision of the Department of Agriculture.

Hon. Sydney Fisher began with the general view of Dr. Sproule's motion, but accused him of certain [illegible]. Dr. Sproule, he said, had criticized the question of our exports, but he had forgotten the ever-increasing home market. Canada's population was growing, and was more rapidly in the cities than in the country, while the western farmers were hardly producing enough food products for their own use. It was unfortunate that [illegible], he said, that sheep were becoming fewer. One of the reasons was, in Canada, was Canadian were especially suited to wear woollen wool.

Wm. Pugsley (N. Lunenburg), W. H. Sharpe (Lisgar), E. W. Nesbitt (N. [illegible]), Thos. Caven (Centre York), E. W. Nesbitt (N. [illegible]), John Purvis (Macquarie), E. M. Macdonald (N. Middlesex), W. F. [illegible] (N. Colchester), were other speakers.

"If we can take it up this year, I hope we shall do so, and we shall [illegible]

Trial Postponed.

Goderich, Dec 14.—Owing to the absence of two material witnesses for the crown in the case of the King v. J. Garnet Armstrong, the Lucknow druggist charged with making a fatal mistake in filling an order, an adjournment of the case was granted when it was brought up in the court yesterday afternoon before His Honor Judge Doyle. One witness had gone south for two months, before he could be subpoenaed, and ill-health prevented another from appearing. The date of the trial has not been set, but it will probably be held some time in March.

Floods in Italy.

Rome, Dec. 14.—Serious have the floods become, particularly in northern Italy, through the increased rains, that the King has expressed his intention to visit the inundated districts, and thereby give encouragement to the inhabitants.

Grave damage is reported from all quarters. Many villages are practically isolated, and provisions are being carried to the people by boats. Hundreds of soldiers and private citizens are aiding the sufferers.

"ASHTON-KIRK, INVESTIGATOR"

By John T. McIntyre. Copyrighted and all Rights Reserved

But behind all this, Ashton-Kirk could detect something else. The almost swooning terror of the girl who had spoken to him over the telephone was still there—held rigidly in check to be sure, but unquestionably there. While her lips smiled, the eyes sometimes betrayed her; and there was a tenseness about her that almost screamed. Her good-bye was soft and kindly spoken; she held out her hand, frankly, and thanked him for his interest. There was nothing hurried in her manner; it was all smoothly and leisurely done. And yet he felt that if she had followed the impulse that filled her, she would have taken him by the shoulder and bundled him from the room in order that she might be alone.

"Alone—to think," he said, as he got into his car at the curb. "But to think about what?" Aloud he said to the driver: "Christie Place."

By this time the early workers were beginning to thicken in the street; street cars were more frequent; the dull night hum of the city was growing in volume. The spark had set the car's engine throbbing heavily, and the driver was about to start when a second vehicle drew up and Ashton-Kirk found himself looking into the alarmed face of young Pendleton.

"Heavens, Kirk!" cried the newcomer, as he leaped out, "has anything serious happened?"

"To whom?" asked the investigator, quietly, his eyes fixed upon the young man's face.

"To Edyth, of course. Has any thing been seen of her?"

"I have just left her; she seemed a bit agitated, but perfectly well."

A look of relief crossed Pendleton's face.

"Oh!" said he. "All right. I was beginning to think that something was up. You see," and here he lowered his voice, "I danced with her about midnight at Mrs. Barron's; about two o'clock her aunt, Mrs. Page, came to me in great distress, and said she was strangely missing. She had slipped away somewhere without a word."

Ashton-Kirk looked at him keenly. "Of course it was up to me to find her," said Pendleton; "but my efforts were without result. Her car was gone, and the man said Miss Vale had called it about one o'clock, also that she had driven away in it alone.

"At this news Mrs. Page grew quite ill, and I brought her home here in my car. Then I departed upon a vague sort of search. As the matter was to be kept perfectly quiet and I was to ask no questions of anybody, you can imagine how much chance I had of doing anything. But if she's at home, it's all right. At sight of you I thought it had proved to be something alarming, and that they had sent for you."

"I was sent for," said Ashton-Kirk dryly, "but not to hunt for Miss Vale. Now jump in here and come along; I've got a little matter that may be of interest."

"I haven't had breakfast," said Pendleton; "but there's always something piquant to your little affairs. I'll go you."

He dismissed his own car and climbed into that of his friend. As they whirled up the street, Ashton-Kirk suddenly directed his driver to stop. Then he called to a man with a great bundle of newspapers who stood calling them monotonously up on a corner.

Again the car started with the investigator deep in the sheet of papers which he had purchased. Page after page failed to reveal anything to his practised glance; at length he swept them to the floor of the car. A smile was upon his lips—the smile of a man who had received a nod of approval from circumstances.

"The first edition of the morning dailies lacks interest," he said. "A crime of some moment can be committed between midnight and dawn, and not a line appear in type concerning it until the later issues."

Pendleton looked at him with mock disapproval.

"One would suppose," said he, "that you had expected to find some such criminal narrative in those," and he indicated the discarded newspapers.

"There were reasons why I should answered Ashton-Kirk. "And very good reasons, too. But," and he laughed a little, "for all that, I had an indefinite sort of feeling that I should not find it. This may sound a trifle queer; but nevertheless it is true."

"The account was to have been of a murder," accused Pendleton. "I can see it in your face, so don't take the trouble to deny it. I had hoped that your plunge into what you styled the 'literature of assassination' would not last—that a good night's rest would turn your thoughts into another groove."

"Perhaps it would have been so," said Ashton-Kirk. "But things have happened in the meantime."

"And you don't appear ill at all put out that they have done so. That is possibly the most distressing feature of the business. If anything, you seem rather pleased. Of course, an odd murder or so is to be expected in the ordinary course of events; but one hardly counts upon one's intimates being concerned in them. It is disconcerting."

He crossed his legs and pursed up his lips.

"If you don't mind," added he, "now that I have expressed myself, I'll listen to the details of whatever you have in view."

"There is not a great deal to tell," said Ashton-Kirk. "A man has been murdered in Christie Place. It happens that I have an interest in the matter; otherwise I would not think of dipping into it."

Pendleton looked at him reproachfully.

"After all, then," exclaimed he, "you are but a dilettante! Assassination in the abstract is well enough, but you have a disposition to shirk practical examples. I have been deceived!"

Christie Place was some distance west and ran off from a much frequented street. It was notable for the wilderness of sign boards that flared from each side. The buildings were apparently let out in floors and each lessee endeavoured to outdo his neighbour in proclaiming his business to the passing public. The lower floors were, for the most part, occupied by small grocers, dealers in notions, barbers, confectioners and such like.

"What a crowded, narrow little place," commented Pendleton, as the car turned into the street. The air in the street seemed to him heavy.

About midway in the block a small group stood about a doorway; from a window above swung a sign bearing the name of Hume. The car stopped here; Ashton-Kirk and his friend got out; the group at the doorway parted and a big man stepped forward.

"Why, hello," said he, cordially. "You're the last person I was looking for. How did you hear about this?"

"Good morning, Osborne," said Ashton-Kirk, shaking the big man's hand. "I'm glad to find you in charge. I got it in an unusual sort of way, and came dow nto have a look."

Osborne, though in plain clothes, was emphatically a policeman. His square face, his big frame, his dogged expression, somehow conveyed the impression as plainly as words.

"It must have been unusual," said he, "because even the reporters have not got it yet; headquarters is keeping it quiet until the Chief gets in."

Ashton-Kirk looked vastly pleased. "Excellent," said he to Pendleton. "We'll have a look at the place before it has lost the atmosphere of a crime." Then to Osborne: "May we go up?"

"Sure," answered the other readily. "Only don't pull things around any. That young fellow that they've elected coroner is awful touchy about such things. He wants to be first always."

"Nothing of importance shall be disturbed," promised Ashton-Kirk. Then motioning Pendleton to follow, he ascended the flight that led to the second floor.

It was narrow and dusty, as Miss Vale had said. The walls were unpainted, the hand rail felt greasy, the air was stale. A passage, dim, and windowless, ran the depth of the building; from the front there came a patch of daylight through a ground glass door. Upon this latter could be easily read the words:

DAVID P. HUME,
Numismatist
Philatelist
Art Curiosities

A policeman stood at the head of the stairs smoking a cigar in an indifferent way.

"All right," said he, "if Osborne let you come up I've got nothing to say. He's the boy."

"Have you looked over the place?"

"Just a glance. The door was found closed up as per instructions. Nothing occupied all the front room. Only furniture is an old desk, and a few chairs."

"Thanks."

Ashton-Kirk opened the knob of the door several times, the door with the frosting upon it. The room was without windows; an incandescent closed the door and lighted the gas.

"Just a moment," said he.

The door leading to the back room stood wide. He disappeared through this for a moment; then he returned, his face wore a tightened expression; his eyes were swift and eager.

"This is a sort of store room, I should say," spoke Pendleton.

Pictures hung about upon the walls and stood packed in corners; statues of bronze, marble and plaster were on every side; brass bas-reliefs, rugs of Eastern design and great price, antique armor, coin cabinets, ponderous stamp albums, Japanese paintings and carvings and a host of quest and valuable objects fairly crammed every inch of space.

"I had heard that Hume was wealthy," commented Ashton-Kirk. "And this seems to prove it. This room contains value enough to satisfy a fairly reasonable person."

The two young men passed through into what appeared to be a kitchen. There was an ill-kept range upon one side cluttered with cooking things. A bare oaken table of the Jacobean period held the remains of a meal. A massive Dutch sideboard, covered with beautiful carving, stood facing them; every inch of available space upon it was crowded with bottles, decanters and glasses.

"The gentleman was not averse to an occasional nip, at any rate," said Pendleton. "And his taste was rather educated, too," examining the sideboard's contents carefully. "The best was none to good for him."

Beyond this again was a bedroom. The bed was a huge Flemish affair, and also elaborately carved; over it was a spreading Genoese canopy, which, through lack of care, had grown dusty and tattered. Rich old rugs were spread upon the neglected floor; a beautiful Louis Quinze table had its top covered with discoloured rings made by the bottoms of glasses, and the lighted ends of cigars had burned spots on it.

"The bed of a prince and the floor coverings of a duke," said Pendleton with indignation. "And used much as a coal heaver would use them. Now, this table is really a scandal. If its owner has been murdered, I don't wonder at it. Some outraged lover of such things has probably taken the law into his own hands."

But Ashton-Kirk was paying little attention to the things that appalled Pendleton.

"Look," said he.

He indicated the walls. Here and there the plaster was broken as though some fastened object had been violently torn away. At one place an empty picture frame, its glass smashed, hung askew from a hook. As Pendleton caught sight of other empty frames littered about the room the pieces of each broken. Many pictures torn out, he exclaimed in astonishment:

"Hello! Somebody has torn them down and smashed them. What an extraordinary thing to do!"

Then, noticing many engravings, for which Hume had made a collection, were strewn about, Ashton-Kirk mechanically gathered them up and spread them upon the table. They were by various hands, but unquestionably represented the same person—a handsome, resolute looking man in the uniform of an officer in the army of Washington.

"General Anthony Wayne," said Ashton-Kirk, softly.

Ther was something in the tone that made Pendleton look at him swiftly. The splendid head was bent over the portraits; eagerness blazed in the dark eyes; the keen face was rigid with interest.

"Some drunken freak, do you think?" asked Pendleton, more to hear his friend's view than anything else.

But Ashton-Kirk shook his head.

In Dread Of Piles

Dr. Chase's Ointment

Many Believe That Nothing Short of the Surgeon's Knife Will Effect Cure. They Do Not Know

The agony caused by the intense itching, the depressing and debilitating effect on the system, the dread lest a surgical operation might be necessary—these are the things which make piles or hemorrhoids so distressing.

The doctors have been recommending surgical operations as the only cure. But the surgical operation with all its dangers and expense and pain, does not usually effect a lasting cure.

Many a case has been cured by Dr. Chase's Ointment after the surgical operation had failed. Here is a case which doctors gave up.

Mr. J. Mawer, Tyne, Man., writes: "Dr. Chase's Ointment is a wonderful preparation. I had bleeding piles for over six years, and though I tried two doctors' prescriptions and many other preparations could not obtain relief. The doctor told me there was no cure for me, and that I would have to undergo an operation.

"I bought a box of Dr. Chase's Ointment and was surprised myself to see how much it did me good. In two weeks I was completely healed and feeling almost as sure as applied.

"To make the cure thorough and lasting it is only necessary for you to persevere in the treatment regularly and persistently. Don't be satisfied with relief. Dr. Chase's Ointment will cure completely if you will do your part. 60 cents a box, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

DIVORCE GRANTED

ELKTON, MD., DEC. 13.—The Cecil County Court has just granted Mrs. Irene Stanley an absolute divorce from her husband, Harry F. Stanley, alias "Lord Stanley, Duke of Aberdeen," who failed to contest.

In the first week of June, 1907, Lord Stanley came into the neighborhood of Calvert, and, calling on Joseph hMcVey, confided to him his high rank in the English nobility and that he was heir to enormous estates in Scotland. He offered McVey $1,000 for an introduction to a country girl who had a few farms and a bank acount.

When the neighborhood was gossiping about the "lord" who was soon to marry Miss Irene Clayton, the pair drove to Oxford, Pa., where the knot was tied by the Rev. J. H. Meyers on June 24. Hardly had the ceremony been performed when the bride's brother learned that Stanley was an impostor. He disappeared.

OFF TO WILD WEST

Two English Boys Had Made Some Great Preparations

A remarkable story was told at Barnet, England, when Theo. Hart, 17, who said he was from London, was remanded on a charge of wandering with a boy of 16. A police officer said he found the lads wearing spurs, with having his spurs down. When he spoke they said they were horse-trainers, and were going for five horses they had bought. Each had an airgun, revolver in case, bowie knife, whistle, and a complete outfit of highwaymen, and "gummy dreadfuls." They said they were going out to the Wild West of America, and had equipped themselves with money stolen in London.

MORE THAN BUSY

In a certain hotel dining conservatories were in the habit of chaffing Bobby, the waitress, on her good looks (?). On this morning one of the guests asked Bobby why she did not appear more tidy when serving up breakfast to gentlemen?

To which she replied:

"Begorth, sir, between feeding pigs and commercial gentlemen, I haven't time to clean myself, let alone wash my hands and face!"

The conjunction of pigs and gentlemen was too much for the jester.

NOT TO BE TRIFLED WITH

Unbeknownst unless known, and after had had a wash-up he put on his best Sunday clothes.

"Where are you goin'?" asked his wife.

"I'm the election day," replied Unbeknownst, "and I'm goin' into the town to see the fun."

Now Mrs. Unbeknownst was a thoughtful wife.

"You'll be takin' your shillelah with ye?" she remarked.

"Where and I will."

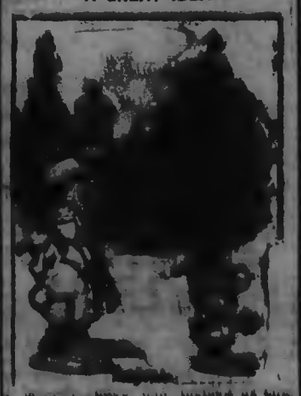
"An' you'll be puttin' a brick in yer hat?"

"What for?" asked Unbeknownst.

"Don't ye remember the last election, when ye came home wid a broken head?"

"Hould your tongue, Mandy," replied Pat. "I'll tell ye what I've done this night. I've put six dynamite cartridges inside the hat, and if anny av the blayes strokes me on the head, shure, I'll scatther the whole crowd av them!"

A GREAT IDEA



Tommy—"Pay, look, instead of buyin' new furs for me for Christmas, why don't you plant a fir tree an' raise 'em?"

HARD ON THE CHAIRMAN

The Rev. F. B. Meyer was addressing a large audience at Nottingham when he had occasion to tell a story. It ran as follows:

A young medical student invited his mother to visit him. In due course she arrived, and wished to be shown around the hospital.

He showed her the various rooms an explained their uses. But when he had finished, she said:

"You have not shown me the dissecting-room."

"Oh, no," he said, "I did not think you would care to see it, especially now, for we were dissecting a body yesterday."

"I should very much like to see it," she reiterated.

He did, therefore, as she chose to direct, so he led the way to the room. When he had explained the positions of the different parts of the body, he asked:

"Can you tell me where the soul would be?"

He thought a moment, then replied:

"I don't think I can. You ask that man was a lawyer."

When Mr. Meyer had told this story his audience broke out into prolonged laughter. Mr. Meyer said forgotten that his chairman was a lawyer!

WHEN MONARCHS ARE MISTAKEN

Some Instances When Monarchs Proved to Be Weak or Wrong Monthly — Amusing Incidents

It is not given to every man to be on familiar terms with his sovereign, and although most of us, through the medium of profusely illustrated periodicals, are conversant with the features of our monarchs, yet there are still many unobservant folks who would not know their kings should they meet them.

To the rule that contemporary belongs the merit that the only occasion cause in mistake occurred within the present century.

The amateur gets marvellous photographs every day nowadays, but it is doubtful whether any of them is more striking than the following:

A certain Scotch laird was driving a farm cart, in days long ago, when he espied the travelling entrepreneur of a well-known circus. He was driving a team of horses, and he looked, whipped up his horses and drove away as furiously as he could. Two hundred yards further on he met a soldier.

"What did the ringmaster want of you?" asked the latter.

"I don't understand," the peasant answered. And when the other explained who the waylayer was to whom he had rendered a lift in his wagon, he was so ashamed that he spoke lashed up his horses, and in the twinkling of an eye disappeared out of sight.

When, a year or two ago, the King of Spain visited a small town outside Madrid, he joined in the crowd that thronged the streets to catch a glimpse of himself. When the royal cortege passed that the King was standing, a shrill female voice that fairly startled everybody exclaimed:

"Last one but in front! Do you think I've waited all this while just to get my best black dress for nothing? I want to see what the boy is like!"

Turning round with a smile, King Alfonso remembered to the mother, pointing with pride: "Here is the King."

After looking him up and down the woman said:

"Well, of all the shock and humbug! Why, the King is a good-looking young man, and even your own mother couldn't say that of you."

German Princess

As all the world knows, the Crown Princess of Germany takes no little interest in women and their work. Once she applied in person at a leading firm of Court dressmakers for the post of model which she thought would be just the thing for a protege of hers.

"I came," she said to the manager, "because I saw your advertisement, and I thought—"

The manager laid his hand on her shoulder.

"My dear girl," he said kindly "I'm sorry. But it is no good; you are not quite good-looking enough. But you have a pleasant face, and I'll tell you what I'll do. Come again in a month's time, and then I'll see if I can find you a place as junior saleswoman."

The consternation of the good man in discovering the applicant's identity was only equalled by that of the Crown Princess, who soon made him forget his discomfiture in admiration of her charming humour.

Queen of Italy

It is singular that a Customs official, of all people in the world, should fail to recognise the features of his king; yet this actually happened quite recently when the King and Queen of Italy were crossing in a motor-car one of their own frontiers.

"Where do you come from?" shouted the official, in the sternest of tones.

"From Modena," faltered his Majesty.

"And where is the number of your car?"

"There is none, I believe."

"Ah! And so you would enter Italy? Now, what's your name, sir?"

"Victor."

"Come, come, no trifling; what is your other name?"

"Emmanuel."

"Your profession?"

It was no good; the thing must out. "I have hitherto enjoyed the reputation of being the only Victor Emmanuel in my own kingdom."

The officer whirled away, but he could even taught a thing or two in dealing with travellers.

King of Wurtemburg

Another motor-car story has to do with the King of Wurtemburg. Driving round his small kingdom one day, his Majesty stopped at a wayside restaurant. He paid for his refreshments, and added a coin for a "tip."

"Well," exclaimed the young woman, agreeably surprised, and she looked at the money and then back at the generous donor, "one can see that you are not a Wurtemburg digitem."

WAITED MANY YEARS

A Frenchman Waited Long for Revenge, and Got It

An extraordinary story of a small revenge comes from St. Etienne, near Lyons, France. A farmer named Claudius had an old account to settle against Hadon of accident some days ago. Claudius took his friend out to dinner, and stood him over the drink and generally made much of him. Hadon left the two most humble together, but when after luncheon they went into the garden, Hadon suddenly drew a revolver. "You traitor!" he said. "Do you remember what you did to me thirty-six years ago? On the two duelists could answer. Hadon fired, and as he did Claudius ran smashed his skull with the butt-end of the revolver.

Neighbors who had heard the shot saw the man prisoner and handed him over to the gendarmes. Claudius was taken to the hospital where he died.

You owe it to your own best judgment to try Psychine (pronounced Si-keen). We'll gladly buy a 50-cent bottle from your druggist and give it to you free to try.

You know the "Know-it-alls." Sceptics of everybody and everything.

They promised well at one time in their career, then they seemed to come to a full stop.

Just because of that unhappy destruction, that suggestion that was for them the same attitude in return, that made every one distrust and dislike them.

Now, you're not a "know-it-all" (only about 10 per cent. of the people are).

We feel sure that you have an open receptive mind—enough that is desirable in such cases, to advantage.

And so you will say that you owe it to your own best judgment to try Psychine.

* * *

Every now and then we come to a decided epoch in medicine when we think advance or improvement impossible.

Then some one comes along and the whole branch of medicine is overturned, new and apparently indisputable theories, all good, all progressive.

In the progress of medicine we sometimes discover new values in old things.

One of these is in the remedy of certain herbs to cure disease.

And the reason they cure is that they increase and strengthen the white corpuscles of the blood—the Phagocytes—the scavengers of the body, devouring every germ of disease that gains entrance to the body.

A third of a century ago, Psychine was compounded of certain herbs.

Since that time it has cured hundreds of thousands.

And all because it contained those herbs that science now knows builds up and strengthens the white corpuscles of the blood—the Phagocytes.

If you have any of these ailments don't be a "know-it-all," it won't pay you.

THE VEGETOTALLER

He was an enthusiastic "temperance lecturer," and as he stood upon the platform orating to a vast crowd of probable converts, visions of fame and immortality rose before him.

But his very enthusiasm was his undoing. It made him over-talkative and he stumbled with his words.

"Gentlemen," he cried, "I stand before you a [illegible] tee-totaller and [illegible]—I mean, a tee-totaller and [illegible]—I mean—gentlemen"—here he grew visibly nervous—"I'm a tee-totaller and [illegible]—I mean I'm—"

"Gentlemen," he cried, "I am a life long tee-totaller and snigger, a tee-totaller, and a vegetotaller!"

Shaking Spells Every Few Days

"At the time I began taking Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy I was having shaking spells every few days. My hands and feet would get cold; I could scarcely breathe, and could feel myself gradually sinking away until I would be unconscious. These about me could not tell there was life in me. After these spells I would be very weak and nervous, sleepless and without appetite; had neuralgia in my head and heart. After taking the remedy a short time all this disappeared and in a few weeks all the heart trouble was gone."

THE PARSON'S CHOICE

A Short Story

I.

When the Rev. George Winton was appointed to the Tallywarn Circuit some were pleased and some didn't hardly know what was in their minds; but they were all interested. He was young—he hardly looked more than a boy—and he was very handsome. He was dressed same as any other minister, but he didn't wear his clothes the same way. He would prob ly be that when Wesley Chapel was full there was not a soul that didn't think there was a special word for him or her.

There were two old retired cap'ns in that town. They were only mining cap'ns, though they ought to have been handy navigators, having travelled to all the countries where wealth is dug out of the ground. Cap't Perfink was never satisfied. Hot or cold, wet or dry, the weather never pleased him, and 'twas the same with people. He was proud of his only daughter Lillie, and indeed she was as pretty as could be, and the only thing he did not begrudge was the money that went on fine dresses for her. Her hats were something wonderful, but it wouldn't had seemed natural if she hadn't been dressy. That was the way of her.

The other Cap't was Cap'n Symons, and for him the world was good and going to be better.

He could find excuses for Iscariot, or if they fail short he would drive him. And he had a daughter, Louie and she was enough to make any man happy. She was a little pale maiden with dark eyes and a quiet voice. You didn't hardly know she was in the room with she was gone out of it and then you missed her terrible.

Now there was such a deal of talk about Mr. Winton's sermons. No one could find any fault with his doctrine, but the sermons were not what was expected, and that is always a fault. For example, he gave out the text one day. "And they heard the voice of the Lord God walking in the garden in the cool of the day."

A Cap'n Perfink said, it wadn't a sermon at all, or, at least, not the greater part of it; it dealt with ordinary everyday life. 'Tis a most unusual fault in sermons. To put it shortly, he said that round about Tallywarn there were many gardens very much out of repair and badly needed weeding. He didn't mean allegory; he talked of gardens where you can grow cabbages. He said that seeds were cheap, though 'twas well to have the best, and it seemed like as if he was willing to give advice to all that asked it. And he said that if a man took to gardening he couldn't but be gentler and more patient and more full of thought.

Cap'n Perfink was astonished, but when the minister came down from the pulpit there was Cap'n Symons.

"Mr. Winton," he said, "I live in the same direction as yourself, and if it isn't against your wish, I should like to have your company on the way home. And thank you for a beautiful sermon, full of truth."

The preacher blushed with pleasure, for 'tis good to be told you have done well. As they walked up Chapel Street, Cap'n Perfink saw them. "There they are," he said "and I warrant Jim Symons is talking about the chrysanthemums. Strange talk for a Christian minister to hold say to on a Sunday!"

As a matter of fact, this is what happened.

"Mr. Winton," said Cap'n Symons, "are you the chrysanthemums?"

Mr. Winton looked puzzled and then he laughed like a boy.

"Oh, yes," he said. "You see, my father I s the man who invents the new chrysanthemums. There are ten of us and he has names for each and each of us. I, as you know, am 'Japanese, rosy crimson, with bronze reverse, and greenish gold tips, good for bush plants, and even flowers in the open ground if not too much frost. One of the easiest grown of any. For exhibition indispensable. Oh! I used to be half-a-crown."

"Yes," said the Cap'n, "and as early tarbaby, too, which is what you are. Funny I never thought of it before. I've got you at home. Would you come and have a bit of dinner with me, and then look at yourself?"

"It is a tempting offer," said Mr. Winton. "My sister Esther is ill and will come with pleasure."

So they came to the little house and there at the gate was Louie, talking with Lillie Perfink. Then the first time that either of them had spoken to the minister, and Lillie was the last proud. But when she found he was going to have dinner there she very soon said goodbye.

"A pretty girl," said the minister, "and intelligent."

"Yes," said Cap'n Symons. "Pretty as a lady as ever I clapt eyes on, and clever to talk."

Louie heard that she was at once the home to look after the dinner, for her mother had been dead some years and they didn't keep a servant.

Mr. Winton was to remember that simple dinner for the rest of his life, for he could never recall anything said or done, and recollect only the tones and the quiet way of the maid. Once, at least, she was pleased with something he said.

"If I may ask," said Cap'n Symons, "is your mother's name Dora? 'Tis a fine variety."

"No," said Winton. "Dora is my sister. When you hear of a Mary Winton you must not fail to get it. My father has never raise da plant yet to which he raised to give his name, though he hopes every year to find it among his seedlings."

"Shall we step out and see the flowers?" said Cap'n Symons. "Louie must be gone for Sunday School, and you are planned for Treggiers this afternoon. I'll go with you, if I may."

So they saw the flowers in the little conservatory at the far end of the garden, and all were pleased, for the Cap'n's care had been well rewarded and Mr. Winton was able to give true praise. As he said that Cherry-Winton knew the best he ever saw though he had to look in the glass every morning when he shaved.

II.

Time went on, and Mr. Winton grew natural as daylight to all in Tallywarn. He was the first man that ever found a way into the heart of Cap' n Perfink. Perhaps that was his weakness; it was certainly his misfortune, and Louie's. He had a strong will, and he was accustomed to be liked. If people didn't like it who soon saw it, and as soon as he had understood that much he set to work with perfect good temper to win them round, and he was so persistent that if he had been Admiral of the British Fleet and the King had happened to mention that he would like it to be proved that the strongest fortress of an enemy was not impregnable.

He laid siege to Cap'n Perfink, and from the first you could foretell the surrender that was to come. But people didn't understand his nature; they could not understand how it could enter into the heart of a young man, liked and respected everywhere, to force respect and liking out of so cross a piece of work as Cap'n Perfink. So they talked of Lillie, and if ever they said a word in her presence, she didn't say anything to make them doubt but that it was true. She had prettier dresses than ever, and if Mr. Winton came down the street, she would be in her pulpy playing before he knocked at the door. And a minister is not like other men who can go a long way with a maid, and then ask the day the one they want, and though they may break her heart, there's nothing more to be said. But when a minister goes courting, there is Cherry-Winton watching all the time, and the backbone of he gives her cause for complaint. So Lillie was well content, though she knew it not herself that all had very little reason. If she was to get him it must be by her own cleverness. She was the sort of a woman who does not understand that she can have into the world to win until somebody tells her that she would have the life so ruin her completely. She argued that if Louie was not a hindrance it was not her own fault, and, a wise woman, the worst fault a girl could commit.

She made a point of being much with Louie, and to her she talked constantly of the minister.

One day she said, "Is it true that there is a flower named after Mr. Winton?"

"A chrysanthemum," said Louie reluctantly.

"Has your father grown it?"

"Yes," admitted Louie. She had come to be very fond of the plant, and its blooms were the loveliest for the delicate touch of her fingers.

"May I see it?" said Lillie. "It is ever so interesting that you know him, and meet him so often."

Again Louie had to do something that went against the grain, but she took her to the little glass-house that Cap'n Symons had built out of old window sashes bought at auction whenever an old house was to be pulled down. There were two blossoms on the plant, and they had cost the labor of a year. Louie had trouble to keep silent when the other fingered and caressed the lovely petals.

"They are beautiful," said Lillie, "and fine their name. Crimson in front, and gold behind. They are like the man. I suppose you couldn't spare me one?"

She saw the hot flush that rose and died away.

"They are not mine," said Louie, "and father never cuts any of the flowers in the green-house. There are plenty of others in th garden; I will gather you some."

"I shouldn't like to trouble you," said Lillie, "but these are so beautiful—I was covetous." Louie gathered her a big bunch of chrysanthemums, but you do not grow George Winton in the open.

A little later they were with Cap'n Symons. "I have been thinking of that sermon of Mr. Winton's," said Lillie, "and I am ashamed to look at the garden. I've asked father to have a man to do it up for the winter, and he has promised to give me a little green-house I can look after myself. I thought perhaps you might give me a few cuttings from the chrysanthemums. They are lively, and I should like the George Winton especially because of knowing the man."

Cap'n Symons, knowing the maid, as disbelieving that any such occupation as gardening might be beneficial to her, said that he would be very happy to oblige her, and she went home to extract from her father the promises of which she had spoken.

III.

There are ways in which a woman may a man that, for the sake of his honour, he sacrifices his happiness and that of others. Mr. Winton knew perfectly well what were Lillie's intentions, and that they could not possibly be fulfilled. Sh ewas pretty, an adviser, and she would probably force her husband to become a success in the world. He wanted to think only of the little girl with the quiet ways and the gentle eyes, for whom a man would always be trying to do something beyond her bidding. But Lillie interfered, and he knew that Louie suffered. For he had the audacity to think that she loved him.

He lived in a house on the hill which overlooks Tallywarn, and his household affairs were in the charge of Mrs. Curgenven, an elderly widow, who had spent many years in such service to unmarried ministers. She constantly broke in on his in order to deliver the result of her reflections.

"I thought 'twould be a fine sermon last night," she said once, "by the time you sat up on Friday night. A good wife to a good husband is like a pocketful of gold. And, more than that, there are diamonds and all the jewels that can please the heart or the eye. But I don't hold with a young unmarried man knowing so much. Have ye been thinking for yourself, or have ye taken counsel?"

Mr. Winton had no answer to render her. He had preached a sermon on the Virtuous Woman, and it had been purchased by his thought of Louie. Those who had heard it had admired it very much, but had wondered that so much could be found to say in praise of the marriage state by a man of whom they daily expected to hear that he had asked Lillie to become his wife. Lillie had sat also in the choir gallery. Louie had listened with a certain pain, and put the knew in her heart that he was a true man, and that he belonged to her. Only—when would she be certain sure?

Mr. Winton still continued to call on her father, an ddhe saw lot of chrysanthemums were to be the best ever grown in Tallywarn. There were eighty plants destined to produce two dozen apiece, and the old man was not sure on them during the greatest part of the year from six in the morning until dark. They were never allowed to rest on the hottest day, and before the simple devotions that preceded the departure to bed, he would go down to the end of the garden take a last look at the plants. Then he and Winton had reached the stage in which you have a plant by its foliage, and then your beautiful long lasting view ahead any sign of drooping, leaves or discoloring. Deep green they started.

Louie and Lillie came, while Cap'n Symons explained what he had done, Winton listened, commented and gave advice, but the second to be sure he was the man who was learning day by day how well he loved her.

As the year drew towards autumn he made a suggestion. "You have a garden, Louie, and you have given me a piece of it. Why should we not have a garden for ourselves? Do you think it would be worth while to attempt a sort of rivalry?"

"Does it mean more than that?" said the Cap'n. "You have taught me more than ever I knew before, though I thought I had some craft. But as to rivalry, I have never been able to make up my mind, so I'll not be the one to say 'no.'"

"What is the trouble?" asked Mr. Winton.

"Your settlement, I suppose," said the old man. "I have small I have ever seen blooms than mine have been, but when I have grown them prize to have them to sell them. Would you have them and Mr. Winton. "It will be people good to see so much can be done in a small garden."

So the matter was settled, and after that the chrysanthemums received more attention than ever.

Meanwhile, what with luncheons and tea-meetings, Lillie Perfink made a fine show of being about to become Mrs. George Winton. At the flower show she was actually wearing a George Winton, grown from one of the cuttings Cap'n Symons had given her.

Cap'n Symons won the first prize for a group of plants, and even those he had beaten couldn't but admit that the judgment was right. He did not exhibit in the class for cut flowers.

Mr. Winton had seen the flower that Lillie was wearing, and he went hot with anger, and walked away, for she had come to a manner of speaking to him that was almost as if they were engaged.

He came up against Louie, who was looking admiringly on her father's flowers and (as he thought) especially on the George Winton. So he didn't hesitate an instant.

"Louie," he said, "will you take it?"

"What?" she said, blushing.

He nodded towards the plant. "Everything," he said.

And the maid went red as a rose, and put forth her hand, and he took it in his, and in five minutes the new area known to all. They were married in April, and 'tis long since that flower show was held. But by all I read in the papers, 'tis as likely as not that Louie may some day be the wife of the President of the Confederation. Lillie got married not long after to a mining engineer, and went away to Denver, or some such place. I haven't heard of her since, but Mr. and Mrs. Winton come back every year to spend a holiday in Tallywarn, and I don't notice that Cap'n Symons is less hearty than he was when he had Louie to look after him. So long as she is happy he is not jealous, and he has no cause for doubt as to her happiness.

Cured Eczema and Dandruff

"I am pleased to inform you that I am entirely cured by Cuticura Soap and Ointment. Since I was a boy I was troubled with dandruff, and only from the itching, but from its disagreeable appearance in a scaly form all over my head. I had to brush it off my clothes all day long. I used every kind of preparation supposed to cure dandruff, also soaps and shampoos, but it seemed to me that, instead of improving with these remedies, it grew worse. My hair began to fall out, and the result was that two months ago I became developed on my scalp.

I suffered so from this that, as a last resource I thought I would try Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment. They had the most gratifying results for I had used only one box of Cuticura Ointment and a couple of cakes of Cuticura Soap when was entirely cured of dandruff and my head and my hair perfectly clear.

I can assure you that so long as I live no other soap than Cuticura will be used by me and all those connected with me. I will also add that I will always use Cuticura Ointment as a dressing for the hair. I feel that you should know of my cure and if you desire you may use this as a testimonial from a well-known resident of this city. (Signed) J. Acheson,

All diseases of the skin are, more or less, directly occasioned by a bad state of the blood, and it is absolutely impossible to eradicate them from the system unless you put your blood into good shape.

The following skin diseases are curable by Burdock Blood Bitters through its combined cleansing, purifying powers on the blood, and its nourishing action on the system, viz.: Boils, Blotches, Eczema, Scurf, Dyspepsia, Itching and Burning Rashes, Ulcers, Sores, etc.

Miss Hattie Hyndt, Maitland Park, N.S., writes: "I have been troubled with salt rheum, or any pimple, for three years, and I tried all I did not know what to do. I tried everything, but nothing seemed to do any good. I saw a box of Burdock Blood Bitters and bought two bottles of it, and now I am perfectly cured and have no salt rheum on my hands any more.

"I cannot speak too highly of Burdock Blood Bitters."

Neilson's Chocolates

The Chocolates That Are Different

The first enticing piece of Neilson's Chocolates you taste, will show you how different are these delicious confections.

To secure the richness of flavor and delicacy that are inseparable with Neilson's "Hard Centers", we use rich, sweet cream—and make the centers only firm enough to be easily eaten. To keep these centers just right—neither too soft nor too hard—is the perfection of candy-making—and Neilson's "Hard Centers" are as perfect as they are different.

The chocolate coating forms a thick, firm, crisp shell perfectly enveloping each wholesome centre.

All these chocolates have the "Extreme Spit Dip", it's a Neilson specialty—exclusive with Neilson's Chocolates de Luxe—another touch of distinction that makes them different.

Perhaps you prefer Creams to "Hard Centers"—or "Cherries in Maraschino Chocolate Dipped" to either. You can get all three under the Neilson name—also 30 other packages of these different Chocolates.

If you cannot get Neilson's Chocolates in your neighborhood, send 50c. for a pound box of the most delicious assorted Chocolates you ever tasted.

The Famous Rayo

Gives the Best Light at Any Price

When you pay more than the Rayo price for a lamp, you are paying for extra decorations that cannot add to the quality of the light. You can't pay for a better light, because there is none. As oil light has the least effect on the human eye, so the Rayo Lamp is the best oil lamp made though low in price. You can pay $6, $10 or $20 for some other lamp, and although you get a more costly lamp, you can get a better light than the white, mellow diffused, unstraining light of the low priced Rayo.

Has a strong, durable chain-burner. This burner's burner adds to the strength and appearance. Made of solid brass, nickeled, and easily cleaned.

THE FRIENDSHIP

A Short Story

"Lawson, our chief man out there, has tried one or two others but they have turned out failures. Seven hundred pounds a year goes with the post."

Deakin had himself fired the answer, which, in his youth, had described to him solid respectability, and, in spite of his present uneasiness vanished, he retained his old feeling about it.

"That's pretty good pay," observed Appleby, obviously interested.

There was a long pause.

"I say, Appleby," said Deakin abruptly. "It occurs to me that you might come forward to our assistance."

"I?" stammered Appleby. "The idea is rather sudden."

"I fail to see why a sudden idea should be worse than any other kind of idea," observed Deakin. "Don't you think, we both ought to seize such an opportunity of identifying our interests?"

VII.

So Appleby once more packed his portmanteau and Deakin and his wife saw him off at the Albert Docks. The Alderman, though agitated and not free from misgiving, comforted himself with the thought that Appleby need only stay out there a few years to put by enough for the remainder of his life—for the salary could by-and-by be raised; and, after all, it was better that a man of Appleby's parts should be earning a good income than that he should be living idly in poverty and absolutely wasting his faculties.

The Deakins were indeed disturbed for a long time after he had sailed, but when cheerful letters began to arrive, they plucked up heart again, feeling what had been done was in deed for the best. The outside world was by no means uninterested by the unexpected new chapter and freely expressed its approval.

Soon the correspondence had re-established itself as of old, and Deakin and his wife both brightened up under the renewed regime. Mrs. Deakin, who had been ailing for some time, speedily recovered and eagerly gave her energies to the composition of periodic epistles; while Deakin himself beamed on his staff, overwhelming all with kindness. Appleby, he was delighted to find, was performing his duties with complete success, and had started a London banking account. And as it dawned on the Alderman how fruitful his idea had proved, his last doubts disappeared. To be able to associate his friend with seven hundred pounds a year and an increasing nest-egg instead of with the street of one-storey houses and petty clerks and carpenters, gave him an abiding satisfaction. As regards fortune, the gap between them was of course still measureless; nevertheless the friendship now seemed more logical, more in the right order of things; whereas before it had been one of the wild, alogical facts of the universe. The near prospect too of occupying the Civic Chair contributed not a little to his general exhilaration and he looked forward to recording [illegible] Appleby's sympathetic admiration and enjoyment the memorable events of a glorious year of office. How much less purple would all the coming splendours have seemed were there no Appleby to receive their radiations!

Appleby, on his part, found the sensation of being so well-off not at all disagreeable. And besides, on the Naval Frontbench, hearing of his friend's departure, had suggested he should keep a friendly eye of inspection on a newer institution of theirs at Hong Kong, he once more enjoyed the sunnier pleasure of inditing reports that began with "My Lord Duke, my Lords, & Gentlemen."

But no doubt this happy order of things drew the envy of the gods. We may not flaunt our joys unless with a redrowning sense of possible calamity and a pious trust it may be averted, as mortals were more mindful thousands of years ago than they are to-day.

Appleby had left England in Spring sunshine and the never failing sparkle of his letters had preserved a continuity of gay freshness even through the winter days. So that when for once his scrupulous punctuality was broken and an over-due letter, arriving quite three weeks beyond its time explained its lateness by the indisposition of the writer, they did not feel any real anxiety, so bright and jesting was its tone throughout, so firm the penmanship. He had had a sort of low fever, he said, but he minimised its importance and did not dwell on the subject for more than a few lines out of the usual score of pages. Never having had the habit of anxiety about Appleby's health, for he had had scarcely a day's illness in his life, they did not think of distrusting his optimistic account of himself. It was only after they had posted their own reply that the thought of his illness, lingering in their minds, began to torment them. Perhaps after all there might be ground for alarm.

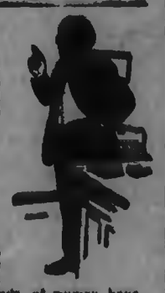
The fear grew on them and at last Deakin determined to send a cablegram of enquiry. Impulsively he dashed off a long message.

Five hours later the answer was flashed back:

"Appleby suddenly stricken down again buried yesterday was about to notify—Lawson."

"My God!" moaned the Alderman, as his wife fell sobbing on his shoulder. "And it was I who made him go out there again!"

Strong Healthy Women



If a woman is strong and healthy in a womanly way, motherhood means to her but little suffering. The trouble lies in the fact that the many women suffer from weakness and disease of the distinctly feminine organism and are unfitted for motherhood. This can be remedied.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription

Cures the weaknesses and disorders of women. It acts directly on the delicate and important organs concerned in motherhood, making them healthy, strong, vigorous, virile and elastic.

"Favorite Prescription" banishes the unpleasantness of the period of expectancy and makes baby's advent easy and almost painless. It quickens and vitalizes the feminine organs, and insures a healthy and robust baby. Thousands of women have testified to its marvelous merits.

It Makes Weak Women Strong. It Makes Sick Women Well.

Honest druggists do not offer substitutes, and urge them upon you as "just as good." Accept no secret nostrum in place of this non-secret remedy. It contains not a drop of alcohol and not a grain of habit-forming or injurious drug—it is a pure glycerin extract of healing, native American roots.

200,000 TOPKNOTS OFF FALSE HAIR TAKES DROP

Washington, Dec. 10.—Consul E. Carleton Baker, at Antung, Korea, in writing of the trade in human hair has some interesting things to say His report follows:

"Since the annexation of Korea by Japan a large number of Koreans have cut off their topknots and many are bringing them across the river to sell at Antung. In consequence of this increased supply of human hair, the price has fallen considerably. While the local price for the cheapest quality of Korean hair was formerly twenty cents (United States currency) per ounce, it has recently dropped to about twelve cents.

"A semi-official Japanese publication has recently stated that about 200,000 Koreans have amputated their topknots in connection with the annexation. It is further stated that the stimulus thus given to the temporial art has been such that over ten barber shops have been opened in one small town in North Korea. If this haircutting epidemic continues to spread there may be such a glut in the market that rats, puffs, switches and other such prevalent devices may become so cheap that they may cease to be a distinguishing mark of the up-to-date woman."

THE WORTH OF FRUITS

Both Food and Medicine

"Fruit-a-tives" is made of juices of fresh, ripe fruit.

"Besides containing sugar, mucilage and other matter as food, apples by their acid and aromatic principles, act powerfully in the capacity of tonics and antiseptics and when freely used they prevent debility, strengthen digestion, correct the putrefactive tendency of intemperate foods, avert scurvy, and counteract the poisons of productive labor. If our friends would only provide themselves with apples, we venture to say that not one tenth or perhaps fifty tenth part of the sickness and mortality would exist for ensuing death to visit."

Extract from Horticultural Society.

"Fruit-a-tives" is made of the fresh juices of apples, oranges, figs and prunes. "Fruit-a-tives" contains all the medicinal principles found in these fruits, combined with valuable tonics and intestinal antiseptics.

"Fruit-a-tives" is more valuable than fresh fruit because "Fruit-a-tives" gives you all the power of the fruit without the rough fibre which often proves a bar to digestion.

50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, trial size, 25c. At dealers or sent on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

RETOUCHED PHOTO LOSES HUSBAND, CAUSES SUIT

MILWAUKEE, WIS., DEC. 13.—

PILES [illegible] DR. CHASE'S OINTMENT

The skill of the photographer in "touching up" pictures has been a boon to mankind on many occasions, but it proved a doubtful advantage to her, according to Mrs. Johanna Link, whose suit for $2,000 damages for breach of promise against George Odenwalt is on trial before Judge Bagley.

Mrs. Link has been married since the alleged refusal of Odenwalt to keep a promise to marry her, but that has not prevented her from bringing the suit.

According to Mrs. Link, the marriage was arranged by the parents and those of Odenwalt. The prospective bridegroom, then in America, was permitted to see a photograph of his bride-to-be, who was in Europe, and he is said to have expressed his willingness to be united for life to the original. When they met Odenwalt refused to abide by his promise.

Romance Commenced In A Tree

COLUMBUS, IND., DEC. 13.—The marriage of Miss Jessie Wells and C. E. Stoghill, which has just taken place at Indianapolis, was the result of a pretty romance which began in a tree here twelve years ago.

On the evening of March 30, 1898, a Pennsylvania passenger train plunged into a stream when a culvert had been washed away by a flood. Stoghill, the fireman, left his cab, but was forced down the stream by the current. He climbed into a tree against which he floated, and he remained there all night, as no one dared attempt his rescue.

All night he climbed up and down the tree, wearing all the bark off it in an effort to keep from freezing to death, and when he was rescued the next morning he was more dead than alive. He was taken to the City Hospital, where he was nursed back to life by Miss Jessie Wells.

He was married then, but his wife died two years ago, and in due time he sought out the woman who had saved his life and married her.

MUST GO TO ITALY TO FACE CHARGE

Young Peter Charlton, confessed slayer of his fascinating wife, Mary Scott Castle, in an international tragedy with two Americans as the principal figures, has been told that he must answer to Italy for his crime.

In the country where by his own amazing confession he clubbed his wife into insensibility, hid her in a trunk, and then threw her into beautiful Lake Como, the youthful slayer must stand trial, according to a decision of the State Department at Washington just reached.

The ruling ends a fight of six months, during much of which time it seemed as if Charlton was to go free. Powerful friends of the young man have been battling to prevent his extradition to Italy. They argued that extradition treaty of 1868 had been abrogated by Italy through the refusal to surrender Italian citizens accused of crime in this country, and that, therefore, there was no legal basis for the Government holding Charlton.

HUNTED BY POLICE OF THE WORLD

Charlton has been a prisoner in Hoboken ever since his arrest as he stepped from the liner Princess Irene on June 24, fourteen days after the finding of the trunk containing the body of his three months' bride in Italy. He was hunted by the police of two continents, and caught through the clever work of Captain Henry Harrison Scott, brother of the victim, and the Hoboken sleuths.

His battle to escape punishment for his remarkable crime has, like the crime itself, attracted international interest. The first attempt of his father, Judge Charlton, of Washington, to have his son declared insane was defeated when Judge Blair, in the Hudson County Court, refused to admit the evidence of alienists. He held that the question of sanity must be settled when Charlton came to trial. It was made known later that eminent alienists considered the boy, for he is only twenty-two, irresponsible.

The case was turned over to the State Department and a request for the prisoner's surrender was received from the Italian Government. A deadlock between the State Department an dthe Italian Foreign Office followed. It was held that Secretary Knox held out for a stipulation that the Italian Government would agree to surrender to future Italians who commit crimes in this country and take refuge in their native land. The decision to surrender leaves Charlton as his only resort a recourse to habeas corpus proceedings, which may carry the case to the Supreme Court.

Charlton's bride was a belle famous in this Province nearly a decade ago as Mary Scott. In 1897 she married Jerrie Castle, of San Francisco, and her enormous extravagance are said to have ruined him. Following, who had a sensational career on the stage. Her attachment for an actor separated the pair and the heroine on prince's model, came that, tried to kill William B. Craig, a lawyer, in a hotel lobby here, and shortly after married young Charlton. The rest of the story is told in Charlton's astounding confession, given to the police an hour after his arrest.

PETERBOROUGH WEDNESDAY DECEMBER 14 1910

"I'LL BURN DOWN THEIR BARN TO-NIGHT" WITNESS SAYS SHE HEARD ACCUSED SAY

Some Interesting Evidence Heard This Afternoon—Mrs. McFadden Says Wilson Struck Her and Abused Her and Made Threats.

QUARREL OVER A PIG

The arson charge against James Wilson of Apsley, of having burned down the barns of his neighbour. McFadden, which commenced before Judge Huycke, this morning, was continued this afternoon, and some sensational evidence was adduced.

Mrs. Ezra McFadden was the first witness called in the afternoon. She was at home on Saturday, June 4. She saw Wilson at her home about 8 o'clock in the evening. Her husband, Louis Coons and herself, were there when McAvely and Wilson came. There was a pig came into the yard, and she wanted to know who it belonged to. Wilson claimed the pig.

Wilson said to her: "If you don't tell me where that pig went you will suffer this night." She told him it went down the road. He turned and called her a filthy name and struck her. He threw her down and held her until her husband made him let her up. A number of boys, including her own two sons, were coming up the road. She heard Wilson say to young Hales: "I'll burn down their barn to-night." She went down the road with a stick and told him to move on home and he said: "I will have either John's life or yours to-night." Some minutes later she saw the barn was on fire. She ran to the top of the hill and she saw Wilson running from the barn. He was only about 15 yards from it. Witness said there was no doubt but that the man was Wilson.

To Mr. O'Connell witness said that the Wilsons and they were always on friendly terms. Wilson gave them the lumber to build the barn. They paid him ten dollars for it. They never had any trouble until the night of June 4th.

BELMONT COUPLE ARRESTED ON CHARGE OF NON-SUPPORT

Samuel Davis and His Wife Taken Into Custody Sixteen Miles North of Apsley by Constable Williams, of Havelock---Still More Serious Charge Against Husband ---Are in Gaol Here.

Constable Elias Williams came up from Havelock this morning, having in custody Samuel Davis of Belmont, and his wife, and they were lodged in the County Jail. The arrests come as a result of the investigation conducted by Inspector Gunton of the Department of Neglected and Dependent Children, and Mr. Geo. Cochrane, the local agent of the Children's Aid Society last week The Davis children were taken away from their make-shift home and brought to the Shelter here, where they are now being looked after. Mr. Cochrane sent a warrant down to Constable Williams, asking for the arrest of the parents and to execute it the Havelock official had to drive sixteen miles north of Apsley, where Davis was trapping. They will appear before Magistrate Edmison this afternoon on a charge of non-support and there is a more serious charge to be laid against Davis.

Industrial Commissioner Explains The Bonner-Worth By-law To Be Submitted

December 13th, 1910.

To the Editor of The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—Will you devote sufficient space to admit of an answer to Ratepayer's objection to the Bonner-Worth Company, Limited, by-law.

A careful perusal of the communication leaves the impression that Ratepayer is merely using this by-law as an excuse for expressing his disapproval of the present City Council, for he fails to advance any logical argument against the measure. Possibly a little further explanation of the facts may tend to modify Ratepayer's opposition.

The loan of $12,000 by the city to The Bonner-Worth Company, is conditional on their carrying out certain guarantees, and the failure on the part of The Bonner-Worth Company to comply with the conditions, means that the whole amount immediately becomes due and payable. One of these conditions is that they employ a certain number of hands, and naturally business precaution would prompt the company to place the number as low as possible to provide for such contingencies as trade depressions, a failure of the supply of raw materials, etc., etc. As a matter of fact, The Bonner-Worth Company will probably start operations with not less than 50 hands, and from what I personally know of the business already offered them, it is not only possible, but highly probable, that their capacity and working force will be doubled within two years.

It may not be amiss to figure out for Ratepayer, just exactly what this loan of $12,000 means to the city.

For an average annual interest charge of the loan over the whole period, which amounts to $292.00 per year, there will be expended in wages some $23,600 annually, and as the principal has been amply secured, it would seem that the Council had shown exceptionally good business judgment in making the deal they have with this Company. If there is to be any further public discussion of this question, I would suggest that Ratepayer subscribe his name to his communication instead of concealing his identity behind an anonymous nom de plume.

Yours truly,
H. V. DUGGAN.
Industrial Commissioner.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

Yesterday I named over some of the articles which, by a canvass of masculine ideas on the subject of proper Christmas gifts for themselves, I found to be strong first favourites.

For to-day I promised to mention some of the also-rans.

Leather articles, for some reason, presumably because they can hardly be fussy or loud, have the almost universal stamp of masculine favour. So if you are at your wits 'end as to what to get for father, or brother Henry or Cousin John, or just Dick, I suggest that you step into a leather store and look around. Leather cases for travelling appurtenances, leather bill folders, address books, diaries, card cases, memorandum books—almost anything of this sort ought to solve your masculine puzzle. The small soft leather bags, which so many men carry to and from their work are another desirable in this line.

As to whether jewelery of any kind makes an acceptable gift for a man, is a point on which men differ. Cuff links, scarf pin, shirt studs and watch fobs are among the few possibilities in this line. But if you venture in this direction you had better remember two or three things. In the first place, while a woman can hardly have too much jewellery a man can, and if he has one pair of cuff links, one or three scarf pins, one watch fob and a set of shirt studs the average man does not care for anything more along that line. In the second place, make simplicity the emphatic key note of your selection, and in the third place be sure it's conventional. The distinctly new, smart thing that delights a woman's heart usually appalls a man as altogether too "flashy."

There are two gifts which no man thinks a woman can select for him, and which every woman thinks she is the one exception to her sex who can select.

Of course you know what they are—ties and cigars.

Such a task it is like to have a woman give him ties for Christmas and you have dangled a red rag in the bull's eye. The temptation at once to tell you of some of the suffering he has undergone in this line. A cousin of mine insisted that I accompany him to his room and let him illustrate his tale of woe for me, and when I saw some of the outrages in green with blue stripes, brown tastefully combined with blue, lavender with Mulish polka dots, I acknowledged he had indeed been a martyr. His last exhibit was a red and orange stripe. He held it up to my admiration. "Would anybody be caught dead at a dog fight with a thing like that on?" he queried. Much to my surprise the tie was in tatters. "But you seem to have worn it a good deal," I pointed out. He grinned unabashed. "Guess not," he said. "When I heard the aunt who gave it to me was coming to the house I did that with my knife. Pretty clever piece of work I flatter myself. Fooled you, didn't it, Ruthie, and it fooled her, too."

Which incident I relate to put my feminine readers on their guard against similar masculine duplicity.

Personally I think men are much more rampant on this subject than they need be. Some women pick out red and orange ties but that is no reason for condemning all women's taste. I thoroughly believe that as strong is this unreasoning masculine prejudice, that if a woman bought him a plain black tie or a box of the cigars he smokes every day, he would say the tie was too loud and the cigars were impossible.

However, since they do not feel that way, and there are plenty of other gifts for men I suppose these two are the most honoured in the breach.

A match box, by the way, is another article peculiarly most desirable, which will probably not receive a masculine welcome. I have tried very hard to find out why this is, and have been given the varying reasons that the boxes do not hold enough matches, are too short for the common matches, and take up too much room and are too much bother to fill at.

Pipelets, white shirts, smoking things, pinwers, a dressing set, pocket knife, and fountain pen are among the other articles mentioned as desirable.

MEET ON TUESDAY

T. A. B. Ladies' Literary to Have Dickens Evening and Christmas Play by Children

St. Peter's Ladies' Literary Society will not meet on Friday. The meeting is postponed until Tuesday, Dec. 20th, so as not to clash with the Mount St. Joseph's Bazaar. This will be the last meeting for the year 1910, and as a finale the executive are giving the strongest programme so far. The star attraction will be Mr. W. J. O'Brien's address on Dickens, together with selected readings from his works by some very able reciters. Quite a novelty will be the little Christmas play by fifteen (15) children of St. Marys and St. Peter's schools, entitled "The First Christmas," or "The Story of Christ-child in fifteen pictures," adapted by the Rev. Fr. Casey. In addition, the pupils of St. Peter's and St. Mary's will give appropriate choruses. It is unnecessary to bespeak a full house as those who have attended previous meetings can testify.

OFFICERS ELECTED

There was a large attendance of members at the regular meeting of Court Stanley, No. 7660, A.O.F. held last night in S.O.E. Hall, the Chief Ranger, Bro. Brotherson presiding. One candidate was duly initiated. After the business had been concluded, P. C. R. Bro. T. Hendry took the chair, when the following officers were duly elected for the ensuing year:

C. R.—Bro. A. Brotherson, accl.
S. C. R.—Bro. F. Pratt.

"DUNELM" IS GONE

Wreckers Abandoned the Wrecked Steamer and Big Waves are Dashing Her to Pieces on the Rocks

$250,000 WILL BE LOSS

Special Wire to The Examiner.

FORT WILLIAM, ONT., DEC. 14.—The wreckers last night abandoned the steamer "Dunelm," to the underwriters, and this morning great waves are dashing the big grain vessel to pieces on the rocks. Thousands of bushels of the best wheat are submerged and saturated. The Inland Navigation Co. owns the steamer, and Richardson & Sons the cargo. The loss is a quarter of a million dollars.

MARRIED AT KINGSTON

A Wedding of Much Local Interest Took Place This Morning

Examiner Special.

KINGSTON, ONT., DEC. 14. — A large congregation gathered in St. George's this morning to witness the marriage of Miss Evelyn Amy Rogers, second daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. F. J. Rogers, to Mr. Percy Gerald Cadogan Campbell, Professor of Queen's University, son of Rev. C. C. and Mrs. Campbell, of Fledborough Rectory, Newark, Nottinghamshire, England. The ceremony, fully choral, was performed by the Dean of Ontario. Miss Gwendolyn Hall, of Peterborough, was bridesmaid, and Mr. Ernest Dawson was groomsman.

COMPLETE VICTORY

Mayor Evans and His Council and Board of Control Re-elected

Special Wire to the Examiner.

WINNIPEG, DEC. 14. — Not only was Mayor Evans re-elected, but his entire council, and board of control went with him to victory, which is taken as an emphatic endorsation of the segregation system.

ELECTION PROTEST

Special to The Examiner.

SHERBROOKE, DEC. 14.—The election of Gilbert, the Nationalist, in Drummond and Arthabaska has been protested on usual general ground of bribery and corruption. Seeppering Lablance, a cheeseman here, is the complainant.

ENJOYABLE DANCE

A very enjoyable dance was held in the Conservatory of Music Hall last night under the auspices of the Bachelors of the City. There was a large attendance and the evening was one of unmitigated enjoyment. Splendid music was supplied by Mr. Musgrave of Toronto. The committee in charge of which Mr. C. Ross Cameron was honorary secretary, have reason to feel satisfied at the success scored.

FOR BOY SCOUTS

The Princess Theatre has a picture to-day that will prove of special interest to the Boy Scouts of Peterborough, and that should be seen by every member of the patrols. The film in question shows some of the Boy Scouts of the United States at their annual camp at Silver Bay, and gives a splendid idea of their daily routine of duty and pastime. The picture is very clear and life-like On the same reel is a splendid picture entitled "Riders of the Plains" a story of Indian horse stealing at Regina, Canada and the chase and capture of the thieves by our Royal North West Mounted Police.

More room has been arranged for at the Bazaar for to-morrow, and those will be amply accommodated for all. A lot of [illegible] that lunch prepared, and a big supply is expected. Come in and have dinner and supper.

LEG WAS BROKEN

Nine-Year-Old Pearl Valois Fell Beneath a Heavy Wood Sleigh Yesterday and Was Badly Injured

UNFORTUNATE ACCIDENT

While getting a ride on a wood-sleigh on Concession street, Pearl Valois, the nine-year-old daughter of Mr. Chas. Valois, East City, met with a very painful accident yesterday afternoon. In some manner she slipped and fell beneath the sleigh, the runners of which passed over her, with the result that she sustained a fracture of the leg. She is resting as easily as could be expected under the circumstances to-day.

SENATE REFUSED

OTTAWA, DEC. 14.—"We will have to have a veto act in this country," said Mr. Carvell in the Public Accounts committee this morning, when word came that the Senate declined to produce certain vouchers of dealings which the committee decided to investigate. The matter may be contested.

A Liberal Offer

We Guarantee to Cure Dyspepsia If We Fail the Medicine Costs Nothing

To unquestionably prove to the people that indigestion and dyspepsia can be permanently relieved and that Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets will bring about this result, we will furnish the medicine absolutely free if it fails to give satisfaction to any one using it.

The remarkable success of Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets is due to the high degree of scientific skill used in devising their formula as well as to the care exercised in their manufacture, whereby the well known properties of Bismuth-Subnitrate and Pepsin have been combined with Carminatives and other agents.

Bismuth-Subnitrate and Pepsin are constantly employed and recognized by the entire medical profession as invaluable in the treatment of indigestion and dyspepsia.

The Pepsin used in Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets is prepared by a process which develops its greatest efficiency. Pepsin supplies to the digestive apparatus one of the most important elements of the digestive fluid, and without it the digestion and assimilation of food are impossible.

The carminatives possess properties which aid in relieving the disturbances and pain caused by undigested food. This perfect combination of these ingredients makes a remedy invaluable for the complete relief of indigestion and dyspepsia.

We are so certain of this that we urge you to try Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets on our own personal guarantee. Three sizes, 35 cents, 50 cents and $1.00. Remember you can obtain Rexall Remedies only at The Rexall Store, McDermid and Jury's, corner George and Charlotte streets.

POLICE COURT

A man named Robert Shuter was arraigned in the Police Court this morning on a charge of being found drunk. He pleaded guilty and was given $1.00 or ten days. He could not find the fine, so will put in ten days on the hill. It appears he was found in a wood yard sleeping last night, and when found was nearly frozen.

A local young man appeared on three charges, two of assault and one of using grossly insulting language to another citizen. He pleaded not guilty to all three charges. He was proven not guilty of one charge of assault and the other one was dismissed. He was convicted, however, of using the insulting language, and a fine of $1.00 and costs, amounting to $4.00, was imposed. The fine was paid.

WEEDMARK PAYS PENALTY ON SCAFFOLD AT PERTH FOR HIS WIFE'S MURDER

Showed Phenomenal Nerve and Met Death Without Flinching---Seemed Very Hopeful of the Hereafter---Daughter Imprisoned in the Same Gaol For Theft Until a Few Days Ago

ONLY THE OFFICIALS AND CLERGY SAW THE EXECUTION

Special wire to The Examiner:

PERTH, ONT., DEC. 14.—Rufus Weedmark, who, in the presence of his children, brutally murdered his wife, on April 13th, last, was hanged this morning in the death-room of the county jail, here. Only the necessary officials and clergymen saw the execution. They say he possessed phenomenal nerve and met death without flinching, very hopeful of the hereafter. He slept well last night, rose without being called, said his prayers and ate a good breakfast. A pathetic feature of the situation is that up to a few days ago his daughter was imprisoned in the same jail for theft.

REASONS FOR SEEING THE BELMONT CLUB MINSTRELS

Some reasons why the Belmont Minstrels will have a good show, and why everyone should see the entertainment by one who has seen the rehearsals:

Because the show is packed full of ginger from start to finish.

Because the jokes are brought right down to date.

Because it abounds in tuneful music.

Because there is not a moment's delay in the whole programme. No tiresome waits.

Because the olio is a series of features that are bound to make a hit.

Because of the pretty setting and costumes of the first part.

Because everything is new and novel.

Because it is widely different from some amateur minstrels we have seen.

JUDGMENT GIVEN IN FAVOUR OF THE PLAINTIFF FOR FULL AMOUNT AND COSTS

The case of W. R. Morris, Chartered Accountant, versus the firm of Frost & Wood, to recover $174, in payment of work done by the plaintiff for the defendant Company, was concluded this morning, His Honour Judge Huycke giving judgment for the amount asked, and also the costs of the action. The case occupied yesterday afternoon, and part of this morning. Mr. W. H. Moore, K.C., counsel for the defendants, made his summing up this morning, after which His Honour gave judgment. The firm of Bennet and Goodwill appeared for the plaintiff.

FAMILY SAID TO HAVE SEEN ACCUSED RUNNING FROM BARN ON NIGHT OF FIRE

The case of Joseph Wilson, of Burleigh, charged with having committed arson in burning down the barn of Ezra McFadden on June 4th last was commenced before His Honour Judge Huycke at the court house this morning.

The following jurors were called and unchallenged: Wm. Cavanagh, A. Davidson, Ed. Garbut, Robt. Cameron, W. J. Sanderson, John R. Bothwell, John Anderson, Peter Thompson, G. Dormer, Wm. Renwicke, R. Armstrong, Wm. Bolton.

Crown Attorney Wood in his remarks to the jury, stated that the barn of Edward McFadden was burned on June 4th. The evidence at the preliminary hearing was that several members of the family saw the accused running away between 9 and 10 o'clock on that night, and he had also made threats that he was going to burn it.

Ezra McFadden was the first witness called. He said that he lived in the township of Burleigh. The prisoner came to his house the night of June 4th at 7 o'clock. He had been drinking. The last witness saw of him that night, he was sitting on the side of the road. Then shortly after someone said the barn was on fire. He ran to let the horses out. Wilson hadn't made any threats to him. The barn was completely burned and everything in it, save one horse.

To Mr. O'Connell, witness said his home was five miles from Apsley on the Apsley road. The barn was 174 feet from the house. Wilson lived on a lot adjoining the west end of witness' place.

"Was there any drinking going on?" Mr. O'Connell asked.

Witness said that Michael McAvely had a bottle of whiskey. McFadden had about two tablespoonfuls, but it was not good whiskey, and he did not take any more. The boys brought the horses to the stable about dark. John McFadden son of the witness, said he went to the house for a bag of grain and when he returned to the barn it was all ablaze.

The court then adjourned for luncheon.

WESTERN FARMERS WILL ASK FOR MANY CHANGES

Special Wire to the Examiner.

SUDBURY, ONT. DEC. 14. — (On board Western Farmers' Special Train)—Nearly four hundred well-to-do farmers, representing thirty millions of invested capital in Canada's granary, are speeding towards Ottawa, where they will meet other agriculturists from Central Canada and the East and make demands on the government for many reforms in their direction. They say they are going to put it up to Sir Wilfrid to fulfill some promises he made when touring the west last year. Among other things they will demand abolition of duties on agriculture, implements and timber and lower duties on sugar, iron, cement, leather, manufacturers and hardware.

SHARES FOR SALE IN THE NEW NAVIGATION COMPANY

In another column is to be found the advertisement of the Industrial Financial Company, of Toronto, which offers for sale, at par, 500 shares of $100 each of the Peterborough and Lake Simcoe Navigation Company. This is a local enterprise and should be welcomed and aided by local encouragement. We all know what a successful and paying proposition the Kawartha water transit enterprise has proved. They are constantly growing in popularity and the increasing rush of tourist travel, points to a most profitable business for a well equipped and well managed navigation company like the Peterborough and Lake Simcoe. The advertisement promises a ten per cent. profit on the shares it offers. The reader is urged to consult carefully the advertisement in another column. Here is a splendid chance to patronize home enterprise.

PATRIOTISM AND POLITICS.

British members of parliament can lay claim to considerable patriotism in making the sacrifices that must be made, or, at least, are made, to enter and sit in Parliament. It is to be borne in mind that members of the British parliament get no indemnity. Canadian members of Parliament and of the Senate get $4,000 each a session, as a quid pro quo in respect of the loss they sustain in neglecting their business, to attend to the more noble business of saving the country. Not only do British members get no indemnity, but the sessions of Parliament are much longer, and besides that, it costs rather a pretty penny to conduct a campaign. A good many expenses which in Canada are borne by the government, in Britain fall upon the aspiring candidate. Some light is thrown on this by the British blue book dealing in detail with the election contest of last January. From it we learn that Joseph Martin's actual returned expenses were $3,749, or 75 cents per vote polled. His unsuccessful opponents had to pay $3,525, or 80c. per vote. Donald Macmaster had to pay $5,586, or about 80c. per vote polled, while his unsuccessful opponent spent $9,086, or about $1.45 per vote polled. Mr. Hamar Greenwood's expenses in York are bracketed with those of Mr. Rowntree, his colleague, and amounted to $7,410, or an average of 45 cents per vote. Sir Gilbert Parker spent $3,300, or 85 cents per vote. Bonar Law spent $9,800, or 91 cents per vote.. These examples are all of Canadian politicians who have invaded the home field of politics, and the expenses mentioned are all legitimate expenses, and of course do not include, perhaps, some persuasion of a pecuniary character.

WATER TYPHOID, ETC.

Dr. Eugene H. Porter of New York State Health Commissioner, in an address says that, while typhoid is a water-borne disease, it does not all come from bad water. However, he points out the instructive fact of what water improvement will do. Lowell, Mass, before filtration, had a death rate from typhoid of 121 per 100,000; after filtration the rate fell to 20 per 100,000. Albany, New York, before filtration of the city water supply, had a typhoid death rate of 104, after filtration, the rate fell to 24. Watertown, before filtration, had a death rate from typhoid of 60; after filtration a rate of 19.9. Binghampton, N.Y., before filtration, had a typhoid death rate of 49; after filtration, one of 11. These is demonstrated the importance of pure or pretty water for drinking and domestic purposes. As far as Peterboro supply is concerned, however, there is not much fault to find, this is no member it in relation to typhoid. We have had a considerable number of typhoid cases in our hospitals; but the most of them have come from outside points, and, of those of local origin, very few, if any, can be traced in the matter of causation, to the use of city water. Flies, having access to typhoid excreta, and afterwards alighting on our food, are a greater peril of infection, than city water. Garbage breeds flies, and thus it comes to pass that garbage collection and removal are matters which should lead our Board of Health to give our city fathers a little healthy prodding. Last year's Council slept all the year, and at the last business meeting awoke long enough to complete the shirking act in respect to garbage disposal by indifferently turning the matter over to the incoming council. With our changing membership we cannot have anything like a fixed or definite policy upon anything, even in matters that affect our health and our lives.

A GREAT WORK.

The Barnardo Homes in their beneficent work have in the past 44 years rescued 72,500 children from vice and almost certain crime, of whom the majority are now respected and useful members of Christian communities in Canada and elsewhere. To appreciate the importance of this work one has only to reflect upon the conditions from which these children have been rescued, as well as upon the children rescued by a kindred agency, the Children's Aid Society of Peterboorugh. One has only to consider whether there is any more pathetic possibility, than a distressed, starved, beaten, unclad and abused child, especially, when to the physical ill-treatment there is added, the horrible influence of vicious example, vicious training, almost certain, unless rescue is effected, to lead to lives of prostitution in respect of girls, and of crime in the case of boys. Mothers might realize these things more directly and appealingly if they were to try to imagine their own little darlings thrown upon the world and subjected to such sufferings and degrading influences as have been mentioned. There are thousands in Canada, many in this county, and no doubt many in this city, of children who, under present conditions, are exposed to cold and hunger and other suffering, as well as to moral degradation. The Children's Aid Society has rescued thousands who, like the children redeemed by the Barnardo Home work, are placed in happy, virtuous homes, and have grown up, or are growing up, respected and useful members of society. There are at present, in the Shelter, some sixteen, worse than orphaned children, and their maintenance in comfort and decency makes a large draft upon the funds of the society. Clothing has to be provided for the last dozen or so brought in from the county, practically naked. Kind hearted women have been working busily in sewing parties at the Shelter to clothe these little ones. There are hundreds of mothers in this city who have cast off clothing not considered good enough for their children, but which would be robes of state to the children at the Shelter, many of whom have never known what a comfortable, decent article of clothing is. The hint implied in such a statement should be enough. And, besides, Christmas is near, and in hundreds of happy homes preparations for delighting the children are being made. Shall the orphans at the Shelter be neglected?

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Last year 45,000 persons obtained naturalisation in Canada. Of these 7,200 were formerly citizens of the United States. Since July, 1900, Canada has added to its population by immigration 1,456,391, of whom 382,604 were British, and 407,892 came from the United States.

The Hamilton Spectator gives the following timely municipal advice: "Business management of to-day, to be successful, must be the work of experts. Even more necessary is it that municipal management should be in the hands of men who have been tried out and proved to be fit and competent to plan and produce not for the day alone, but for the future as well.

The British Tory organizer, says the Hamilton Times, who has been threatening rebellion in Ulster if the supporters of Home Rule win in the elections—otherwise, if the Tories are not returned to power — ought to get a term in prison. Not that Ulster is likely to rise in rebellion; but the politician who seeks to influence voters by suggesting such methods of intimidation should be dealt with as an inciter to treason.

ULSTER'S GROUNDLESS FEARS.

(London Advertiser.)

The bitterest contests in the United Kingdom have been those between the two factions of the Nationalist party. There had been serious rioting in several of the constituencies where the Redmondites and O'Brienites had the field to themselves. Mr. John Redmond's brother, William, relinquished a safe seat to lead an unsuccessful attack upon O'Brien's stronghold, the city of Cork. The Redmondites have reclaimed themselves by driving Timothy Healy, the lieutenant of William O'Brien, out of Louth, which he has represented for eighteen years. Healy threatens reprisals in the courts, alleging corruption and intimidation. The animosity between the Redmondites and the O'Brienites is as furious as that between the home rulers and the Orangemen in Ulster.

The split in the Nationalist party, at a time when the fate of home rule is in the balance, and when home rulers have patriotic motives to sink all differences and present a united front, ought to reassure people who are frightened by the spectre of a Parliament at Dublin. There is a widespread impression that in a self-governing Ireland, the Protestant, non-Celtic minority would be under the heel of a solid Celtic and Catholic majority. This delusion takes no account of human nature, political history, and Hibernian temperament. If the external pressure of anti-Irish forces in the Imperial Parliament cannot drive the Nationalists together, how will they be solidified in an Irish Parliament, where they will be in the majority? It would be a miracle if the Irish Celts did not form at least two parties in an Irish Legislature. The Protestant minority would be courted by one or both, and would probably hold the balance of power. This is the history of powerful minorities in other countries. Ulster has nothing to fear from the re-establishment of a Parliament in the Emerald Isle.

TAXES AND THE RAILWAYS.

Farmers' Magazine

Canada is not yet ready for Government ownership, but she is ready for Government control. The United States have suffered too much from monopolies for us to follow suit. We must keep all Canadian companies under control or they will soon control us.

Canadian railways have so far been able to convince the members of parliament that they should not be taxed. In the United States the railways are taxed the same as land, so are the Canadian railways, according to the population per mile of railway. Yet, even with the tax they are able to control legislation as they please. The Canadian railways have succeeded in getting the British North America Act, the right to tax all properties in the province.

The figures given in the article in this issue, "Railway Protection," have been provided by the Railway Department at Ottawa and have not as yet been published in Blue Book reports. They should, therefore, be of interest. Notice that the province of Prince Edward Island taxes the railways at the rate of 40 cents per mile! Contrast this with the lowest rate of taxation in the United States, which is $148 per mile.

Different methods of taxation for railways have been offered. The assessment system was mentioned in our October issue. This the railways themselves think is more satisfactory, is taxing the gross receipts. They claim that the taxes should be according to the road's earning power. It does not matter which system is used as long as the railways pay their share for carrying on the Government.

The people of Canada have been very generous to the railways. To date they have given or assisted them to the extent of $64,909,019. At the present time they are paying taxes at the rate of about 3.5 mills on the dollar with an assessment of half their value. The farmers are paying almost three times this amount. Is this fair? The railways are as much dependent on the farmers as the latter are on the railways. Members of the Provincial Legislatures have been neglecting their duty in the past and have allowed the people who elected them to their positions to pay the greater part of the taxes which go to develop this country. Surely the railways are now past the experimental stage in Canada and are able to assist with the government of the country! All we ask for is fair play. No class should have to pay a heavier rate of taxes than another class. Railways do not need any more petting and coaxing. They say they are willing to do anything reasonable. It is reasonable that they pay as much taxes as the farmer. Then they should do so.

Romance Found In Blue Book Northwest Mounted Police

(London Advertiser.

Many people think of government blue-books as the bottomless pit of barren boredom, as the Sahara of printed literature. But there are oases in the worst of them, and so many in a book like the annual report of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police that the reader roams through a sequence of romantic and adventurous excitements, admist an abundance of information.

This year's report, just published, is not an exception to the rule. There is recent, unbiased information about mining, trapping and fur-trading, about crops, frosts and fires. The various officers and men, tell, however, principally of their experience in patrolling and ordering the vast western land, from the Montana border to Herschell Island. Here follows an extract from the report of Superintendend Deane, Calgary:

"The case of attempted murder is that against 'Sun-Calf, a Blackfoot Indian, who, in a drunkett fit, attacked his brother, 'Old Bull,' on the reserve in July, 1909, and nearly killed him.

"'Sun-Calf' had a month or so prior to this, stolen a horse from another Indian named 'Running Antelope,' and sold it. This incident came to light during 'Sun-Calf's' incarceration here on the assault charge. He was sent to Strathmore for his preliminary hearing, and on Sept. 13, 1909, was duly committed for trial on the charge of horse stealing.

"That night was exceptionally dark, and the constable would have done well if he had kept his prisoner there another day.

"He started with him, however, from his detachment building for the railway station soon after 1 o'clock, the prisoner being handcuffed and wearing his prison clothes. While on the road 'Sun-Calf' gave a sudden lurch, shook off the constable's hold, and, in his moccasined feet, disappeared in the darkness.

"In spite of the prolonged efforts to trace and recapture him, he made his way in course of time to the South Piegan reserve in Montana. He became involved in some contretemps there which caused his presence and identity to be revealed and from thence, through the good offices of Superintendent Wilson at Lethbridge, he was enabled to revisit his native country and answer the three charges which are now pending against him."

Not the naive sarcasm in the phrase, "he was enabled to revist his native country." Crime is far from prevalent under the watchful care of the Northwest Mounted Police, who are perhaps the finest body of the kind in the world. They look after the details as well as matters crude and crass. Constable Simons, whose beat is in Yukon Territory, writes as follows:

"On the 16th I left for Hiatt Creeks, reaching Mr. Middlecoll's workings at noon. I spoke to him about shooting moose out of season, and a summary of his statement to me is as follows:

"He has two men hunting for him, paying them wages for doing so, assuring them of protection in case of trouble. As he employs some 30 or 35 men, all of whom are prospectors in this district, he thus gives them a grub-stake. He has tried buying Indian meat, but it is dirty and will not keep, and his men refuse to eat it. He has given his men strict instructions to shoot bulls only, and from what he says his instructions are being carried out. He further states that if he is not allowed to have these men hunt to supply fresh meat he will have to close down his workings. He appears to be making good, although his expenses are very high. He pays $5 per day and board to the miners, and the board costs him in the neighbourhood of $2 per day owing to high freight charges."

Inspector Jennings is another interesting diarist, covering the district between Fort MacPherson and Herschel Isaldn. He is friendly to the Eskimo, and praises them as "a very healthy race." He writes:

"March 26, 1910—Left camp at 7.45 a.m. Colder, about 45 degrees below. Natives were cold during the night, and at 3 a.m. made fire in camp stove. Going heavy owing to light crust on deep snow. At 9.15 we made glare ice and began descending a long approach to the canyon, the entrance to which is called by the natives the 'Blow Hole.' We all rode, and in places could just keep the sleds off the dogs, the grade being 5 to 7 per cent. The mountain peaks are from 2,000 to 3,000 feet high. At 2 p.m. we entered the canyon, the river narrowing to 100 feet, and the sides ragged rock. No growth of any kind on them. This place would be extremely bad in which to be caught by a wind or snow storm. At 4.30 p.m. we came to a small bluff on which was a little dry wood and green wood, and here camped. Dogs tired, as the ice was very hard on them. Have now only one-half feed for dogs left. Mileage, 28.

"March 27, 1910—Left at 7.45 a.m., wind S.W., which was in our backs. Still very cold. From here on the canyon in some places only 50 feet, but very deep. It was fortunate we camped where we did last night, for we did not see any more wood of any kind for 25 miles, as until we arrived within 5 miles of the coast. De could not stop for lunch. Going hard, in some places glare ice and in others very deep snow. The canyon was very winding with a general direction N.E. At 3 p.m. we came to end of canyon, about 8 miles from coast, where river widens to 1?5 yards, and is shallow. Here we found an Eskimo family living, hunting sheep and deer, for the ship at Herschel. They had got 25 sheep and 5 deer so far. They gave us a warm welcome as is their custom, cooked some meat and tea for us and gave me some meat for the dogs. Put up our tent here on the river and camped. Mileage 52."

Such are the true pictures of the wild north. In these annual reports there is an endless store of raw materials to nnovels and epics. Out of such human stuff, these records of real heroism and duty, should be fashioned not only a great social organism, but a literature worthy to reflect the new Canadian life.

OPEN EVENINGS

NORWOOD ITEMS OF INTEREST

Examiner Special.

NORWOOD, DEC. 13.—Miss Mildred Forsyth, of Warkworth, was a guest of Miss Valerie Fry for a few days last week.

Miss Lita Herrington, of Havelock, visited Miss Shirley Morrison on Friday.

The bazaar and hot pork and bean supper given by the ladies of Christ's church on Thurs ay, December 8th, in the town hall, was well patronized and was a success financially.

Union services of the Methodist Presbyterian and Baptist congregations will be held in the Methodist church on Sunday morning and evening. Rev. W. E. Hassard representative of the Bible Society, will preach at both services and in the afternoon will preach at South Dummer.

Mr. H. G. Buck and family, Mrs. P. W. Reynolds and Miss Grace Reynolds left on Monday for Los Angeles, Cal., where they will remain during the winter.

Miss Clara Archer has returned to her home in Campbellford.

Mrs. (Dr.) Sutton and Mrs. John Weir spent Saturday in Peterborough.

The Christmas concert in connection with the Presbyterian church will be given on the evening of December 21. A good programme is being prepared.

Mrs. A. B. Greenbank is visiting friends in Lakefield.

Mrs. T. E. Finlay was in Toronto this week.

The students of the High school held their annual "At Home" on Friday evening in the town hall. Much credit is due those who took part in the drama, entitled, "All Charlie's Fault." The choruses by the school were well rendered.

Miss Holcomb left on Monday to visit her brother in Peterborough.

THE FEET IN PRISON

Tightly imprisoned in the modern shoe the feet perspire and the skin is chafed and irritated until it is in anything but a healthy condition. Corns and bunions are formed and walking becomes torture. Possibly you never thought of Dr. Chase's Ointment in this connection but it brings wonderful relief and comfort almost instantly. Its soothing, healing effects are magical.

XMAS GREETING CARDS

Samples of the most beautiful and appropriate Xmas Greeting Cards shown in the city, may be seen at the Examiner Office; large selection. Order early. Drop in and see samples Those requiring cards to mail to the Old Country should order at once, so that they may be supplied in time. tf

LARGE AUDIENCE HEARS MRS. M'CLUNG

A more interesting programme could not have been provided than that which was given at the Charlotte street lecture hall last evening, under the auspices of the Young Ladies' Mission. The gifted young authoress of "Sowing Seeds in Danny," and "The Second Chance," Mrs. Nellie McClung, assisted by a number of the artists of Peterborough, supplied the entertainment, and a more delighted audience never assembled than that which gathered at Charlotte street church on this occasion. Mrs. McClung, while possessing rare powers as a writer, is equally at home when it comes to expressing her works on the public platform. Her numbers last evening consisted of reciting chapters from her two books, and to those who were fortunate enough to be present, especially those who had previously read "Sowing Seeds in Danny" and "The Second Chance" it was a distinct treat to hear the characters in these stories portrayed in such vivid and lucid pictures, by the writer herself, who, knowing them best, can best delineate their traits of character and manners. Mrs. McClung possesses a striking personality which adds a certain charm and grace to her readings that is altogether most pleasing. She appeals to the humorous side of one's nature as well as in some of her items she touches the heart strings of sympathy and pathos. Her scenes as is generally known are laid in the Canadian Northwest, where she has lived and known the characters she writes about. Her recital last evening of the "Ladies' Aid Meeting" from "The Second Chance" kept her audience in fits of laughter. Then in her reading of "the house of trouble" she won the sympathy of all her hearers for the unfortunate little wife of Bill Nevers and his daughter Libby Ann, to whom this chapter has particular reference.

The chair at last night's entertainment was taken by His Honour Judge Huycke. After a spirited instrumental duet by Misses Clarry and Campbell, Judge Huycke said that the large and intelligent audience before him, was, he believed, a compliment to the lady who had come to entertain them. "We in Canada," remarked the chairman, "were proud of its resources and great wealth, but we did not hear so much of Canadian literature." It was of slower growth but of the names associated with it there was no reason to be ashamed. In the last two years, two Canadian ladies had come to the front in Canadian literature ranks. There was Miss Montgomery of Prince Edward Island, and from the Western Prairies comes the authoress of "Sowing Seeds in Danny" and "the Second Chance," Mrs. McClung. These two works was literature of power and of influence for good.

Interspersing Mrs. McClung's clever readings, a number of vocal solos were contributed by Miss Helen Davies and Miss Olive Howell, that were much enjoyed and both young ladies had to respond to insistent encores.

Y. M. C. A. NOTES

The Scouts meet to-night, 7 till 8. The school boys' game tournament, which has kept twenty-four boys or twelve teams busy each week for the past month, came to a close yesterday, and certainly was a success, every team fighting hard till the last game was played. G. Matthews and E. Knapman pulled out winners, having won 20 games and lost 8. The next tournament will start Tuesday, 20th, and last till the school holidays. Then an outdoor programme will take place.

KNOX CHURCH NOTES.

There will be a special preparatory service in Knox Church this evening at 7.30. At the close of the service a seating committee will be glad to meet with those who desire sittings in the new church. A special meeting of the building committee will be held on Friday evening at 8 o'clock. It is requested that all returns for tickets shall be handed in before that time.

Police Sent Wrong Picture And Libel Suits Are The Result

TORONTO, DEC. 12.—Following the disappearance of Edward Elmer McIntosh, of 94 Galley avenue, come a number of libel suits over an alleged misuse of a picture believed to be at the time of its circulation by the Provincial Police, that of the missing man.

The crime for which McIntosh is wanted is that of theft of $30,000 worth of five dollar unsigned Traders Bank notes. They were stolen from the Dominion Express Company at Smith's Falls on the night of March 3rd, 1909, while in transit from Ottawa to Toronto. Last month all were practically recovered concealed in his home.

McIntosh Disappeared.

At the time the discovery was made McIntosh disappeared, and a picture believed to be him was sent out by Superintendent of Provincial Police Joseph Rogers to various cities, also the Pinkerton National Detective Agency. Cuts were also given by him to the newspapers and used in connection with the story.

The pictures sent to the various police departments were a reproduction from the photographs pasted on a card. On the back of the card a description of McIntosh was given, also a request was also enclosed in the letter that if he should be located to immediately apprehend him and wire to Superintendent Rogers for instructions.

It is now alleged that this picture was not that of Edward Elmer McIntosh, but of his elder brother, John A. McIntosh, a commercial traveller residing at 31 Arthur street, Hamilton.

Acting under his instructions, R. B. Wallace of the firm of Curry, O'Connor, Wallace & Macdonald, Crown Life Building, has served notice upon Joseph Rogers, The Mail and Empire, The Globe, The World, The Star, The News and The Telegram, all of Toronto, while a writ will also be served upon the Pinkerton National Detective Agency, Toronto Branch. The pictures in question appeared in the local papers in their issues of Wednesday, Thursday and Friday.

The solicitor alleges that the pictures above have publicly exposed the plaintiff to hatred, contempt and ridicule, and have seriously injured his character and reputation as a law abiding citizen.

He claims that his friends and relatives have been led to believe that he was guilty of the crime charged against him, and that he has been put to great trouble and inconvenience. He claims that he has been recognized from the pictures, and has been forced to make explanations.

According to his story, Superintendent of Provincial Police Joseph Rogers took the photograph from his brother's house when the money was discovered and assuming it was the correct picture, immediately commenced to "bill" it by the wholesale throughout Canada.

Within a week after the picture was used the cut was discontinued and another, a photograph of an apparently different man, substituted by the police. The only explanation that could be secured was to the effect that this was a later picture and that was why the situation was made. No mention was made of the wrong picture being used.

THE MYSTERY CLEARED AT LAST

Examiner Special.

CHICAGO, DEC. 10.—At last the mysterious killing of Amos J. Snell, in 1893, has been solved. James Gillan, a professional crook, confessed on his death bed that he shot the old man while burglarizing the millionaire's West side home.

He declared William E. Tascott, who has been trusted for the murder in world's sensation, had nothing to do with the crime.

He said that another man was concerned with him in the burglary. But he did not name this accomplice. With a thief's honour, Gillan went to his grave without revealing a secret that might have hanged another man.

For twenty-one years the Snell murder has been the most baffling police mystery in this city's history of crime.

In the small hours of the night the aged and venerable millionaire was shot down in his home after a fierce fight in the dark. His body was found next morning in his hallway. The parlor doors had been pierced by bullets. Holes made by bullets were in the walls. The safe in the basement had been rifled, after being unlocked by some one who apparently knew the combination. Business papers had been scattered about the floor.

Tascott, the black sheep of a wealthy family offered a reward of $50,000 for his apprehension. From the day of his disappearance until to-day nothing has been found that would supply the faintest clue to his whereabouts. With the police of a continent searching for him with an alertness to which only the unprecedented reward could have spurred them, Tascott passed from sight completely.

This is the Snell case in a nutshell. Nothing has been added to it in twenty-two years.

Gillan's confession is the first ray of light on the darkness. But while it clears a part of the mystery, it adds a mystery of its own.

Who was the other man?

The police believe they know who Gillan's accomplice was. The man they suspect is alive and residing here. There is no proof against him. The police believe the crime never will be fastned on him unless he decides to divulge it.

James B. Tascott, father of the young man charged with the crime, has passed away. His two other sons, Frank and Frederick, have joined him. Of all the immediate Tascott family only Mrs. James B. Tascott, the fugitive's stepmother, a white-haired woman now nearly seventy, remains alive.

Snell's wife is dead. As if there were a curse upon the Snell millions, Albert Snell, his only son, having run through his patrimony, died a year ago in a ten-cent lodging house in Clark Street. A. J. Stone, the son-in-law of the murdered capitalist, still lives, broken in health and in reduced circumstances. Grace Snell, the once beautiful daughter, has achieved national notoriety as the most frequently married woman in the United States. She has married husband after husband, divorced them and married them again in her continuous comedy of matrimony until she has acquired a list of names so long and involved that the memories of her intimate friends are taxed to recall them.

Of the policemen who worked night and day to unravel the enigma, Chief George W. Hubbard, Inspector John Bonfield, and Inspector Michael Schaack passed away many years ago.

Even the old Snell mansion at Ada Street and Washington Boulevard has shared the blight the murder seems to have cast upon the family fortunes. A boarding house in a dingy region of boarding houses it stands forlorn and weather-beaten, its tasselated floors, its long mirrors in their tarnished gilt frames, its high ceilings, with a touch of fresco-ing here and there are the only reminders of the magnificence of its prosperous days.

Gillan's confession is given on the authority of Lieutenant Andrew Rohan formerly one of the heads of the detective bureau, who retired from the police force November 1, after thirty-six years of service. Lieutenant Rohan was told of Gillan's confession by John Stanton, who heard it fro mthe dying thief's own lips. After listening in horror to the recital Stanton drove a priest in a carriage to the county hospital at midnight, that, through the confessional, Gillan might relieve his soul of the secret murder that weighed upon it and depart this life in peace.

Gillan died of consumption a year after Snell was murdered. Why such a confession in such a tragedy should not have been made public before will seem unaccountable. That this is strange is not to be denied. Perhaps it was a blunder on the part of the police. But at any rate the confession is a fact—the most important fact turned up in this famous mystery since Millionaire Snell fell dead in his home under the bullets of midnight assassins twenty-two years ago.

"I did not tell the newspapers of Gillan's confession at the time," said Lieutenant Rohan, "because the police were working on the Snell case under orders of secrecy. I investigated the confession in every detail upon which investigation could be brought to bear and found it correct. After the police had ceased to work actively on the murder I neglected to tell the newspapers. Moreover, I could see nothing to be gained by having Gillan's confession published. Snell was dead and Gillan, his murderer, was dead and the confession gave no information of any further working value to the police. So I kept quiet and let the incident remain closed."

Forget what?

Why, the Belmont Minstrels tomorrow night at the Grand Opera House.

How could I. Why, I have been thinking of nothing else for the past week.

Say, if you go you will get as big a surprise at the ability shown by the Belmont Minstrels under Holly Shepard, as the public spirited lady who met the little boy in the street. Something about his appearance stopped her. She stared at him in her near-sighted way.

The Lady—"Little boy, haven't you any home?"

The Little Boy—"Oh, yes'm; I've got a home."

The Lady—"And loving parents?"

The Little Boy—"Yes'm."

The Lady—"I'm afraid you do not know what love really is. Do your parents look after your moral welfare?"

The Little Boy—"Yes'm."

The Lady—"Are they bringing you up to be a good and helpful citizen?"

The Little Boy—"Yes'm."

The Lady—"Will you ask your mother to come and hear me talk on 'What Does a Mother's Duty to Her Child Mean?' next Saturday afternoon at three o'clock at Lyceum Hall?"

The Little Boy (explosively)—"What's the matter with you, ma? Don't you know me? I'm your little boy."

You could not recognize the work of the Belmont boys as amateurs. They performed to the minute.

Don't fail to go and be surprised if you do not enjoy the entertainment to-morrow night. You will be disappointed if you don't [illegible]

[redacted]

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Sir,—The [illegible] Association is taking [illegible] at a meeting on the Literary Society, December 2nd.

"There was a very terrible sentence in Miss Holland's address. She told them the truth; all the people are not always the ones of God. This was undeniably true, and singularly for the danger of overzealous democracy. There is a right democracy, and a wrong democracy, and what was said by the Chairman [illegible] expressed a democracy of many centuries; it was the principle democracy she combatted—the democracy that made man omnipotent, and that set human law above divine, the democracy that was without God and without any reference to God or eternal justice. Such a democracy was a tyranny. There was a something superior to the will of the people—a something that was superior to all rulers and all law. That was the law of Eternal Right and Justice. The temporal power is not excused from the observance of this law, and a Christian State should be governed by religion, that is, it should be guided and influenced by the Divine Ideal of Right and Wrong."

When referring to the right kind of democracy I had in mind the democracy of Great Britain, Canada, Australia, New Zealand and the United States. In all of which we have governments influenced by Christian principles, or the divine ideal of right and wrong. By the wrong kind of democracy, I meant anarchists and the red republicans of some European countries who are atheists.

Mr. Burnham disagrees with my statements, and must therefore claim that the temporal order is independent of the law of God, and hence of God himself. According to him God has no dominion over temporal rulers, be they kings or the sovereign people ,no right to sit in judgment on them. Their sovereign will and pleasure is the only rule of right and wrong. What the prince or the sovereign people will, is right, what they forbid, is wrong. Here is absolute political atheism, Mr. Burnham's principles are atheistic. Is he then an atheist? Let the public judge. This, no doubt, explains why he heaps such abuse upon Christians—why he makes statements calumniating Catholics; why he makes false assertions attributing to people things they did not say, why he claims the right "to think as he pleases and to do as he sees fit," as we must conclude, irrespective of the laws of God of Christian Government. Such principles are a menace to law and order, to the lives, property and reputation of citizens. Any person influenced by him is to be pitied.

WEDDING BELLS

SULLIVAN—DOBSON.

A pleasing event took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Bullock, near Warsaw, Wednesday evening, the 7th inst., it being the occasion of the marriage of their daughter, Julia Wesley to Dorothy Dobson, of Warsaw. A little before 7 p.m. there were heard the beautiful strains of the Mendelssohn March, as rendered by Miss Marvin. This was the signal for the approach of the groom; and a little after, came the bride, accompanied by the little flower girl, prettily dressed in white with the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Cooper. The bride was prettily attired in white silk veil and orange blossoms. The bride's dainty dress was of myrtle green, with hat to match. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Mr. Marvin. After the ceremony, the company retired to the spacious dining room, where they partook of a sumptuous supper, and a toast was given by the pastor in honour of the bride and groom. Among the presents to the bride was a beautiful dinner set, the gift of the people of the church of which Miss Dobson was a member. During the evening, the infant child of Mr. and Mrs. George Bullock was baptised by the minister. After an enjoyable time, the company dispersed at an early hour.

MOORE—KNOX.

The marriage of Mr. C. H. Moore and Mrs. Isabell Knox took place this afternoon at 4 o'clock, at 580 Quen street, Rev. Robert Pogue officiating. Only the immediate members of both parties being present. Mr. and Mrs. Moore left for New York, and on their return will reside at 149 Hunter St., East. Mrs. Moore will not receive until February.

THE CRYSTAL GAZER

A Short Story.

It was April, 1895, three months after the Jameson Raid had convulsed all South Africa and half Europe. The hubbub at Cape Town had somewhat died down, but the Queen's Hotel at Sea Point was still full of sojourners, many of them from up-country, recruiting their energies amid the fresh breezes of the South Atlantic, after the turmoil, terror, and excitement of Pretoria and Johannesburg. A little group of people were gathered on the verandah after lunch, two girls, a middle-aged lady, and two young men. They were all English from Johannesburg, all friends, and apparently on the best of terms with one another.

"Mother, dear!" said one of the girls, Marian Thorne, "do you feel inclined to come for a stroll, or will you stay here? We are thinking of going along the rocks to look at the anemones."

"No," returned Mrs. Thorne, re-settling herself comfortably in her wicker-chair, "I don't think I am equal to a scramble among the rocks a present. I want to finish this book, and I have a letter to write to poor Sydney. Mr. Bromley," she went on, addressing the taller and darker of the two men, a good looking fellow of eight-and-twenty, "you are the most experienced of the party; I look to you to take care of these girls."

Arthur Bromley gave a little bow, and said with a pleasant smile:

"All right, Mrs. Thorne; I'll take the precious care of them all. They shall [illegible] if I can help it, even [illegible] self."

"Now, that's too bad, Mary Thorne," broke in his friend, Frank Bromley. "Arthur is a real humbug, with the deepest aim and mischief in him. You don't know him as I do. I am the man to be trusted on an expedition of this kind, and you do me a serious injury in insisting that I am not fitted for confidence and adventure. I protest, girls, I'll see you don't play his perfidy."

This talk of assumed injury in Frank's openly good-humored face, quite belied by the gleam of fun dancing in his blue eyes, was too much for the party, who broke with one accord into a ripple of laughter.

"Now, Frank," said Marian, recovering from her laughter, and patting his arm, "don't be a naughty boy, or we shan't take you. Wait a moment, while Ellen and I get our hats and sunshades and we'll start at once."

"I like that," retorted Frank, as the girls retreated. "Dash it! I'm six-and-twenty—only two years younger than this man here—and I won't be put upon!"

"No, Frank," said Mrs. Thorne, regarding him with a humorous look, as he glanced at the girls, just now passing through the doorway, "I don't think you'll be put upon. You have quite a knack of getting your own way in the world."

In three minutes the girls were back again, and the party of four started. They were a good-looking quartette, thought Mrs. Thorne, as she watched them out of the grounds. The two Englishmen, well set up, smart, wholesome-looking fellows. Marian Thorne, a fair, fresh complexioned girl of one-and-twenty, with a wealth of golden-brown hair and wonderful eyes, blue in the sunshine, gray at night or under a cloudy sky. Her friend, Ella Fleming, a couple of years older than herself, a complete contrast, a brunette, with blue-black hair and very dark melting eyes, perhaps a trifle sad in their expression. Both were girls of more than ordinary charm, yet to anyone watching the party for half an hour it was not difficult to see that the attentions of the two men were directed mainly in one direction, that of Marian Thorne. Mrs. Thorne was well aware of this fact, and it puzzled her just now to know how it was going to end. Frank Westly and Arthur Beeching were very old friends and school mates; they had been associated together in various business speculations, chiefly connected with land and gold mining claims, in the Transvaal and Rhodesia. They had done exceedingly well and were both of them quite able to retire to the Old Country and marry and settle down. Just now they were taking a rest from their labors. The Raid had upset business matters a great deal, and the friends were starting that very evening by the up-country train from Cape Town, on their way to a distant part of the interior, where they intended to devote themselves to three or four months of big game shooting. It was a serious situation. The two friends were, as Mrs. Thorne well knew, devoted to Marian, who for her part frankly liked them both exceedingly. The girl had obviously not yet made up her mind between them. Her mother had not judged it expedient to express any preference in the matter at all. Both were good fellows, either would make Marian an excellent husband. It was, in truth, a fair contest and no favor, and for the life of her, keen-witted and cute as she was, Mrs. Thorne was unable to guess by withe matter was going to end. She awaited with some little curiosity the return of the party to tea.

The four strolled along the rocks, and presently reached that wonderful cove, where, as the tide recedes, one of the most extraordinary collections of anemones in th world is to be found. Through the clear salt water were to be seen, garnishing the rocks and forming, as it were, parterres of some lovely marine flora, anemones of almost every conceivable shade of color. It was a unique spectacle, which most visitors at Sea Point manage to find their way to. After feastin gtheir eyes on this galaxy of living flowers, the two pairs, having exchanged partners, made their way back to the hotel, where tea was by this time ready for them. An hour later, their adieux said, the two men drove off for Cape Town, where they were to dine before catching the evening mail for Kimberley and the North. Neither of them, during the whole of that afternoon, had committed himself definitely to anything like a direct proposal—there had perhaps not been quite the right opportunity—yet both had said enough to Marian Thorne to assure of sentiments towards herself much exceeding the bounds of ordinary friendship.

"Well, good-bye, Mrs. Thorne," said the elder of the two men, as they shook hands finally. "We shall relaty find you and Miss Marian here in six months' time, when we come down country again?"

"Yes, certainly," replied the lady. "My doctor says that on no account am I to live at Johannesburg for the present. I shall be kept on the coast, I suppose, for at least 12 months. We may go to Kalk Bay or Muizenberg for a change, but all being well, you will find us both here on your return. My husband will, of course, be up at Edown occasionally," (Mr. Thorne was a well known mining expert, who, at the wages of an ambassador, was employed by a group of several well known companies on the Rand.) "Good-bye, and a thousand good wishes (or a prosperous trip. We expect to see you back loaded with trophies!"

The two friends completed their farewells and departed, each of them with a wistful feeling in his heart towards Marian Thorne. Why had neither of them declared himself before going north? It is a little difficult to say; uncertainty, diffidence; these had something to do with the matter. But chiefly, each of these two men ,from the very strength and loyalty of their friendship to the other, found himself in a position of great delicacy. Each was earnestly desired and hoped to succeed with Marian Thorne; yet neither of them wanted to take advantage of the other. And so, for the present, neither of them had openly declared his feelings. Marian had shown no marked preference, and had thus added quite immensely to the difficulties of an already complicated problem.

Two months have passed, and the friends are encamped with their mounted escort on the banks of the Tamahlacan River, near Lake Ngami. It is a drag, fresh African winter morning. Daybreak has appeared this half hour past, and the camp is a scene of quiet activity. The hobbling ponies are contentedly crunching their morning mealies, their noses plunged with deep equine satisfaction far down into the nose bags from which they are feeding. Breakfast is preparing, and meanwhile Beeching and Westley are shooting sand-grouse as they come down to the river margin to drink. It is pretty sport; three kinds of sand-grouse—the variegated, the double-banded, and the great yellow-throated species—are constantly arriving to recruit the bands which circle around the water with queer little tender cries, broken by the harsher "glock, glock" of the yellow-throated sand-grouse, birds with rich grouse-like plumage and handsomely-marked throats and breasts of oil-yellow. Flight-shooting at the thin stream of constantly arriving recruits is excellent fun, and capital practice is made with the shot guns. Great skeins of monstrous pellants are already climbing upward, clearly outlined against the glorious early morning sky of rose and amber, orange and deep green, and pale green, as they soar higher and yet higher. The gunners, havin gshot a dozen or two brace of sand-grouse, doves, and betaken themselves to breakfast, a Kaffir lad meanwhile picking up and bringing in their game.

Two hours later the friends are busily engaged amid a curious network of lakelets, lagoons, streams, and mud beds, all fed by the inundation of the main river. Here is the haunt of those gallant water-loving creatures, the lechwe, a rare kind of water-buck, peculiar to this and other lake and river regions of South-Central Africa. They have already counted one head of game, a fine ram, carrying a good pair of horns, and at any sparing a small herd of lechwe, feeding quietly on a little flat of submerged grass, while they stand knee-deep in water, an ideal picture of African fecal life. The sportsmen have dismounted, and are now cautiously approaching the buck from behind a screen of ship bush, all but covered by the flood, their cheeseclothes wading waist deep in the water and crouching as they approach. It is an excellent stalk, beautifully managed, and the gunners are now within 150 yards of the game.

Closer they cannot approach; there is no cover; nothing but the shining open water between them and their living targets. It is Frank Webster's turn to shoot, and now, kneeling, his rifle-rest, left forearm—he draws a long breath, aims, and pulls the trigger. There is no loud "crack," as of what would say, almost a reminder as the impact of a bullet on a hard hide, and one of the lechwe, a splendid ram, strikes through the body about six inches behind the shoulder, leaps suddenly forward, clean out of the water, and falls with a resounding splash. Upon the instant the rest of the antelope herd turn—artistic even, and with a series of majestic leaps, in which they drive the muddy waters of the lagoon about them in glittering showers, reach a broad ridge of firm alluvial soil, and speed away for a distant sanctuary in the main swamp-grass belt. A cheer and from Hamilton, the latter from close at hand, for they were all. The wounded buck struggles almost instantly on its feet and follows them, but only for a few paces. Four bullets, in quick succession, are sent after it, and it falls dead, its head on the bank of the main river.

A long article from Webster, and a native carrier soon running up to shoot with horns, which, strange to say, have been kept in the best preserved. Four bullets in the head, each, of course, all dripping on one another, and each proof that the game is meant to their quarry. As the sun, now high in the sky, sought for the day, the sportsmen had had enough of shooting, and were looking forward to dividing through the afternoon and evening in the luxurious ease of Indian deck chairs and cushions, and with a good book, preferably the great classic of sport, Jorrocks' Jaunts and Jollities, Surtees' finest work of all, there is a subject of which every Sportsman knows the charm. Do it as we thrust themselves that he can scarce reach that distant sanctuary, and he points instinctively for a near reed bed directly in front of him. He is going slowly, but still is 600 yards ahead of the two brothers. Now he reaches a broad tributary stream, which, poor beast, he must perforce cross, or deliver himself to those relentless pursuers, whom he now knows to be no great way behind him. The stream is too deep to splash through in a series of bounding leaps such as the lechwe love, and the ram drops down the bank and swims slowly across. His strength is ebbing from that bad wound, and the water in his passage is strongly tinged with blood. The antelope reaches the opposite bank, climbs it with difficulty, and slowly ascends to the summit of the little palm-topped hillock beyond. As the horsemen gallop up they can just note the buck disappearing among some brush and shrubbery. He is theirs, palpably; he is failing fast, and with all the fire and resolution of men made keen by a successful chase, they urge their horses into the stream to follow. For a few paces the good nags can touch the bottom, then the water deepens and they swim. Just as they reach the further bank and touch the bottom again, there is a mighty swirl at the right flank of Frank Westley's horse.

(Concluded to-morrow.)

ADJOURNS SUDDENLY.

Latham Case Suspended Just After Judge's Summing Up.

Cambridge, Mass., Dec. 14.—The jury in the case of Hattie Leblanc, who has been on trial since Nov. 28 for the murder of Clarence F. Glover, was almost in the hands of the jury, when the court suddenly adjourned yesterday afternoon until to-day.

The jurors listened to the closest argument from Fred H. Johnston, the chief counsel for the defendant, in an impassioned address, which lasted for hours, begged the jury to send Hattie Leblanc back to her home in the fishing hamlet of West Arichat for a joyous Christmas.

The district attorney, J. J. Higgins, declared that the girl, ripened into a woman by her life at the Glover home, had gone willingly to the laundry with Glover at night, and there shot him to death. A quarrel with Glover, he said, furnished the motive. He did not pose as Mrs. Glover's defender and he described Mrs. Glover as a woman who had been "dead from the beginning." The powder marks on Glover's coat showed that the muzzle of the revolver was within three inches of his body, indicating that he had been shot by someone whom he trusted.

Much of what Judge Read had to say was distinctly favorable to the defendant, especially that bearing on the question of whether the girl had the courage and the ability to use the 32-calibre revolver that required the grasp of a good-sized hand and the knowledge how to release a safety attachment. He said that the Government had not shown that Hattie Leblanc had ever used such a weapon, while, on the other hand, Mrs. Glover, the widow, did know how to use one.

He pointed out conflicting statements given by witnesses concerning both Mrs. Glover and her attorney, and was urging the jury to give the girl the benefit of any reasonable doubt, when he decided to end his charge to-day.

Wasting Americans.

Puerto Cortez, Honduras, Dec. 8 (via New Orleans, Dec. 14.)—A guard of soldiers is placed every night around the local hotel here where the foreign visitors and business men stay. Ostensibly this guard is for the protection, but the real object is to watch the Americans.

The Government fears a revolution, and suspects that American soldiers of fortune may be smuggled ashore every Yankee passport presented. It is reliably reported that the hotel guard is under instructions to see not only that Americans are not permitted to join in any fighting which may start, but that they shall not be allowed to put out at night and start trouble on their own responsibility.

Caught Burglar in Soup.

Toronto, Dec. 14.—Caught at two o'clock yesterday morning in the cellar of any of A. Mutrie & Co., 191 West Queen street, by Policeman Pogsett (107), Jimmie Walker, a well-known thief, was looking in No. 3 Lumen (dish) for valuables. After a hard struggle, Walker, who was hidden among the soup, was finally handcuffed. In the Police Court this morning he was sent to the Central Prison for eighteen months upon a charge of housebreaking. In the struggle in the cellar there, the stove was overturned and a fire was narrowly averted by the constable.

Female Spies Here.

Buenos Ayres, Dec. 14.—Friendly relations were reestablished yesterday between Argentina and Bolivia. The trouble between the two countries originated in Bolivia's recognition of the coup effected by President Alcorta. On account of the Bolivia-Peru boundary dispute, it being alleged that he had favored Peru. Moreover, Gen. Pando and Senor Fernandez signed a protocol renewing diplomatic intercourse.

Cure for Archbishop Gauthier.

Kingston, Dec. 14.—The prayers of the congregation of Kingston will go up that Archbishop Gauthier, on the eve of his departure for Rome, after New Year's, will be benefited spiritually and physically and return to a heavy gold watch.

Big Dominion Stores.

Sackville, Dec. 14.—(Special.)—A report in the Moncton Transcript that the Dominion Stores, Limited, have purchased the business of the Sackville Co-operative Society has not been confirmed, but it is understood that the deal is practically completed. The Dominion Stores have a chain of stores throughout the Maritime Provinces, and the Sackville store will be the first one in New Brunswick.

"The invitations were written on the backs of rosy cheeked apples cut from stiff paper and water colored," says the Woman's Home Companion for August. "Instead of place cards at each cover there was for a souvenir a china pepper and salt shaker the shape and color of a red apple, the whole mounted on a green majolica apple leaf.

"Chopped pineapples and cherries served in glasses formed the first course. This was followed by a delicious fluffy omelet garnished with crisp bacon and spiced fried apples dusted with spice. Potatoes fried in tiny cubes, English muffins and toast were passed. There was a salad of chopped celery and Brazil nuts in apple cups. Then came apples cooked until transparent in a fish shape flavored with green ginger root and delicate white wine.

"Coffee was served in the library, after which a silver cake basket piled high with red and white apples was passed to the guests. The apples were candy boxes, and on opening them we found a tiny pencil and card, on which was the following guessing game, the answers being the names of varieties of apples:

"A dainty food (crab), very sharp (Tacon), a favorite color for shoes (russet), a great river in North America (St. Lawrence), an excellent drink (cider), a man's name (Jonathan), a warm coat (Astrakhan), an arctic explorer (Baldwin), always carried by man (Adam), one of the months (May), second by children (snow), a famous body of water (Dead sea), a tree liked by Russian (pine), the greatest thing in the world (love).

"The first prize was a beautiful fruit plate with a hand painted border of apples. The consolation prize was a very large candy apple."

ACCUSED'S WIFE AND DAUGHTER SWEARS THAT HE WAS HOME FROM 8 O'CLOCK UNTIL NEXT DAY

Never Left the House After He Had His Supper—Did Not Hear of Fire Until Next Morning—Trial of Joseph Wilson for Arson Continues.

THE DEFENCE

The case of Joseph Wilson, charged with burning down the barns of Kara McFadden in June last, was resumed before His Honour Judge Huycke this morning at 10 o'clock. The evidence for the prosecution was concluded and a number of witnesses called for the defence. More witnesses for the defence were called when the Court resumed at 2 o'clock.

Frank McFadden, who lives in Burleigh, and is a cousin of the complainant, was the first witness called this morning. On the evening of June 4th he was at the house of Mcand hurried over to McFadden's. Wilson call Isadok Hales outside, but did not hear what he said. He heard Mrs. McFadden order Wilson home. He went as far as the barn, sat down for a while and then went on. He had gone home before the fire started and by the time he got back the barn was half burned. Mrs. McFadden used considerable bad language to Wilson, in driving Wilson off the place.

The Defence.

Mrs. Norman Wilson was the first witness called for the defence. Just after they retired John McFadden came along and yelled "fire!" She and her husband got up and went over to the blaze. She did not think there was any wind. She was talking to Mr. and Mrs. McFadden, who were talking of having Wilson arrested. Mrs. McFadden told her that she thought she saw one or two persons, but she wasn't sure. She was sure there was a woman for she saw her holding up her skirts.

Johnny McFadden said he thought he saw a man running from the barn. Next morning witness went over to McFadden's place. McFadden asked her if she thought Jimmie Wilson would burn down his barn. She said she did not think so. He said "then it must have been Joe."

Mrs. Louisa Brown was next called. She is a sister of Wilson. Her home is at Apsley. She had come down to spend Sunday at Wilson's. She had just driven in, and the young boy just had the horse unhitched when he caught sight of the fire. They went and got a lantern and urried over to McFadden's. Witness heard Mrs. McFadden say she thought it was a woman she saw running away, for she seemed to be holding her skirts. She heard Percy say he saw someone, but he couldn't tell whether it was a man or woman. Johnny said he thought it was a man. McFadden appeared to her to be under the influence of liquor in the house.

Thomas Meles, called, stated he lived one mile from the McFadden place. When he arrived at the fire the roof of the barn had fallen in. Witness smelt liquor there. He saw Percy McFadden with a flask of whiskey. McFadden, Sr., acted as though he had been drinking. Percy McFadden stated there that Wilson had set the barn on fire.

Norman Wilson, brother of the accused, lives about a quarter of a mile from McFadden's place. Called, he stated that Johnny McFadden came over and told him of the fire. He went over, followed later by his wife. Mrs. McFadden told witness that she believed it was his brother who had burned the barn.

Mrs. Catharine Lane said she lived in Apsley. On the Monday morning after the fire Percy McFadden was talking to her and in the course of the conversation told her about their barns being burned. He told her he saw a man coming out of the barn that night. He was not thirty feet from him, but he didn't know who he was.

Mrs. Joseph Wilson, wife of the prisoner, was next called. In June last her husband was doing government work on the road. Her hus-

CANADIANS ATTACKED AND BADLY TREATED

Situation is Serious in Spain---Bedouins Utterly Routed the Turks and Twenty Thousand Troops are Being Rushed to the Scene---Bitter Fighting Has Taken Place.

Examiner Special.

JERUSALEM, DEC. 15.—That several parties of English and United States tourists, with some Canadians among them, have been attacked, and some of them badly used, is the terror of information reaching here to-day from districts where there has been serious fighting recently between Bedouins and the Turkish troops. The greatest trouble was in the Syrian villages, where several columns of troops were sent out to effect the disarmament of Bedouins, who to date have practically controlled the situation in the mountain district. Despite the fact that the troops had Beluguns and modern weapons, the Bedouins were victors at every point, and said they would drive what were left of the troops into the Dead Sea. So far as is known, Christian permanent residents of the country were not seriously interfered with. Twenty thousand Turkish troops are now being rushed to the scene.

FREE TRADE RESOLUTION PASSED BY EXECUTIVES OF THE FARMERS' ASSOCIATIONS

Special wire to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, DEC. 15.—Probably the most startling free trade resolution ever passed in Canada was that adopted this morning by the executives of the Provincial Farmers' Associations and presented this afternoon to a mass meeting of eight hundred of the most influential agriculturists gathered from all parts of the Dominion, which will most likely endorse it and send it on to the government. The resolution called for reciprocal free trade immediately between the United States and Canada in all lines of agricultural implements and animal products, fertilizers, fuel, oils, cement, fish, and lumber; also for the immediate lowering to one half the general rates the duties charged on British imports and for such further reductions or preferential tariff reductions with preferential tariff relations with Great Britain as shall ensure complete free trade between Canada and the Mother country within ten years. The resolution said further, that the farmers of Canada were willing to face direct taxation to make up the revenue lost to the Dominion by these tariff changes.

GOVERNMENT MAJORITY IS 92 FURTHER GAINS LIKELY

Examiner Special.

LONDON, ENG., DEC. 15.—With this morning's returns, all but sixty-four constituencies of Great Britain and Ireland have responded to the call to the ballot box and the government is already sustained by a majority of ninety-two, with prospects of further additions in the pollings still to be taken.

To-day's standing at four p.m. Unionists 267.
Liberals 228.
Nationalists 64.
Independent Nationalists 9.
Labourites 42.

The chief interest in the returns to-day was in Walworth, Cambridgeshire, where the two sons of former premiers strove for victory. Neil Primrose, Liberal son of Lord Rosebery defeated Lord Hebert Cecil, son of Lord Salisbury by 546.

STRIKERS ATTACK POLICE ONE MAN IS KILLED

Special Wire to The Examiner.

CHICAGO, DEC. 15.—While operating non-union garment workers in the Hippenheimer shop to-day, the police were attacked by strikers and in a mêlée fight which followed the workers was shot dead, another wounded, and several spectators injured, both police seriously injured. Numbers of weeks and blows were brought on the shooting. The mob was eventually dispersed, after several charges. The situation is very serious.

TWELVE MEN ARE IN PERIL

Examiner Special.

DENVER, COL. DEC. 15.—Imprisoned by flames and a wall of rock, twelve men are working madly in the Leyden coal mines near here endeavouring to release themselves, and hundreds more are working on the outside trying to rescue them through another shaft. The fire started last night as the result of an explosion. 'Tis thought all are still alive.

REPROVED BY A FRIEND.

Not all Conservatives are in sympathy with Mr. Borden's alliance with the "Nationalists" in their opposition to the Canadian navy and hostility to British ideals and Imperial sentiment. Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper of British Columbia, strikes a dissenting note. Addressing a Canadian Club in Halifax, in his native province, Sir Charles hands the lie in his den, combating Mr. Borden's attitude in his own home. Speaking on the naval question, Sir Hibbert said he thought there was a great misconception in regard to the present agitation in Quebec. If Quebec seems to vote against militarism and a navy, it should be remembered that there are men in Ontario and on the plains who do not wish to contribute one cent to the national or imperial defence. These men must be educated. He thought it a pity that this great matter should be left to one party. In old times such matters were settled by coalition. Said Sir Charles:

"Let us drive to the four winds the Bourassas and Monks, who would destroy and render of no effect the dreams of Howe, and the men who dreamed of imperial grandeur, in which Canada should have an honourable part."

There is no doubt that Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper is as good a Conservative as his energetic father, who takes something of the same position in regard to the Canadian naval question. Sir Charles, the younger, has some title to speak for his party; he was a member of four Conservative Cabinets—as Minister of Marine and Fisheries, in Sir John Macdonald's cabinet, and in that of Sir John Thompson, and that of Sir John Abbott; and Minister of Justice in Hon. Mackenzie Bowell's cabinet. The position he assumes, in regard to Mr. Borden and the "Nationalists," is in line with that the Examiner has taken—that the "Nationalist" movement, and what it stands for, call for the exercise of the highest patriotism, the reinstating and swift obliteration of party lines, in a crisis, whose storm cloud against the common enemy is demanded. The "Nationalist" move ment is directed against the integrity of Canada and against the loyalty of the Empire. The arguments used in the frightened and hysterical appeals, were the arguments of traitors—hostility to Canadian unity of citizenship and Imperial unity, British connection, and British ideals. The lie contained by Mr. Bourassa, the head of the movement, in the assertion of yesterday are to be credited. In London, Eng., Mr. Bourassa, as reported, in an interview with the London Daily Mail, declares for a French enclave, an independent state carved out of Canada. He is reported as saying:

"In fifteen years, and before that time comes, the eastern Provinces, Quebec, Ontario, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick, will have become French in language and Roman Catholic in faith."

And this is the man, and the policy of the men that Mr. Borden is in alliance with, to the extent, at least, of co-operating with them to unite political opponents,—to gain a miserable party advantage. Mr. Borden has uttered no word of condemnation of "nationalism," and its works; and failure to condemn is, in such a case, tantamount to approval. Mr. Borden had it in his power to contribute to crushing "Nationalism" in its more recent manifestations. If 'Nationalism' had found arayed against it the force and sentiment of both the two great political parties, it would have had less success. It might have expected such opposition; for what "Nationalism" fights against is not one party, the party in power, alone, but both parties as represented by the whole of Canada—against Canadian unity, Canadian integrity and Imperial connection.

REMARKS.

A well-known fire insurance authority, Mr. A. W. Damon, of the National Board of Fire Underwriters of the United States, speaking in Montreal, said that he considered the existence of overhead electric and other wires the greatest menace to life and property, and added that placing them underground has been found, by experience in other cities, to result in the saving of thousands of dollars, to say nothing of the decreased loss of human lives.

This is not all the evil. The existence of disfiguring and obstructing lines of wire poles of various kinds is another evil. What little taste we have had in Peterborough of the benefits of undergrounding wires, is a taste sweet in the mouth. The removal of the poles, by the Bell Telephone Company on the south side of Hunter street, from George street to Aylmer street, created a revolution in the appearance of the street, and removed serious obstructions to the use of the street for the purposes for which streets are intended—traffic. With the increasing cost of poles it seems that it would be cheaper to use underground conduits for wires than to employ ghastly crooked, disfiguring obstructive poles.

It is time that municipalities should assert ownership and control of the streets, and not permit the rights of citizens to be outraged by self-seeking corporations. It is not all the fault of these companies. The Bell Telephone Company and the Machine Telephone Company have set a good example, and it is stated that other companies having the use of our streets for poles, are willing to consider the question of underground wires. But one or two companies resist and defy the city. Of course it is natural that they should take advantage of the opportunities that the law allows them, for serving their own convenience at the expense of the public convenience; but there is a limit to the exercise of their actions. The city authorities have something to say about the placing of poles; but they have in the past neglected their duty.

The city authority that permits a pole to stand and builds it into a sidewalk is outraging public rights. On some streets, especially where the pavement is outside the tree line, the poles are placed and allowed to remain to obstruct, not only the flow of water, but traffic itself. One one street a pole was placed in such a position that when a pavement was laid down, the pole stood three and a half feet on the roadway, outside the outer edge of the walk. And this, when all that the City Engineer or Street Inspector had to do was to order the advertising company to set the pole in a proper position.

If our city fathers want to add another item to the policy of improving city conditions they might well take up the pole question. If the few cases in the way of the people having control of their streets, that exist, should be taken, agitation begun, that will lead to a change in that law.

Under our present system of civic government, responsibility is the most diffused. No largely distributed body [illegible] of a big concern has some duty or a share with some member of the Council to throw responsibility upon. With a smaller governing board, say a commission of three, with a salary, there would be concentration of responsibility, and, naturally concentration of effort. It would be easier to elect three good business heads, out of our present [illegible] than to elect twelve. Then, too, [illegible] because ability [illegible] public spirit, and paid something for their services, could, and would, give better city government than a dozen men, as a rule, lacking business ability and giving their services for nothing, and generally earning their pay. Now, the greatest reward that representatives get is criticism and abuse, not that they, in all cases, deserve it on their own account, but with our system of changing councils, elected by haphazard methods, little better can be expected. No proper systematic policy can be adopted and carried out from year to year—the only way by which satisfactory civic government can be secured.

A NATIONAL POLICY FOR CANADA.

(Woodstock Sentinel-Review.)

The Canadian Courier is inviting suggestions for a new national policy. And the number and variety of the replies it is receiving leave the impression on the reader's mind that it is a pretty big question. Among the suggestions worth while is that from President Falconer of Toronto University. He assumes the best National Policy to be that which would be the most successful in welding together and developing the Dominion. And from that point of view no one stroke of statesmanship, however materially conceived, will, in our present circumstances, have a right to be called The National Policy. "Necessary as good legislation is, something more vital than acts of parliament is required to weld East and West together."

President Falconer puts the problem this way:

"Let us ask ourselves whether we have a distinct individuality, a character of our own, a Canadian type into which new elements are being fused; or whether we are simply a multitude of people thrown together and kept so far in unity by the compulsion of self-interest while we occupy a rich new country. And he goes on to say that to secure and preserve a life worth living for, and if need be, worth dying for, is surely The National Policy. And to adopt a policy not merely statesmen contribute, but every class of the people. "As our churches, in our schools, our colleges, our churches, we must instil into our youths the virtues and ideals of our history, which reaches back for centuries. We must make the industrial conditions of our people equitable and help them to take pride in their homes. In our business we must maintain the honourable traditions of our stock; in our courts and governments the standards of British law; in our press the dignity and truthfulness of journalism at its best."

There is [illegible] very true in all this; but it is [illegible] important for all that. That righteousness exalts a nation is not a discovery of modern times, but experience has clearly shown the need for realizing it in our time that this is Canada's century, the most important question for Canadians is, What is Canada to do with her time and her opportunity? How is question and aims in the development of her natural resources and her transportation facilities and her export [illegible] make some necessary provision for the defence of her shores and her commerce. All this is very important and necessary work; but something more is needed if Canada is to realize her best ideals, and there is at least a suggestion of that something more in the words we have just quoted from the pen of President Falconer.

Significance Of Descent Of Farmers In Force Upon Canadian Capital

(Montreal Herald.)

The spokesman of the prairie farmers have left Winnipeg for Ottawa. Two trainloads of them are advancing on the legislators, whom they will considerably outnumber.

It is a shrewd move, because it is good advertising. It makes the rest of us take notice, because five hundred farmers all in one special train look over so much more important than a couple of hundred thousand of them scattered around in their farmhouses. And the five hundred themselves, away off there in Ottawa, are endowed with vastly more potential interest to those who stay at home than if they had stayed at home themselves.

For, what it really behooves us in the East to know and understand is that there is life in the movement of which the crusade is the sign.

Life on the prairie bears the stamp of the new. There is nothing about it that makes for complexity. Going there, men and women have cut themselves off from their old ties. They are the masters of the new environment. What they think, not what others have thought for them, is what counts. And think they must, in the interest of self preservation. Life out there on the prairie is not one rollicking round of joy. The occasions for meeting one's neighbours are not very numerous. What is most serious about this farmers' movement is that every local branch of the Grain Growers' Association has become a social centre, a stimulant to intellectual effort. The regular meetings resemble those of a debating society, and the men and women present give themselves up to the discussion and elucidation of all problems bearing nearly or remotely upon their position in life, putting into the proceeding all the sincerity of their nature. That is to say, the Grain Growers' movement is becoming, and in places has already become, instinct with the very life principle of the people of the West. It is not merely something they put forward for favourable consideration, although that is the flower of it; it is themselves.

Of course, it is conceivable that men who know something of the formulation of opinion and of its effective organisation have had a share in bringing all this to pass without their own identity having been disclosed. There have been some phases of this movement that could not be wholly explained on any other theory. We may be quite certain that a movement which has already reached such proportions has not altogether escaped the attention of local politicians. Indeed certain signs point to the intention of one who is perhaps the shrewdest of them all standing ready to furnish the leadership that will be required when the movement, having acquired its headway, is confronted with the necessity of getting something done or going to pieces.

The East, apart from its representatives at Ottawa, will be disposed to hearken to the plea of those representatives of the farmers with full confidence in their sincerity and with respectful recognition of what we owe to the men who are developing the West and throwing hundreds of millions more each year into the fund which forms the support of industry and commerce. It will be a mistake if they are allowed to return without visiting some other places besides Ottawa, especially Montreal.

THIRD FLOOR

The Tooth Master

You cannot tell off-hand what it is that imparts to dress that much desired element called style. You recognize it when you see it and you often wonder why it is that a garment made by one tailor has so much more snap and expression about it than the stilted style of garment made by another tailor. It isn't the quality of the goods. It isn't the mere following the outlines of a figure on a tailor's plate. Tailoring is something more than that, and the true tailor, like the true musician, realizes that it is his master touch that produces the harmony that inspires admiration.

"ASHTON-KIRK, INVESTIGATOR"

By John T. McIntyre. Copyrighted and All Rights Reserved

"Oh the contrary, the thing seems full of a vague meaning," said he. "There were seventeen pictures upon the walls of this room; fourteen have been torn down and destroyed; the other three are undisturbed."

Pendleton gazed at the pictures that remained upon the walls. Two were of fine-looking horses of the colonial type; the third was the portrait of a man—a man of repulsive sneering face, heavy with evil lines and with unusually small eyes.

"If they had destroyed that one it would have had some meaning to me," commented Pendleton. "But, as it is, I hardly think I follow you."

"The meaning that I find," replied Ashton-Kirk, "lies in the fact that the pictures violently used were those of General Wayne only. Mark that fact. That they were deliberately selected for destruction is beyond question."

"How do you make that out?"

"It is simple. If this were a mere random stripping of the room of its pictures, all would have suffered. Look," indicating a spot in the wall "here is a place where the plaster is broken. A hook had been driven here to hold one of the portraits and the breaking of the plaster shows that some determination was required to tear the picture down. Yet—next this—is an engraving of an old mansion which remains untouched. The next four again were portraits of the General, and all have been demolished."

Pendleton nodded.

"That's true," said he. "Whoever did this was after the Revolutionary hero alone. But why?"

Ashton-Kirk smiled.

"We'll look into matters a little further," said he. "Perhaps there are facts to be gathered that will shed some light upon the things that we have already seen."

They repassed through the other rooms; with his hand upon the frame of the door leading to the show room, Ashton-Kirk paused.

"Better brace yourself for rather a shocking sight," said he to his friend.

"Go on," said Pendleton, quietly.

CHAPTER IV.

STILLMAN'S THEORY.

There were four good-sized windows in the show room, all overlooking the street. It was a large, square place, and, as Miss Vale had said, literally stuffed with odd carvings, pottery of a most freakish sort, and weird bric-a-brac. Two large modern safes stood at one side, behind a long show case spread with ancient coins. At the end of this case was a carpeted space, railed in and furnished with a great flat-topped desk. Upon the floor at the foot of the desk, and with three separate streams of blood creeping away from it, lay the huddled, ghastly figure of a man.

Pendleton, though he had been warned, felt his breath catch and his skin grow cold and damp.

"Heaven!" said he, under his breath. "It's the man whose picture we saw inside there on the wall."

Even the shock of death could not, so it seemed, drive the sneer from the thick lips; mockery was frozen in the dead eyes.

"What a beast he must have been!" went on Pendleton. "Like a satyr. I don't think I ever saw just that type of face before."

Ashton-Kirk was bending over the body; suddenly he raised himself.

"There is a heavy bruise on the forehead," said he. "He was felled first; then bayoneted."

"Bayoneted!" Pendleton peered at the body.

"There it is, sticking from his chest." Ashton Kirk drew aside the breast of the dead man's coat and the companion caught sight of a bronze hilt. The broad, sword-like blade had been driven completely home.

"If we attempted to move the body," said the investigator, "I should not be surprised if we found it pinned to the floor. It took strong to give that stroke the man who dealt it made sure of the job."

With soft, quick steps he crossed the room. The doors of the safes were locked.

"If the purpose was robbery," said Ashton-Kirk, "the criminal evidently knew where to look for the most portable and valuable articles. There seems to be indication of any lifted hasty hand tampered—" He stopped short, his eyes upon a white vellum covered book which lay open upon the floor. He whistled softly between his teeth. "General Wayne owned more!" he said.

The volume, as far as Pendleton could see, was a sort of scrap book in which had been fastened a great number of prints. Upon the two pages that they could see, six prints had been placed by the carefully. Of these, four had been cut, and lay upon the floor.

"Gainsboro and John Bright have been spared," said Ashton-Kirk, pointing at the book, "but," and he scattered prints upon Mad Anthony that had violent hands four separate times.

Pendleton scratched his head.

"How what the deuce can it mean?" he demanded, crossly. "Not only what the fellow seem who did this, but what did he mean, pointing at the dead man, "by having a many portraits of General Wayne? I must confess, sir, that I'm quite at sea."

"I must confess that I'm quite at sea," said Ashton-Kirk, with a smile. "But

A Mother's Sacrifice

Made in Kindness is Often an Injustice to Herself and to Her Family.

It is a common thing for mothers to sacrifice comfort, strength and sometimes life itself, for her family. So common, indeed, that little notice is taken of it.

If anyone else is tired or weak or sick, mother waits on them. But there is no time for mother to be sick or to get the much-needed rest. So she neglects her ailments until she gets beyond the reach of human aid.

This is an injustice to herself and to her family. Health must be preserved. It is a mother's duty to herself and to them about her.

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food will restore you. It makes new, rich blood. It creates real nerve force. The feelings of weakness and listless ennui bring calm when this restorative treatment is used. It stimulates the appetite, improves digestion and removes the cause of headaches.

You cannot get well in a day. Nerve troubles come on gradually and lasting Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food works hand in hand with Nature to supply the elements which go to build up the system.

Mrs. E. A. Lyons, Quyon, Pontiac Co., Que., writes:—"I was all run down and could not do my own work. Everything I ate made me sick. In desperation I had used the most of several boxes of Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food and was restored to health. As a result of my experience I have always recommended Dr. Chase's Nerve Food to my friends, and will continue to do so, as I know it is a splendid medicine."

THE CRYSTAL GAZER

It happened upon the afternoon of this self same day that Marian Thorne was having tea at Rondebosch, on the other side of Cape Town, with a friend of hers, Mrs. Ogilby, a clever, charming, neurotic, inquiring, somewhat impulsive little lady, given to every fresh fad, phase or fancy that her mind encountered; especially if it had about it an element of the mysterious. Just now Mrs. Ogilby was dabbling in psychical research, and was deep in crystal-gazing, and other matters known to studious, healthy-minded girl, had hitherto been of occultism. Nothing would content her but that her friend Marian Thorne, for whom she had conceived a violent attachment, should accompany her on some of her expeditions into the unknown. Marian, who resisted her friend's blandishments said laughed at her high flown mystery, but dropped voice, and serious face, when she rambled into these topics. But to-day she had promised, partly out of curiosity, partly to please her friend, to look into the crystal sphere, which formed one among the hundred and one ornaments of Mrs. Ogilby's drawing-room. It was a delightful room, opening out on to a pleasant garden, from which the sun, now dipping in its south-west horizon, had banished. Some good English water-colors adorned the walls. Rich hides of leopard, tiger-cat, African lynx, and silver jackal, were strewn about the room, some of soft and others upon the carpet. A bewildering assortment of Kaffir curios filled up every available niche and corner. Here were assegais from the Chavaka River country, weird musical instruments from Basutoland, and there Bushmen's skull from the Waterberg. Strangely carved wooden pillows from Mashonaland, sour-looking bowls, native ornaments, beads, necklaces and armlets of brass and copper, and ivory, and some spoils of wild animal life, a fine lion's skin, a panther's head, a leopard's skin, stood in the corners, and on the floor in front of the crystal sphere, which Mrs. Ogilby was from time to time pleased to direct the gaze of herself and her two friends, whose eyes, wonderfully translucent, sometimes sparkled, yet, on occasion, were strangely opaque and dull, and sometimes seemed like shining balls of quicksilver. Marian generally fell under it well. It was her fascination, but she could not help feeling silent, mysterious, inscrutable on the dark lid of the grand piano.

After tea Mrs. Ogilby proceeded to her task. Letting down the blinds and drawing a thick curtain over the garden window, and darkening in the same way another window, she lit a lamp, turning it only half up, however, so as to keep the chamber in dim, subdued light.

"Now, Marian," she said to her friend having placed her in a convenient chair, "I want you to look steadily at the crystal. Don't let your thoughts wander. Keep them, as it were, sealed up, under control. Look steadily for at least six or seven minutes, and tell me very very quietly what you see, if, indeed, you see anything at all."

Marian settled herself in her chair, rested her round chin upon her hands, her elbows upon her knees, and looked intently at the ball of crystal, upon which fell the gentle light of the shaded lamp. She sat thus for at least four minutes and then, almost startling her friend, she began to speak. "How strange," she said, in a low, quiet voice, not exactly her own, "I see a great flat plain. There is a river and lakes, or lagoons and streams. Across one of these streams two men are swimming their horses in the direction of an isle with tall palm-trees. The men are out of their saddles, alongside their horses, holding up their rifles and cartridge belts, and hanging on with the right hand. They are—yes, they are—I see their faces—Mr. Westley and Mr. Beeching. Now they are near the opposite bank and climb to their saddles again. Now! Now! A crocodile has suddenly attacked Frank's horse—I see the horrible tail; the horse and Frank are down, down in the stream! Arthur Beeching looks round. Another crocodile is coming up. He spurs his horse; he will somehow help Frank. No . . . surely he can't. . . . Yes, he leaves Frank to his fate; he is ashore. Oh, shameful! Help!"

In her agony of distress the girl rose from her chair, as if to give aid herself. Instantly the vision vanished, faded as does a dream under the spell of the morning light. Marian sank back into her chair, white, haggard and rather faint.

"What a horrible vision," she gasped, with a shiver. "What does it all mean? It can't be true! It can't! Yet why do I see such a thing? Oh, I wish I had never set eyes on that crystal!" She burst into tears. Mrs. Ogilby, a good deal alarmed at the result of her pastime, calmed her friend as well as she was able, and presently, returning with her to Cape Town, saw her safe into the train for Sea Point.

"My dear," she said, "don't let this thing get your mind. You must probably nothing but the reflection of your own imagination." But Marian Thorne could not help being troubled by her vision. She told not a word of it to anyone, but it worried her dreadfully. Meanwhile the weeks ran on and not a line was heard from the two travellers up country. . . . . .

Four months later, Marian was walking alone up Adderley Street, Cape Town. Suddenly, on the other side of the road, she saw a face that was at once familiar to her, dark, good-looking, serious, tanned deeply by the sun, the face of Arthur Beeching. He was alone. Their eyes met and he took off his hat, turning as if to cross the street to her. The girl looked straight in front of her and walked rapidly on. Beeching stopped, eyed her with a curious look, and pursued his way.

"She couldn't have known me," he said to himself. "I suppose wild life has altered me a good deal."

Two minutes later Marian had made her way to the Gardens, and, turning a corner, was suddenly confronted by Frank Westley, of all persons in the world! The meeting staggered her completely; it was as though she met one from the dead. Her right color suddenly vanished. She turned very pale.

"Frank!" she said in a quavering voice, "why, I thought you were—" she hesitated.

"Yes, Frank!" he replied. "Why, you look as if you had seen a ghost."

"And indeed you might well have been," she answered, "I thought you were killed by a crocodile!"

"And how in the wide world could you have guessed that?" asked Frank, open-mouthed. "When not a soul in Cape Town knows anything of the kind except Arthur and myself!"

Marian told him of her vision.

"Well, it's a mighty strange thing," said Arthur, with a graver face than usual. "But you saw the gospel truth, or rather part of it. You ought to have pondered your soul in patience and seen the whole. It is true Arthur Beeching drove the horse out of the water; but that was the better to help me. Dear old chap, if it hadn't been for him I should have been a dead man. He fastened on his nag; rushed into the water again; chest deep, and, getting hold of one of my arms, extricated me from my horse. The second crocodile, meanwhile, had made a grab at my right arm. Arthur dropped me, put his rifle close to the brute's eye, and blew its brains out. It quitted its hold of me and turned, shook itself upwards, and, a dynamited log. Arthur got me to the bank all right. I wasn't much hurt; my wounds healed in a week or two, and after a rattling good shoot, here I am again. I lost my horse, of course."

"But! but!" stammered Marian, "I met Mr. Beeching just now in Adderley Street, and, thinking you were dead and that he might have saved you, cut him."

Frank whistled a long whistle.

"That's a pretty kettle of fish," he said. "How are you going to get out of it? You'd better let me help you."

"No," said the girl, "not by a single word. I owe Mr. Beeching an abject apology, and I am going to make it."

It was a difficult thing to do, but Marian did it. And although some months after she was calling by Arthur Beeching's command, to see her great kindness in nursing her through a bad attack of fever, the greeting that passed between them was of the most friendly nature, and Frank, who was present, was left entirely out in the cold.

MILKLESS WATER SOLD FROM BIG DAIRY CANS

NORWALK, CONN., DEC. 15.—Farmers are going from door to door in this city selling water from big milk cans, and there is no milk in it either. Owing to the long drought Fairview reservoir is lower than it has ever been before and it has been necessary to lay a big pipe to connect with the lake in Mehegan Park to provide water for household use. Two artesian wells are being sunk (men working night and day) to secure additional water. The fire chief has pumped water from the Thames River into cisterns at various points so as to spare the precious Fairview fluid in case of fire.

The man who has a spring on his farm has a gold mine, and one Oconto farmer peddles over 500 gallons daily in the city of Norwich, charging five cents per quart. Wells have gone dry, and for the last two months owners of stock have had to cart barrels of water from the river.

The school children, rather than take chances of drinking from the city water in its present state—although the Connecticut chemists declare it O.K.—go to school provided with bottles or tin pails of spring water which their parents have purchased. Local grocers who buy the precious water at wholesale are making a good thing on its sale. Every morning, on the west side, a long line of citizens, professional men, deacons, solid business men and others, may be seen with tin cans hiking up the path to a never-failing spring near the tannery. Passengers coming down on the early trains sit up and take notice of the procession of staid heads of families out after their morning beverage, apparently; but they are simply getting the day's supply of drinking water.

Restaurants put "Spring water, 5 cents per glass," on their bills of fare. All water used from the city supply is boiled, so there is no particular danger of illness, and as the Water Commissioners are exerting themselves to remedy present conditions and rain is certain to come, soon the average citizen lives in hopes of a good time coming when he will not be obliged to take a bath in instalments and when the hostess will not look daggers at him if he asks for a second glass of water at meals.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT
By Ruth Cameron

TO THE familiar epigrams—
"Tell me what a man eats and I will tell you what he is."
"Tell me what a man reads and I will tell you what he is"—
I have a new one to add:
Tell me how a man waits and I will tell you what he is.
Did it ever occur to you how many ways there are of waiting and how very expressive of character they are?

There is the man who, when he is waiting for a car which he knows will come at a certain time, will rush out into the middle of the street or to a vantage point across the road, a half dozen times in the space of ten minutes in the hope of seeing it coming.

Can't you imagine just what this man would be like in business, and in the business of living—just how unable to do a thing and then let it alone, just how unable to act and then wait for the passage of time to ripen his act into results?

Then there is the man who, while he waits, asks half a dozen people when his car is due. Can't you paint from that his tendency to suspicion and unbelief?

Then there is the man who, while he waits for the dinner he has ordered, drums upon the table with his hand, takes up his knife and lays it down, takes up his fork and lays it down, then drums on the table again. If he is waiting for a car he paces up and down, up and down, up and down, for all the world like the poor panther in the zoo, until the people about him catch the contagion of his nervousness and become restless too. Don't you know just what kind of a man he is at home, just how nervous, how impatient, how easily worried, how quick to fly off the handle?

And then there is the man who finds out when his car is due and then simply folds his arms and waits. He knows that no antics of his can hurry the passage of time and he indulges in none.

He is master of himself, captain of all his forces, and when he has given himself the command to wait he expects unquestioning obedience.

Can't you get the whole man from that? Can't you realize the reserve force, the control, the power in leash, in his character?

Waiting is the hardest thing most of us ever have to do. Everyone knows that. And he who does it well is one of the greatest self conquerors.

Do you remember what that great poet, whose blindness transformed a life of passionate activity into a blank of eternal waiting, said about waiting?

"Then patience to prevent that murmur soon replied:
'God doth not need either man's works or his own gifts,
Who best bear his mild yoke they serve him best.
His state is kingly; thousands at his bidding
Speed and post o'er land and ocean without rest;
THEY ALSO SERVE WHO ONLY STAND AND WAIT.'"

You will please notice he didn't say "Walk up and down and wait."

FRENCH AUTHORS IN A FIERCE SWORD DUEL

Lacking Skill With Weapons They Slashed the Expert Who Directed the Combat—Fought Over Book and Then Made Up.

Special to The Examiner.

PARIS, DEC. 10.—The most sensational duel Paris has seen for many a month was fought Thursday in the very shadow of the Ferris wheel. Many persons witnessed the affair, and several photographers took pictures of the combatants. Photographers seem as necessary as principals to a modern French duel.

In this instance the principals were Georges Desparbes, the historian, and Ernest Gegout, a writer who has become known to many Americans in his capacity of curator of the museum in the palace at Fontainebleau. Rouzier Dorcieres was director of the meeting. He has so acted in more than one hundred duels.

Desparbes and Gegout were close friends. Desparbes recently got out a new edition of one of his books, "The King." Gegout wrote a letter to him finding fault with the book. Desparbes angrily resented it. Mutual friends vainly tried to heal the quarrel.

The men fought with swords. When Dorcieres placed them in the field he warned Gegout, who, like Desparbes, is married:

"Be calm. Remember, Desparbes is the father of five children."

They attacked violently, but with so little skill that one of the blades wounded Dorcieres, though not seriously. Often the duellists were breast to breast; twice Dorcieres halted the encounter to make certain that neither was hurt; but each time the sword point had perforated only a garment. Once Gegout was scratched, but he insisted on continuing. The swords flashed about the heads, breasts, arms, legs of both; the spectators wondered that one was not killed, but none could foretell which it was most likely to be.

Finally Desparbes was wounded in the shoulder. He wished to continue the combat, but the surgeon would not allow it. Gegout pushed through the crowd around the wounded man and held out his hand, saying, as it to an old friend after an absence:

"I'm glad to see you again; give me your hand."

"All right, old chap; how goes it with you?" Desparbes replied in the same familiar fashion. They shook hands and were perfectly reconciled.

A duel more serious in its results was fought earlier in the week, it is reported, the principals being two comedians well known on the Paris stage. The newspapers call them M. G—— and M. R—— and state that the challenge passed after one had insulted the other's wife.

The duel is described as having been fought by torchlight. It resulted in M. G—— being wounded so seriously that it is feared he will die. Many believed that M. G—— was Jean Coquelin; others that M. Champagne of the Theatre Palais Royal was the wounded man. But these actors continue to appear in their usual good health, so the identity of the duellists remains a mystery, if, indeed, the story is not a hoax, as many believe.

WANTS WORLD FULL OF BLOND GERMANS

BERLIN, DEC. 10.—The Emperor is reported to be interested in a plan proposed by Prof. Otto Hauser for the propagation of a fixed German type of humanity—a type which will be as fixed as the Jewish in its characteristics, if the suggestions of the Professor can ever be carried out. A national subscription is suggested to put the novel movement on a national and permanent basis.

The fixed type is to be produced as follows: Only "typical" couples are to be allowed to marry. The man is to be not more than thirty years old, the woman not over twenty-eight, and each have a perfect health certificate. The man should be no less 5 feet 7 inches tall; the woman not under 5 feet 1 inches. Neither the man nor the woman should have dark hair. In this way tongs from blond to auburn. The eyes of the pair should be pure blue without any trace of brown.

The complexion should be fair to ruddy, without any suggestion of heaviness or "muddiness." The nose ought to be straight and narrow, the chin square and powerful, and the skull well developed at the back. This kind of a skull is supposed to indicate love of family and children. The man and the woman must be of German descent and must bear a German name and speak the language of Germany. Those "entering complex" are to get a wedding gift of $100, and an additional grant for each child born. The couples may reside in the United States if they prefer.

Other German scientists who have considered Prof. Hauser's plan for a "fixed North German type" assert the whole idea is based on a wrong interpretation of the laws of nature. It recently has been pointed out by Major Charles E. Woodruff of the United States Army that it is impossible to transplant a fixed type, except to a territory where the weather conditions, soil, temperature and other natural environments are precisely as they were in the region from which the type has moved. The Danish Scandinavians and Teutonic types, the Major says, already are cropping out of existence in the United States, either by the death of the parents, exemplars of the type or by the modification of the type into a much darker complexion.

With the change in environment goes an alteration in the features—in the shape of the nose, the expression of the mouth, etc.

"Even were it, it is asserted, as fixed type of humanity outside of the region where the type originated. As for Germany, it is pointed out that the Hanseatic League is proposed as a large scale outside of Prussia on account of the pronounced tendency toward a darker complexion in other parts of the empire. Already there is strong jealousy of Prussia among the twenty-four other and very much smaller states in the Imperial Federation, and no plan for Government aid for a fixed Prussian type will stand a chance. However, the Emperor is at all likely to get Government aid through the Reichstag.

MUSIC AND DRAMA

"A BRIDAL TRIP."

That sterling singer, Miss Grace Van Studdiford made her first appearance in Peterborough last night when she was seen in a new comic opera "A Bridal Trip," and her magnificent singing entranced the audience who, in the words of one of the lyrics, "could not get enough." Miss Van Studdiford lived up to her advance notices as a singer who can really sing. She has a powerful sweet voice, pure and clear, in both high and low registers and her numbers were received with rapturous applause.

Planquette, the composer of "The Chimes of Normandy," wrote the music of "Bridal Eve," and he has given it a tuneful score, such as would be expected from his earlier effort. The music is sparkling and pleasing, and should be sufficient to give the production a long metropolitan run, when it opens in New York after Christmas. Harry B. Smith is responsible for the book and lyrics which are fully up to his standard. The production is gorgeously staged and the costumes are lavish in the extreme. The choruses are pretty and graceful and the dances and grouping thoroughly pleasing to the eye.

Miss Van Studdiford is supported by a very strong cast. Miss Maud Odell, as Clarisse, had a lion's share of the comedy, and gave a very clever characterization of the role. Harry McDonough was Maboulle, the rich-pecked husband, and showed himself a very clever comedian, while Robert G. Pitkin, as the breezy American chauffeur won instantaneous favour. George Leon Moore, as Prince Casain, revealed a very pleasing tenor voice and some of the most enjoyable of the musical numbers fell to his share. Some of the song hits were "When His Eyes Look Into Mine," "You're so Different from the Rest"; "A Humble Y. M. D.", and "Can You Forget".

THE MONODIET

about which we hear so much, does not mean living on one food exclusively, but on foods that harmonize.

Certain elements of nutrition are essential to health, but all these elements cannot be obtained from any one food—hence the necessity of a variety.

Deficiency of one or more of these elements, such as iron, for instance, in the blood, will cause anaemia, run-down condition and sleeplessness.

If you are one of the unfortunates who have drifted into this state, change your diet, eat foods that are rich in the mineral elements of nutrition, and take Vinol, our delicious cod liver and iron tonic, which contains no oil and supplies iron to the blood in the most easily assimilated form.

Vinol creates an appetite, aids digestion, makes pure, healthy blood. In this natural manner it builds up the run-down, weak and debilitated. If you don't find this to be a fact we will return your money if you will try a bottle. NEW ORCHESTRA

Has Been Formed in Peterborough Under Encouraging Auspices

A new orchestra has been formed, the members of which have been practising for some weeks. They were present at the Sons of England dinner last evening and created a favourable impression. Mr. T. H. Puttenham is the director, and the Examiner is informed that banquets and dances can be attended, and an orchestra of from five to ten pieces provided. The members playing last night were Messrs. Hackett, Andrews, Zepp, Walton and Mr. Puttenham at the piano.

A SERIOUS CHARGE

Is Preferred Against an Anstruther Man

Samuel Davis, of Anstruther, appeared before County Magistrate Edmison at the Court House yesterday afternoon on a charge of incest. He was remanded until Wednesday next.

POST CARD COLUMN

371 Aylmer street, city.

To the Editor of the Examiner:

Dear Sir,—The writer noted with interest in last evening's issue, several excellent reasons why Peterborough citizens should patronize the Belmont Minstrels' concert. In my opinion the principal reason was overlooked. The fact that it is a local effort should in itself be sufficient inducement for hearty support. Support Home Industry.

During my short stay here, it has several times been brought to my notice that the people of Peterborough are mighty generous to outside talent, whilst their own citizens may starve or be expected to work for nothing. I can cite instances where outside help has been employed, when equally as good assistance can be procured at less expense right at home. I urge a reform, not only in the present instance, but in the future. Truly, a prophet is without honour in his own country. Encourage those around you and you will be surprised at the result. Trusting you will pardon me for taking up so much valuable space, Mr. Editor,

Your truly,
F. H. PUTTENHAM.

ACCUSED'S WIFE AND DAUGHTER SWEARS THAT HE WAS AT HOME FROM 8 O'CLOCK UNTIL NEXT DAY

band was away on the day of the fire. He came home in the evening about half an hour after they had tea. He was home before dark. After he finished supper, he sat at the end of the table until he went to bed. He was never outside the house after he came home. She said that one could tell he had been drinking, but he was not by any means the worse of liquor.

Jane and Lottie Wilson, daughters of the accused, said that she remembered the McFadden fire. That evening their father came home about eight o'clock. After he had his tea he sat talking at the end of the table. He then went to bed.

Rev. C. Lord of Apsley, was next called. The accused was a member of his church. He had known him sixteen years. His reputation was good, except as to his drinking. He did not think he would commit such an offence.

Rev. Mr. Garbutt of the Methodist church of Apsley said that Wilson was an honest, hard-working man, but subject to drink.

Wm. Tucker of Anstruther, stated that he was Reeve of the Township of Burleigh and Anstruther. Wilson's reputation was good.

The court then adjourned until 2 o'clock.

Yesterday Afternoon's Session.

Louis Coombs, called, said he lived about half a mile south of McFadden's. He was there on June 4th. He went there between three and four o'clock and was there until 8 o'clock. Wilson came later with McAvesis. He repeated the evidence of McFadden in regard to the drinking. There was quite a scrap in the evening about a pig that had got into McFadden's grain. Wilson claimed the pig. Wilson and Mrs. McFadden had some words, Wilson calling the latter a nasty name. Mrs. McFadden shoved him out of the door. He did not hear Wilson make any threats. After the fire Mrs. McFadden told witness that she saw a woman running away from the barn.

Zadok Hales said he lived a mile and a half from Ezra McFadden. On June 4th he went to McFadden's about a quarter past seven with several other young men. Wilson was in the house. After they were there a few minutes, Wilson got up and walked to the north end of the house. He called witness out and Wilson said to Hales, "I'll burn their barn tonight." Wilson then started for home. Wilson was in his opinion very drunk. Percy McFadden had a bottle with him. He had been drinking and was somewhat under the influence of it.

John McFadden said he was a son of Ezra McFadden. He said that as near as he could remember it was between six and seven when he returned from the post office on June 4th. Joseph Wilson was told to go out by witness' mother, but he wouldn't. Wilson went by way of the barn on his way home after his conversation with Zadok Hales. Wilson and Frank McFadden stood talking at the barn. He saw the former take off his coat. Witness brought his horses to the stable and then went to the house for grain. When his mother opened the door to let him in, she immediately called out, "the barn is on fire." He ran to the barn and then to the top of a little hill. He saw Wilson running away. There was no doubt as to whom the man was, who was running from the barn.

BEARING DOWN PAINS

What woman at sometime or other does not experience these dreadful bearing down pains. Mrs. E. Griffith, of Main street, Hepworth, Ont., says: "A heavy bearing-down pain had settled across my back and sides. I was often unable to stoop or straighten myself up. Many times each night I would have to leave my bed with the irregular and frequent secretions of the kidneys and just as done out in the morning as on retiring. I was languid and would have no let my housework stand. Nothing I had tried would benefit me. I learned of Booth's Kidney Pills and concluded I would try them, which I did, and soon found the long sought relief. My back strengthened and I began to feel better and stronger. I now enjoy my sleep without being disturbed and feel grateful to Booth's Kidney Pills for what they did for me."

Booth's Kidney Pills

Booth's Kidney Pills are a boon to woman. She would know less of backaches if she took more of these wonderful pills. They are nature's greatest specific for all diseases of the kidneys and bladder. Sons Of England Annual Banquet

The Sons of England, Lansdowne Lodge, No. 25, held their annual banquet, marking the 27th anniversary of the local lodge, in the S.O.E. hall Hunter street, last night. An excellent supper was served, with Coleman Bros. as caterers, from seven o'clock until eight. The chair was occupied by Mr. Boxall, Past Supreme President, of Lindsay.

When supper was over, a toast to the King was honoured, after which the chairman made a few remarks in which he stated that he was glad to see so many ladies, as well as gentlemen, present. He said it gave him much pleasure to be with them, and felt that he was honoured to be present as their chairman. He spoke of life insurance and the reason why every person should carry insurance. He said that they should be in a position, so as to leave money to provide for those they leave behind, in case anything should happen to them. He said that he pitied people who lived entirely for themselves. There is more good, said the speaker, in living for others.

After the chairman's address, the following programme was given:

Selection—By the orchestra.
Song—Mr. Firth.
Banjo solo—Mr. Parkens.
Song—Mr. Barrett.
Instrumental—Miss Peyton.
Song—Mr. McLaren.
Address—Rev. Mr. Carpenter.
Song—Mr. Firth.
Banjo solo—Mr. Parkens.
Song—Mr. Barrett.
Instrumental solo—Miss Peyton.
Song—Mr. McLaren.
Selection—By the orchestra.

All the items on the programme were all of a very high order and the musical selection by the George street orchestra, were all much appreciated. The banquet was a complete success from start to finish and the large attendance added to the success of the occasion. The enjoyable evening was concluded in the usual manner, by singing the national anthem.

WHY SLEEP IS NECESSARY

During sleep Nature restores the cells and tissues wasted by the activities of life. Without sleep physical bankruptcy is quick and certain. Mrs. J. Derocher, 60 Bethune street, Peterborough, Ont., writes "I can say for a certainty that Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food is a splendid medicine, for besides steadying the nerves, it built up my sleep wonderfully and enabled me to sleep and eat well."

SERIOUS FLOODS

In Spain and Greece with Loss of Life and Great Damage to Property

Examiner Special.

GIBRALTAR, DEC. 15.—The lower parts of Spain, Italy, Greece and all other countries bordering on the Mediterranean, are in trouble from floods which from overflowing rivers have submerged the villages and vineyards cutting off communication with some districts and making it uncertain as to the full measure of the loss of life. The situation in some districts shows an improvement over yesterday.

MISSION BAND

The annual meeting of St. Andrew's Mission Band was held Dec. 12th. The following report was read by Miss K. Ross showing an average attendance of 19, and a balance of $100.

The officers for 1911 were elected as follows:

Hon. President—Mrs. Potter.
President—Miss G. Mowat.
1st Vice-Pres.—Miss L. Curry.
2nd Vice-Pres.—Miss D. Langford.
Secretary—Miss L. Hosken.
Asst.-Secretary—Miss A. Thornton.
Treasurer—Miss K. Ross.

LOW TONE OF BLOOD

Scientists say that this exponent of blood is marked by the liver and kidneys of a human being in a rage. Is it any wonder they get tired and sluggish and require the assistance of Dr. Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills to awaken them to action and to restore their vigour.

PEARLS IN OYSTERS

A few days ago Mrs. Hughes, 477 Bolivar street, purchased a quart of oysters from O'Brien's grocery on Charlotte street. Mrs. Hughes, after taking the bivalves home, cooked them, as per ordinary custom. As the family ate the oysters, their teeth encountered several hard substances. These proved to be six white and two black pearls, all of good size and lustre. The black pearls were particularly large, perfect and well formed. Mrs. Hughes took the pearls up to a local jewellery store to enquire as to their value. The jeweller after making a full examination of the pearls, told the lady that had she brought them to a jeweller before they were taken out, the pearls would have been worth a very considerable amount.

Grand Jury's Presentment

The Grand Jury made their presentment to His Honour Judge Huycke at the court house this morning, as follows:

Peterborough, Dec. 15, 1910.

To His Honour Judge Huycke—

We, the undersigned Grand Jurors by direction of the presiding Judge, have inspected the following institutions:

Court House, Jail, House of Providence, Protestant Home, all in the City of Peterborough, and the County House of Refuge, at Lakefield. We recommend that a new floor be laid in the portion of the lower hall of the Court House; also that suitable matting be purchased and put down in the aisles of the courtroom. In the jail we found everything in first-class condition; clean and tidy. There are several persons confined in the cells all of whom appeared to be in good health. In one apartment there is an inmate, an elderly woman, who is insane, and we recommend that she be removed to a suitable institution, where she can be taken care of. In another apartment there are a number of elderly men, who are confined there not because they are criminals, but on account of their age and no where else to go, and we strongly recommend that these inmates be removed to the House of Refuge, or some other poorhouse, where they can be taken care of, as they should be. At the House of Providence we found everything in excellent condition, and must congratulate the Roman Catholics of the city and County on the manner in which they take care of their poor. At the Protestant Home we found the inmates all very comfortable, and well fed and dressed, and although the building is very much out of date, it is well managed and taken care of. At the County House of Refuge we found about thirty inmates, most of whom are old and infirm, while some help with the farm work. The inmates are well taken care of and treated kindly, and the building is in good repair. The stock kept on the farm is in first-class condition and is a credit to the manager, Mr. Beavis.

Signed on behalf of the Grand Jury,

D. F. DRUMMOND, Foreman.

COUGHING BURST BLOOD VESSEL

Says Danger Avoided and Cures Coughs in 6 Hours

A writer for the medical press states that coughing is responsible for the bursting of blood vessels quite frequently. A cough or cold means inflammation (fever) and congestion, and these in turn indicate that the body is full of poisons and waste matter. Simple relief as found in patent cough medicines, and a whiskey, often result in more harm than good; as they cause more congestion. A tonic-laxative cough syrup will work marvels, and here follows a prescription which is becoming famous for its prompt relief and thorough cures. It rids the system of the cause, except it be consumption. Don't wait for consumption to grasp its victims, but begin this treatment which cures some hour for four hours. Then all one-half ounce fluid wild cherry bark, one ounce compound essence cardiol and three ounces syrup white pine compound. Take twenty drops every half hour or four hours. Then add one-half to one teaspoonful three or four times a day. Give children less according to age.

THE WEATHER

The mild spell that we have had for a day or so promises to be of short duration and it appearances do not deceive another decidedly cold wave is heading this way. The moist snow and sleet of this morning gave place to drifting, and a low but rapidly rising barometer shows that sleet and cold weather will soon be here.—W. P.

LINDSAY MEN ON TRIAL ON CONSPIRACY CHARGE

Inspector J. G. Fitzgibbon, of Farmers' Bank, Occupies the Entire Session of the Court With His Testimony Regarding the Financial Condition of the Bank---Long Cross-Examination.

Lindsay, Dec. 15—Charged with conspiracy to defraud and injure the Farmers' Bank of Canada, A. B. McGill, former manager, and J. L. Coulter and J. J. Fleury, ex-employes, were brought to trial yesterday before Judge Harding in the sessions court. M. K. Cowan, K.C., is counsel for the defence, and N. F. Davidson, K.C., assisting. It is alleged that the defendants conspired to have funds withdrawn by depositors of the Farmers' Bank for redeposit in another bank.

J. G. Fitzgibbon, chief inspector and chief accountant of the Farmers' Bank, was the only witness yesterday. McGill went to work with the bank in April, 1907. Fleury started with the bank in March, 1906, while Coulter began in July, 1907. Their resignations had come as a surprise. He also told of the 15-day rule as to the withdrawal of deposits.

To Mr. Cowan, witness corrected a statement he had made at the previous enquiry, that a writ for $150,000 had been issued against the bank by New York State parties. It had only been threatened.

To Mr. Cowan, witness stated that $500,000 Farmers' Bank stock had been taken up at $125 a share. All the stock was subscribed for at $125 at the end of 1908.

Everything in connection with the resignations of McGill, Coulter and Fleury was done in an orderly manner. Fleury was to get $580 for the year, but he was not wanted for the whole year, and was let go. McGill got a salary of $1,200 a year. Coulter left on July 4. Witness could find no fault for them seeking positions elsewhere.

In the cross-examination Mr. Cowan made an effort to show that the action of the accused was justified and asked many questions regarding the bank's transactions.

HATTIE LEBLANC IS ACQUITTED OF MURDER OF CLARENCE H. GLOVER

Cambridge, Mass., Dec. 15.—The jury in the trial of Hattie Leblanc, the seventeen-year-old French-Canadian girl, youngest woman ever to face execution on the charge of murder in a New England court, yesterday returned a verdict of not guilty, after being out one hour and thirty-five minutes.

Whereas crowds have besieged the court house on the previous days of the now famous trial, yesterday only 47 persons came into the court-room when the doors were opened.

When court was resumed at nine o'clock Judge Bond at once continued his charge to the jury.

In his address he referred to a sore on the finger of the defendant, which, he said, the prosecution claimed was made by the backfire on the revolver.

The district attorney then corrected the judge, saying that the Government claimed that the sore was made by the flash from the muzzle.

"Do you mean that she shot herself?" asked Judge Bond.

District Attorney Higgins did not reply.

The court called attention to the fact that no experiments had been made [illegible] to show that such a sore as has been described on the defendant's finger would be made with the revolver, although the police have held the weapon for more than a year.

Judge Bond said that the jury had the right to infer what interests influenced testimony on either side. He referred to Attorney Samuel D. Elmore's receiving $4,183 from Mrs. Glover, and said that if Elmore was interested in collecting evidence to use in the case to make it clear that Mrs. Glover was not implicated, then both witnesses were interested.

When Judge Bond ended his charge, Clerk William C. Dillingham turned towards the diminutive prisoner and said:

"Hattie Leblanc, you now have the opportunity of saying anything that you desire."

Pale and frightened, the girl rose, folded her arms across her breast, and turned towards the jury. Her voice was so faint that her words could be heard only a short distance. She spoke with a pronounced French accent as she said:

"I did not do it. I want to go home with my father."

The jury was unable to hear her because she spoke so faintly, and her chief counsel, Melvin M. Johnson, repeated her statement for the benefit of the jurymen.

The jury then retired.

Opposition To Credit Societies' Bill Which is Sent to the Committee —Monk's Measure Gets Second Reading

NEWS OF THE HOUSE

Ottawa, Dec. 15.—In the House yesterday Mr. Monk's bill to provide for control of co-operative credit societies was given a second reading. When clause 5, authorizing the credit societies, was reached, E. B. Osler (West Toronto) took exception, on the score that societies with practically no capital of their back would be able to take an unlimited amount on deposit, and lend it to themselves.

Mr. Monk contended that the bankers had withdrawn their objection to the bill when it was agreed that loans be limited to members, while Mr. Osler objected that a large sum be loaned to a member of the society, who might skip out before it was necessary to make a first report to the Government.

H. H. Miller, chairman of the banking and commerce committee, thought the proposed legislation was dangerous. Shadows had taken millions out of the pockets of Montreal, and it should not be made easy for others to play the Shadow game.

George H. Perley (Argenteuil) said it was his understanding that Mr. Fielding had agreed to the bill becoming law. It was in the power of the Secretary of State to confine the operation of any one society to a restricted area. He would be opposed to the bill, if a society could operate all over the Dominion.

Major Beattie (London) thought the bill would interfere with the operations of existing loan societies, which are properly capitalized, and which lend money at reasonable rates.

Mr. Osler explained that, while he was in sympathy with the principle of the bill, the necessity of putting a check on schemes of designing persons had been overlooked. He believed that if the bill were to become law, fifty societies would be formed within three weeks with objects of fraud.

Martin Burrill (Yale-Cariboo) objected to the attitude taken by Mr. Miller, that the banking and commerce committee of last session allowed the bill to be reported to the House out of sympathy for Mr. Monk. The House was dependent upon the standing committees for approval of the bills referred to them.

Mr. Osler wanted to have the share capital of any one society restricted to $20,000, irrespective of any action by the Minister.

"Why should we limit poor people to any sum, if they are able to operate successfully?" asked Mr. Monk.

When the committee rose at six o'clock only half the clauses in the bill had been dealt with, and the remainder will probably be discussed on Thursday. The main provisions of the measure sound.

[illegible] W. Carvell to have a standard barrel for potatoes, was given its second reading and reported. In addition to the 90-pound barrel, he desires a standard 80 pound barrel, because in Cuba, to which many Canadian potatoes are exported, that is the standard, and the Canadian farmer gets no more for his big barrel of potatoes in Cuba, than the American farmer for the smaller one.

A Big Merger.

Montreal, Dec. 15.—A cable from London, Eng., yesterday morning announced the formation of the Montreal Tramways & Power Co., with a capital stock equivalent to $2,000,000, for the purpose of acquiring all traction railways and power supply companies in Canada.

In Montreal this is said to be the device at last resorted to by the financiers now in control of the Montreal Street Railway and of the Canadian Light & Power Co. for effecting a combination of the two companies.

Palpitation of The Heart.

When the heart begins to beat irregularly or intermittently, palpitate and throb, skip beats, beats fast for a time, then go slow as to seem almost to stop, it causes great anxiety and alarm.

The least excitement or exertion seems to affect it.

Many people are kept in a state of morbid fear of death, besides weak, tired and miserable, through this continual action of the heart.

To all such sufferers Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills can give prompt and permanent relief.

Mrs. John Thompson, Mill Cove, N.S., writes:—"Just a few lines to let you know what Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills have done for me. I have been troubled with weakness and palpitation of the heart, would have awful shaking spells, and could scarcely lie down at all. I tried many remedies but got none to relieve my case like your pills did. I can recommend them highly to all suffering with heart and nerve trouble."

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are 50c. per box, or 3 boxes for $1.25 at all dealers or will be mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

How to Make the Best Cough Syrup and Save $2, by Making It at Home.

Cough medicines, as a rule, contain a large quantity of plain syrup. If you take two cups of granulated sugar, add one cup of warm water, and stir about 2 minutes, you have as good syrup as money could buy.

If you will then put 2½ ounces of Pinex (fifty cents' worth) in a 16 oz. bottle, and fill it up with the Sugar Syrup, you will have as much cough syrup as you could buy ready-made for $2.50. It keeps perfectly.

And you will find it the best cough syrup you ever used—even its whooping cough. You can feel it take hold—usually stops the most severe cough in 24 hours. It is just laxative enough, has a good tonic effect and taste is pleasant. Take a teaspoonful every one, two or three hours.

It is a splendid remedy, too, for hoarseness, asthma, chest pains, etc.

Pinex is the most valuable concentrated compound of Norway white pine extract, rich in guaiacol and all the healing pine elements. No other preparation will work in this formula.

This recipe for making cough remedy with Pinex and Sugar Syrup is now used and prized in thousands of homes in the United States and Canada. The plan has often been imitated but never successfully.

A guarantee of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, goes with this recipe. Your druggist has Pinex or will get it for you. If not, send to The Pinex Co., Toronto, Ont.

DELEGATES ! ADVISED

Last Instructions Are Given by Grange to Representatives

Toronto, Dec. 15.—At the closing session of the Dominion Grange convention in Victoria Hall, there was some hot discussion when Rev. J. G. Shearer read a resolution which the Moral and Social Reform Council wished the grangers to adopt. The resolution regretted the action of Parliament in legalizing professional race track gambling, repudiating the contention that this is necessary in the interests of horse breeding, and expressed gratification at the action of the Provincial Government in suppressing demoralizing pictures in cheap shops, especially fight pictures. This was unanimously approved, the dissention arising when reference was made to the suppression of social evils, by expressing the conviction that the criminal code ought to be amended so as "to make its enforcement more easy and effective, by providing for search of suspected premises with or without warrant, and by providing for a prima facie case, as is the case now with gambling houses and opium joints."

Some of the delegates expressed the opinion that this would give dangerous power to officials, and that houses might be searched because of a spite against the tenant. Dr. Shearer became somewhat nettled, saying he didn't think a body of farmers would find so many objections.

"Don't you think we know anything about law?" one asked.

"Why, yes," replied Dr. Shearer, "You seem to know more about it than the lawyers themselves."

Instantly some of the delegates took exception, and he added, "I mean that for a compliment." The members refused to accept the compliment, however, and the remark was withdrawn after repeated demands. Finally it was decided to amend the clause, making a warrant necessary. Then the reform resolutions were adopted bodily.

The Ontario delegates to the Ottawa tariff deputation were instructed to press for joint action for: (1) Reciprocal free trade between the United States and Canada in all agricultural products, fish and lumber. (2) Reciprocal free trade between the two countries in agricultural implements, vehicles and parts of same. (3) For an immediate lowering of the duties on all British imports to one-half the rates charged under the general tariff. (4) For a further gradual reduction of duties on British goods until complete free trade is established between Canada and the Mother Country.

The mayor told the session that the Canadian Textile Co. two years ago cut the wages of their employes by ten per cent., complaining that they were compelled to do it by lack of protection. "In that year," said the master, "the company cleaned up a profit of one million. It was a case of deliberate lying. There are no more persistent beggars than the cotton manufacturers."

A motion was passed endorsing suggestion that the grange should support the principle of direct taxation in the event of a drop in the country's revenue following the adoption of a tariff.

In the morning session the report of the education committee was read by James McKeown, M.P.P. It expressed grave apprehension at the increase of military training in the public schools, and said: "However harmless or beneficial this drill may be in itself, we fear that there is behind it a well-matured plan to make Canada a recruiting ground for the Imperial army and navy. Already we have essentially continental control over our own forces both on land and sea, and, unless there is strong opposition to those who now have this matter in hand, we shall soon awake to find a worse condition than conscription, namely, our young men ordered abroad to fight the battles of the Empire," without our having any say in the matter. There is no need to adopt military drill to teach neatness, punctuality, obedience, alertness, and in-

Preach the value of unity of action and co-operation in effort."

The following officers were elected: Master, Neil Burton, Middlemarch; overseer, E. C. Drury, Crown Hill; secretary-treasurer, J. J. Morrison, Arthur; lecturer, J. G. Lethbridge, Alliance; chaplain, W. Waldron, North Walton; steward, R. A. Sutherland, Stroud; assistant steward, H. McMillan, Beaverton; gatekeeper, Jas. Fallis, Newbridge; Ceres, Miss McKay, Beaverton; Flora, Miss Wardell, St. Thomas; Pomona, Miss Philp, Whitby; lady assistant, Miss Robinson, St. Thomas.

Strikers Starving.

Chicago, Dec. 15.—Settlement of the garment workers' strike was put off yesterday when strikers in several places refused to cast ballots on the proposition offered by the employers. Union leaders are attempting to force a settlement of the trouble before any persons die of starvation.

Steamer Ottawa Burned.

Watertown, N.Y., Dec. 15.—The steamer Ottawa of the Folger Line was burned to the water's edge at her dock at Cape Vincent yesterday. The Ottawa succeeded the steamer Islander that met a similar fate at Alexandria Bay a year ago. The loss is $20,000.

Frozen to Death.

River du Loup Station, Dec. 15.—A young man, unknown, about 30 years of age, well dressed, was found dead, frozen on the road in St. Antoine Village here.

Position of the Parties.

London, Dec. 15.—The results in the general elections announced yesterday leave the position of the rival parties unchanged. This is as follows:

Government Coalition—Liberals 223, Nationalists 28, Independent Nationalists 9, Laborites 36; total 381.

Opposition—Unionists 251.

Coalition majority 80.

C. E. Convention In Sydney.

Boston, Mass., Dec. 15.—The next convention of the world's Christian Endeavor Union will be held in Sydney, Australia, in 1914, the annual meeting of the union held in this city yesterday having so decided. Tokio has asked for the convention of 1917.

Temporary Heat Quickly

Did you ever stop to think of the many ways in which a perfect oil heater is of value? If you want to sleep with your window open in winter, you can get sufficient heat from an oil heater while you undress at night, and then turn it off. Apply a match in the morning, when you get out of bed, and you have heat while you dress.

Those who have to eat an early breakfast before the stove is radiating heat can get immediate warmth from an oil heater, and then turn it off.

The girl who practices on the piano in a cold room in the morning can have warmth from an oil heater while she plays, and then turn it off.

The member of the family who has to walk the floor on a cold winter's night with a restless baby can get temporary heat with an oil heater, and then turn it off. The

PERFECTION SMOKELESS OIL HEATER

Absolutely smokeless and odorless

is invaluable in its capacity of quickly giving heat. Apply a match and it is immediately at work. It will burn for nine hours without refilling. It is safe, smokeless and odorless. It has a damper top and a cool handle. An indicator always shows the amount of oil in the font.

It has an ornamental-looking flame spreader which prevents the wick from being turned high enough to smoke, and is easy to remove and drop back so that the wick can be cleaned in an instant.

The burner body or gallery cannot become wedged, and can be quickly unscrewed for rewicking. Finished in Japan or nickel, strong, durable, well-made, built for service, and yet light and ornamental.

"Pneumonia"

Pneumonia is nothing more or less than "Lung Fever," or as it used to be called, "Inflammation of the Lungs" and the results come entirely from a local source such as taking a violent cold.

There is more or less difficulty in breathing: a cough, at first dry, but soon accompanied by raising a thick, sticky, rusty-colored matter, composed of a mixture of phlegm and blood.

There is only one way to prevent Pneumonia, and that is to cure the cold just as soon as it appears. Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup will do this quickly and effectively.

Mr. G. W. Bowman, Petrolia, Ont., writes: "Three years ago I caught a cold which ended in a severe attack of Pneumonia. Since that time, at the beginning of each winter, I seem to catch cold very easily. I have been so hoarse that I was unable to speak loud enough to be heard across the room. Last winter, however, a friend advised me to try Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup, saying it had helped him. I bought a bottle and before it was half used I was completely cured. I also find it a good medicine for the children when they have colds."

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup is put up in a yellow wrapper; three pine trees the trade mark; the price 25 cents.

Manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

INTERMEDIATE TEAM SHOWS GREAT FORM

The Peterborough Intermediate O. H.A. team had its first real work out of the season last night with two full teams on the ice, and the way the players performed brought a smile to the faces of the executive members present, while there was a big bunch of satisfaction among the couple of hundred railbirds who watched the doings. A practice game was played with the two teams working at top speed and showing splendid form and condition for so early in the season. There should be no difficulty in selecting a team that will go some distance and it was no wonder that the management chortled with glee during the practice. Fred Kelley, the former Ingersoll boy was at right wing and opened the eyes of the fans with his clever stick-handling, great speed and pretty shooting, while Borel, a husky youngster who played with the Milton team last year covorted on the opposite side of the rink and uncovered speed, the ability to stick in his position and a splendid shot from the boards. Two better shooting wings have not been seen out with Peterborough for a long time. Charlie Bond, the former Cobourg defence man was out last night for the first time and made a most favourable impression. He proved an awkward proposition to get around and relieved frequently by nice rushes. When he rounds into shape he will be of great assistance to the team. Stewart, the Normal School student from Barrie, did a lot of nice rushing and has barrels of speed. Reynolds, the last point player of last year's Trenton junior team, checks and rushes nicely, and Roy Marshall, formerly of Deseronto, showed good form. All the local boys are going nicely. Ray and Dobson worked in centre ice with Kelley and Borel on the wings on one team and the quartette got in some nice combinaation. A few practices together and some forward line can be arranged. The two teams lined up as follows:

JUNIORS TO PRACTISE TO-NIGHT

The Peterborough Junior O. H. A. team will have the ice at Brock St. Rink to themselves to-night between 7 and 8 o'clock, and a full turn-out of the youngsters is expected. Every junior that expects to play the game this winter should be on hand, as this will be weeding-out night, when the hook will be administered to the material that does not look promising. The number out has been too unwieldy to accomplish much and the squad will be cut down in size only the best of the players being kept on.

The Intermediate team will practise again to-morrow night, and all the players out last night are requested to be on hand at 7 o'clock.

SOME HOCKEY HAPPENINGS

The Junior O. H. A. team management particularly request that Patterson and Halpin should attend to-night's practice at Brock Street Rink.

The Peterborough Hockey Club management is very well satisfied with the groups in which the local teams were placed at last night's meeting of the executive. The Intermediate grouping, Belleville, Trenton, Cobourg and Peterborough was the arrangement decided upon by the local club at its meeting on Tuesday night, and it seems to have met with the approval of the O. H. A. as well. With four strong clubs in the race there should be some interesting hockey in this district before the group honours are decided. Belleville, Trenton and Cobourg all have good rinks, which will suit the Peterboroughs down to the ground, as there will be no handicap in the way of soup-plate ice-boxes.

The junior district is also a good one. Our old friends from Lindsay always create some excitement here, no matter what series they may be in, and the Cobourg junior team should be strong.

INDIGESTION GOES IN FIVE MINUTES

Heartburn, Dyspepsia, Gas and Other Stomach Misery Vanishes

If what you just ate is souring on your stomach or lies like a lump of lead, refusing to digest, or you belch Gas and Eructate sour, undigested food, or have a feeling of Dizziness, Heartburn, Fulness, Nausea, Bad taste in mouth and stomach, headache—this is Indigestion.

A full case of Pape's Diapepsin costs only 50 cents and will thoroughly cure your out-of-order stomach, and leave sufficient about the house in case some one else in the family may suffer from stomach trouble or indigestion.

Ask your pharmacist to show you the formula plainly printed on these 50-cent cases, then you will understand why Dyspeptic trouble of all kinds must go, and why they usually relieve sour, out-of-order stomachs or Indigestion in five minutes. Diapepsin is harmless and tastes like candy, though each dose contains power sufficient to digest and prepare for assimilation into the blood all the food you eat; besides, it makes you go to the table with a healthy appetite; but, what will please you most is that you will feel that your stomach and intestines are clean and fresh, and you will not need to resort to laxatives or liver pills for Biliousness or Constipation.

This city will have many Diapepsin cranks, as some people will call them, but you will be cranky about this splendid stomach preparation, too, if you ever try a little for Indigestion or Gastritis or any Stomach misery.

Get some now, this minute, and forever rid yourself of Stomach Trouble and Indigestion.

PERSONAL AND SOCIAL

Mr. S. White, of Lakefield, is a guest at the Snowden House.

Mr. P. J. Lynch and Mr. Wm. Bibby of the Grand Trunk Railway, were in the city to-day.

Mr. Mac. Turner of the Belmont Minstrels, will be the guest of Mr. C. G. Graham while in the city.

Mr. S. Crichton, one of the prize-winning fruit growers of the famous Okanagan Valley, B.C., spent Tuesday and Wednesday in town, the guest of Dr. and Mrs. Gowan, Brock street.

Mr. E. A. Rae, Edmonton, Provincial Light Inspector for Alberta, is in the city to spend the Christmas holidays and welcome the greetings of his home friends. He is delighted with the fair way, and is an enthusiastic in praise of its climate and Edenesque quality as a land agent.

Hundreds will remember Mr. S. M. Dehnisteyn, formerly of Peterborough, now of Winnipeg, as a fine looking man, indeed all a modernized Apollo Belvidere. He has it [illegible], does well in his profession in the west, but there is reason to fear that he has sadly deteriorated in physical beauty, if the portrait printed in the Winnipeg Free Press of him as counsel for the Public Commission, in the vice-commission inquiry, is a likeness. This gentleman, representing "Central Domination," as a cross between a battered [illegible] and Cruikshank's conception of Mr. Bumble of "Oliver Twist." If Mr. Dehnisteyn does not bring an action for damages against the Free Press, it will not be because he has not good reason.

190 AYLMER ST. PHONE 628

POST CARD COLUMN

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Sir,—The Rev. Father McColl writes a very acceptable letter in your issue of yesterday. He says: "When referring to the right kind of democracy I had in mind the democracy of Great Britain, Canada. . . . ." Of course I could not tell that this was the "idea in his mind." If I had thought for one moment that this was "the idea in his mind" I would certainly have agreed with him and then he would not have felt called upon to say that I was an atheist, an almost unpardonable charge. [illegible] not let mere names or perso[illegible]ro with the argument, and on looking at it carefully I find that the present situation now agreed upon by both of us is that the church is not in any sense in control of or superior to the State, but that the people rule all things as in Great Britain, Canada, etc. This establishes, with Father McColl's warm approval, the "sovereignty of the will of the people" (something expressly condemned less than two months ago by the Pope in his decree). The State is, of course, bound to proceed as nearly as possible in conformity with the principles of justice (called by some "eternal justice)" and in accordance with the will or law of God, manifested through humanity to humanity, and not, of course, under any pretense to be disregarded. The democracy of Britain and Canada, as a whole or State, takes no thought of the Pope, but of the principles of religion in general, and this Father McColl agrees with. There is no getting away from what he said. The democracy which he admits to be a right democracy, does not, as a democracy, recognize any human determining power but itself. To it God is God, with no vicar on earth but the people. All this leaves to humanity, [illegible]nowing known as the people, the right and privilege of interpreting and following the commands of God the Father, as revealed to every human soul, regardless of the Pope.

I confess that I did not know that this was sound Catholic doctrine before, but I am exceedingly pleased to find Father McColl say that it is. Instead then, of the people's being in any way beholden to the Pope or under his rule and guidance, they are beholden only to the principles of eternal law and justice, the divine ideal. With this I agree, and while it is not what the Pope says in his recent decree, it leaves one free to say in future that Father McColl is with the people, whatever the Pope may say. That my conclusion from his letter is a fair estimate of Father McColl's position is established by the fact that a large number of people called it "a complete capitulation," "throwing up the sponge," "abandoning papal claims," etc., etc. But I do not wish to use any word of a triumphant nature. I am satisfied that he believes in the [illegible] of the people to rule themselves. The "sovereignty of the will of the people" though condemned in the "Le Sillon" decree of the Pope in a few months ago is admitted by Father McColl to be the correct principle. If Father McColl will repeat his letter from the public platform he will be cheered to the echo by every Protestant in the city, including

Had Seven Accomplices

NEW YORK, DEC. 14.—The murderer of John C. Warner, the civil engineer who at the time of the expressmen's strike was stabbed near Thirty-second Street and Seventh Avenue as, rigged in a khaki suit for a hunting expedition, he was on his way to Long Island, had no less than seven accomplices. This has been revealed by the confession of James F. Mulligan, which, the detectives say, has been corroborated.

On Friday night Charles Hansen of No. 674 Fulton Street, Brooklyn, was arrested; yesterday morning Andrew Martin of No. 163 East One Hundred and Seventh Street was taken into custody, and yesterday afternoon Edward Hirschfeld of No. 166 East One Hundred and Twelfth Street was apprehended and held for examination.

MOTHER PLEADS WITH HIM

Hansen and Martin with Mulligan were taken before Assistant-District Attorney Rubin yesterday morning. There the mother of Mulligan threw her arms about her son's neck and pleaded with him to tell all he knew of the murder. The sight of the distracted mother had a strong effect on the newly arrested men. Martin corroborated almost everything that Mulligan had said in his confession. Hansen denied that he had been with the men who killed Warner, but said he knew Mulligan and he met him the day before the murder.

Both Martin and Hansen were taken before Coroner Hollenstein, held without bail and committed to the Tombs. Mulligan had been paroled in the custody of Detective Dominick Reilly, under whose supervision he has been ever since his arrest. Night before last he accompanied the detective to the car barns of the express company, where he identified several men who he said were either in the crowd of men who killed Warner or were witnesses of the murder. The same night he went to Brooklyn and identified Hansen's picture at Police Headquarters.

Mulligan has named the man who actually stabbed Warner, but his name has not been given out, as the police are still searching for him.

Mulligan admits that he was one of the first if not the first man who laid hands on Warner. Warner, he says, drew back his arm and pushed his assailant to one side. In doing so he slipped and fell. While struggling with the crowd on top of him he was stabbed in the back.

Mulligan has given the name of the man who took to the strike headquarters the shotgun Warner was carrying. Joseph Murphy, walking delegate for the Chauffeur's Union which struck in sympathy with the expressmen, is held as a material witness. It is said that for some time after the murder he had Warner's gun in his custody.

NEVER AGAIN FOR HIM

WASHINGTON, DECEMBER 14.—"Never again for me, not even after New Year's," said Harry Waskoff, a green grocer, after being fined $20 in the police court for hissing a girl customer.

Miss Annie E. Smith, sixteen, entered Waskoff's store to buy some pickles. Waskoff, after wrapping up the pickles, intimated that Miss Annie might give him something sweet in return, and when she did not seem to understand, leaned over the counter, took her in his arms and kissed her, saying:

"I've given you one, now give me one."

But the girl fled from the store, leaving the pickles behind. Waskoff was arrested at the instance of Miss Smith's father.

Injured in A Collision

NEW YORK, DEC. 13.—A cry from a woman pressed by a crowd of bundle-laden women into the forward part of a Southbound Third Avenue car near One Hundred and Sixty-ninth Street in the Bronx last night, made everybody in the car apprehensive. Those near the frightened woman looked out ahead and saw in the path of the car a fire engine drawn by three horses.

As they looked the driver swung the horses to the west in a quick effort to clear the southbound track upon which he was going north.

The motorman of the car, Thomas Moriarty, of No. 474 East One Hundred and Forty-sixth Street, threw his controller back to zero and put on all brakes, both air and hand.

In the moment of impending collision the car, which had seemed to have room for no more passengers, developed a clear space at the forward end as the women and children who were its main passengers pressed to the rear.

Then as the lights went out the crash came. The glass vestibule was wrecked, its wooden framework folding backward like pasteboard, pinning and crushing the motorman against the front walls of the car structure proper.

Glass on either side of the front of the car was broken and fragments cut a number of women and children. The fire engine didn't topple over, and its driver retained his seat.

Just before the car struck the engine the driver had got the horses clear of the track and the engine was skidding sideways on the slippery pavement.

Moriarty, the motorman, was sent to Fordham Hospital, where it was said that though he might have escaped and injured internally he had a chance for life. The passengers who were cut by particles of glass went on in another car.

The driver of the fire engine, Jas. H. McKane, said he had swung to the southbound track from the north a moment before the collision to pass a heavy truck and that he was about to turn back when he saw the car. The engine was not going to a fire, but was being transferred from a downtown firehouse to one in the Bronx.

THE PLACE OF FLYING SMILES

This month is the month of the toyshop, and CANADA MONTHLY (formerly Canada-West) for December gives in its editorial columns a winsome picture of the temple of Kris Kringle.

A confused light laughter and patter, stinkle of bells and rush of little feet, a glory of possession and a joyous crying upon Santa Claus—that's the toyshop in December, where sparkles every wonder that ever was fashioned in the Harts Mountains, or the Land East o' the Sun and West o' the Moon, or wherever it is that all delightful magics are made.

Up in the elevator you go, through the floors of the big shop, the car stopping to let off grumpy, blind creatures who wander off among hats and shoes and other delusions, quite ignorant of fairyland only eight floors up. The very click of the machinery sounds like a chuckle when the car stops there, and even the well trained elevator man grins.

How the older folks' faces change in the toyshop! Nobody is old there. Out of the elevators they come, loosely dwonsen who have borne their babies and justified their existence beyond any necessity of corseting or cosmetics; absorbed business men, with a wriggling little paid held fast in either hand, and a half-ashamed enthusiasm surreptitiously twitching under their moustaches, stray grown-ups who must borrow some luckier man's toddler to lead them into fairyland. Sad and lined their faces may be in the elevator, sharp-nosed, tight of lip, with the uncompromising bones of the skull pressing hard against the sallow skin. But once on the toyshop floor the old wrinkles vanish, dull eyes light, and lips that have repressed sharp words and complainings through long years of patience relax at last into a smile. No one is sad in the toyshop, no one is old. The average of youth is seven, the average of laughter one hundred per cent.

How could it be otherwise with the children swarming everywhere? Hopping up and down among the hobby-horses, playing tinkle-tunes on the dolls' pianos, rollicking at full speed down the aisle with a miraculous rolly-wheel that chinks distractingly as it goes, scrambling for a turn in the swings, clambering up ladders to sit down and slide almost ecstatic feet of smoothwaxed maple toboggan, leading on the floor with a squeal of rapture and arms and legs flying to the four winds—children everywhere, laughter everywhere, nobody old or sad or bargaining—of course, nobody's old in the toyshop.

Here was Half-Past-Two, all pink frock and shiny patent-leather feet, her hot mouse too shady as she settled across the floor to fatten her wee nose on the doll show-case, where Dolorous herself stood in a pale blue trousseau consulting with face and wonderful bronze slippers. Yonder was Half-Past-Two's big sister, manoeuvring regarding a debutante dressing-set, all white enamel and baby-bluefeather-stitched chenille-cloth, while Brother, who might have been quarter to five, was valiantly blowing a horn, marching hay-foot, straw-foot,

As gaily dancing off to war
As dancing a cotillion.

So Half-Past-Two squatted before the doll show-case all alone, hardly as high as my knee, and crooned to herself blissfully, while Going-on-Seven buried his small nose in a book at the neat counter, and Grown-Up-Eleven took care of a certain Wee Thing who was really too small to have any age whatever, but sucks de better pacifier with a regal disregard of germs. I noticed Grown-Up-Eleven casting wistful glances at some of the doll-outfits, but I wouldn't betray her for the world. Eleven is, of course, altogether too old for dolls—and I had been admiring a fluffy camel not five minutes before myself.

At last I recollected an appointment that must be kept, and dragged myself away towards the stairs, carefully making room for small Valour galloping by on a coal-black steed. At the head of the stairs, snugly hidden away behind a pile of red express-wagons was Half-Past-Two again, with a music-box. If you could have seen her rapt little face as she played Annie Laurie with uncertain variations, you would have balanced between laughter and tears. So must the little new angels in Heaven look when they try their harps for the first time.

Go to the toyshop once at least before Christmas. It will make you a year younger at least, and a deal happier. For the toyshop is the place of flying smiles, the house of childhood, the palace of dreams, the first way station on the road to fairyland, where happiness is unadulterated by doubt, delight untinged by envy, and where Santa Claus is patron saint and king.

HOW SQUIRE CHALMERS KEPT THE ROAD

A Short Story.

It was in the old Chronicles of the House of Chalmers, a well-known Cornish family, that I came across the following strange, and in some way unaccountable, tale, in a large volume bound in white vellum, which was a sort of diary of the annals of my family.

This is exactly how it ran:

"I must write it all down. My wife, Ursula, would not allow me to leave out the smallest occurrence. My son, when he comes after me, will want to read of that most marvellous, that most unaccountable ride, in all its fulness. I can give no explanation. As the story happened, so I relate it. The ways of Providence are past finding out, and what impelled my movements on that wonderful night, what voice whispered to my groom, and forced the toll-keeper and the ferryman to be in readiness for me, and those others, who all manner to mention, to lead me, is more than I can ever explain.

"This is the story:

"On a certain day in the year of Grace 1800, I, Henry Chalmers, having lately come into possession of my estates, rode my mare Starlight to a distant part of Cornwall. I rode between flowery hedges and deep lanes in search of I knew not what. I was naturally of a quiet and stay-at-home disposition, but on this day I felt that I must be up and doing. All had gone well with me, hitherto, in my life. I inherited my estates from an uncle, to whom I was not devotedly attached. His death, therefore, a year ago, had caused me little acute trouble. I was engaged to be married to the girl whom I most dearly loved. My sky stretched before me without even the shadow of a cloud. Nevertheless, I could not stay at home, and mounting on Starlight had ridden her so fast and long that at last the poor beast was tired and showed her weariness by suddenly going lame in one foot. Now I loved this mare, whom I had known from the time she was a tottering foal, and would not for the world ill-treat her. I dismounted, therefore, patted her on her arched neck, examined her foot, and then led her, not knowing inn where both she and I might rest where I was walking or why, but determined to find the best possible for the night.

"Without intending it, I had wandered into a particularly lonely part of the country, and for a long time I could not see anything approaching a place of shelter. At last, however, situated in a hollow, amongst a clump of trees, I came across a little hamlet of houses with thatched roofs, and amongst them was the proverbial village inn. It was known as the Sign of the Thistle, and was a pretty little place, although somewhat neglected in appearance. I walked up to the door, leading Starlight by the rein. Both the landlord and landlady came out to greet me. I asked if they could put up my horse, if she could be attended to, and if I, also, could have a bed for the night.

"They were regular Cornish folks, dark-eyed, with strong features. They received me with cordiality, an assured me that they could give me all that was required for the mare's comfort, and could also provide for me.

"The landlady took me upstairs an showe dme my bedroom. It was a sparsely furnished apartment. It contained a huge four-poster, and a monstrous feather bed, but hardly any other furniture. I was easily contented, however, and a minute or two later I found my way to the stables, where I, myself, gave directions with regard to Starlight, and when satisfied as to her comfort, I returned to the house where a savoury meal awaited me in a small, old-fashioned coffee room. A round table was drawn into a bay window at one end of the apartment, whereon a cloth was spread, and where presently a substantial, if homely, meal of fried eggs and home cured bacon, with an excellent dish of asparagus, were placed before me. To this the landlord added a bottle of really good Burgundy, and I expressed myself well content.

"But I had scarcely begun to eat, when I noticed that a man came and stood at the door of the coffee room. He was a thin, meagre looking individual, with long straw-colored hair, a face almost waxen in hue, dull, rather anxious eyes, a long upper lip, and ragged unkempt whiskers at each side of his face. He was dressed very shabbily, and altogether had the anxious, almost frightened air of a person who had known whether with reason or not, a good deal of fear in his life. I saw the landlord talking to this stranger for a few minutes, and soon afterwards he came up to meand said—

"'I am sorry to intrude, sir, but would you object to the gentleman who has just arrived sharing your table for dinner. It would convenience us very much, for this is market day, and we have no corner where he can enjoy a quiet meal.'

"'Make no apologies, my good fellow,' I replied. 'Your guest is heartily welcome to share my table. It is, I take it, a great deal too big for one.'

"The landlord assured me that I was a most affable gentleman, and soon afterwards the cadaverous looking stranger was facing me at the board. On nearer acquaintance, I perceived that my fellow-traveller had a perfectly harmless and gentle face, but with such a deprecating and appealing expression in his eyes that I felt a sense of discomfort whenever I met them. It was as though he were beseeching me to do something for him with his eyes alone, for his lips were almost silent—his replies to my conversation being almos tmonosyllabic. I tried to pump him a little with regard to himself, but he was either too shy or absolutely unwilling to confide in me, and although I forced on him a good glass of Burgundy, and filled his pipe for him, not only once but twice, still, with all my endeavors to make myself agreeable, he held himself aloof in the most mournful way, as though he would like to be friendly if he dared.

"He left the supper table before I did, and thanked me in a modest voice for what heralled my affability and went up at once to his bedroom. There was something about the man which atonce aroused my contempt and my pity.

"'He is doubtless one of those unfortunate poor devils who has been always down on his luck,' I mentally soliloquised. 'Well, we are scarcely likel yto meet again, but I am glad I ensured his having a comfortable dinner.'

"During the night I dreamt of thestranger, who, as a matter of fact, occupied theroom next to mine, and when I came down on the following morning, I asked the landlord if his visitor intended to share my breakfast as well as my dinner.

"'Oh no, sir,' replied mine host. 'The poor man went on his way some three hours ago. He was very much obliged to you, sir, and said he had seldom met a more kindly gentleman.'

"'What was his name?' I asked.

"'I did not inquire, sir. I know nothing whatever about him. We do have people of his sort coming to the Sign of the Thistle times and again, but weare never likely to see any more of him, I take it. He is doubtless very poor, and so weakly that my wife thinks hewon't be long for this world.'

"I said nothing further, but sat down to my breakfast, and made a hearty meal., Starlight had recovered her indisposition during the hours of the night, and soon after nine o'clock on that summer's morning, I left the little old-fashioned inn amid the blessings and curtseys of my good landlady, the Love of mine host, and the shy admiration of a little maid of three years of age, who was perched on her father's shoulder, and who saw me off with the deepest interest.

"About six months afterwards I heard that the landlord and landlady, whose name happened to be Brown, had sold the Sign of the Thistle to another man; but, busy with my own affairs as I was, at that time, I scarcely took any notice of the circumstance.

"Two whole years of adventure and bustle passed by. I was happily married to the girl whom I loved, and in course of time was the father of one of the bonniest boys in England.

"On a certain evening in the month of June, just when the days were at their longest, I had spent a fatiguing time visiting some outlying farms in the neighborhood of the county town of Chadwick. I was all impatient to be home again, for I was thinking of my wife and child, and in particular of some music which Ursula was preparing for my special benefit, and which she promised to play to me that evening. Still, work had to be done, and I was the last man to neglect my appointed duties.

"I had settle dall to my own satisfaction and returning to Chadwick between eight and nine o'clock, mounted my horse which was ready for me at the principal inn of the town. My groom followed behind and we rode rapidly through the little market town. As we passed the Court House, I noticed a great crowd outside, and inquired the cause of the excitement. 'Why, master, don't you remember, these are the assizes, and there is a man being tried for his life; thy say he will go hard with him. I don't know any particulars, but they say he will be hanged by the neck. I only hope I may be there to see.'

"I reproved Amos for the savage instinct which would give him pleasure in seeing a man struggling for existence, to which he answered that he was right sorry for the chap, but if he had to be hanged it might be as good a lesson as any other, to watch him quit the world.

"My groom talked on, giving me various little pieces of local gossip, to which I scarcely listened, for I was all the time thinking of Ursula and the dark-eyed babe who was as a king to me, and who would, by and by, reign in my stead.

Now there were two ways back from Chadwick to Chalmers Hall, one round by a fairly well kept road, across the principal bridge, then on to the mai nroad again, then under some princely trees and by a wide avenue, and so through the park gates right up to the house. This way occupied a distance of fifteen miles, but there was a shorter route across the ferry and through a less well kept road, through the toll-gate and so up to the house, a matter of twelve miles. As a rule I took the long way, preferring it to the route by the ferry. On this particular night I went, as was my custom, round by the bridge, and in course of time was delighted to see my dear and lovely Ursula waiting for me on the steps of the old mansion.

"There she stood in her regal dress of purple velvet, her eyes shining like stars, her fair hair clustering in curls round her forehead and neck, and the babe, the most beautiful creature in the world, springing joyfully in her arms at the sight of his father.

"'Why, you are late!' she said. 'I have kept Baby up, for he has done nothing but call out for you during the latter part of the day. He cannot go straight off to his cosy nest now, mustn't he,. the sweet,' and she smothered the child's face with her own kisses.

"'Come in, Harry,' she continued. 'Come in, you must be utterly spent; but I have a good supper waiting for you.'

"I had already dismounted, my groom had taken the reins and groom and horses had disappeared round the avenue towards the stables. Ursula followed me into the house.

"'What kept you so late?' she began.

"'I had some difficulty at Hedges' Farm,' I said. 'I didn't want to evict the people, and yet I had to insist on their performing their part of the contract. Never mind now, Ursula dear. I want to stay and talk, for I am both hungry and thirsty. Afterwards you shall lull me to sleep with your sweet music.'

"'Oh, I have prepared such sweet music to-night,' she said, looking into my face with her bright eyes. 'But you will go upstairs and get tidy before dinner, won't you, Harry?'

"I promised, and she left me at once, carrying the baby herself up the wide stairs. I watched her for a minute as I stood in the centre hall. She turned at a corner of the spacious staircase, waved her hand to me, kissed the babe and was then lost to sight.

"I don't know what impelled me to do as I did then, but instead of following her advice and going up to my dressing room to change, as was mycustom ,into full evening dress, I went into a sort o fmorning room, where I kept my whips, pipes, guns, etc. There was a window here which looked right out on the carriage drive. I stood at it and watched the young moon coming up over the hill. It was the veriest crescent moon, an dI was glad to observe, being in spite of myself, somewhat superstitious, that I saw it through the open window, and without the intervention of glass between it and

When You Feel Cross

DR. CHASE'S KIDNEY-LIVER PILLS

And Are Easily Worried and Irritated, Chances Are That the Liver is Not Right and You Need

Life is too short to be cross and grouchy. You not only make yourself miserable, but also those about you.

Don't blame others. Blame yourself for not keeping the liver right.

When healthy and active the liver filters the poisonous bile from the blood and passes it into the intestines, where it aids the process of digestion and keeps the bowels regular.

But when the liver balks thewhole system becomes clogged with a mass of fermenting food, which gives rise to gas on the stomach, belching of wind, pains about the heart, and a multitude of annoying symptoms which accompany indigestion and constipation.

There is nothing in the world which will more promptly afford you relief than Dr. Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills. This statement is true. A trial will convince you. This medicine acts definitely and directly on the liver and bowels and cleanses the whole digestive and excretory system.

Mr. Theo. Sedard, Lac aux Sables, Portneuf county, Que., writes:—"I have found Dr. Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills the best treatment obtainable for indigestion and impure blood. They cured me of indigestion, from which I suffered for four years.

"This certificate is given without solicitation, so that others may not waste their money buying medicines of no value when they can get Dr. Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills, which I am confident are the best."

Dr. A. W. Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills, one pill a dose, 25 cents a box, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

HAD KIDNEY TROUBLE.

COULD NOT CROSS THE FLOOR PAIN WAS SO GREAT.

Miss Hazel Hess, Winchester Springs, Ont., writes:—"I was troubled with my kidneys for five years. They were so bad, at times, I could not cross the floor for the pain. The doctor could not do me any good and a friend advised me to use Doan's Kidney Pills. I bought six boxes and now I have been cured for over four years. I will recommend them to every sufferer."

No wonder one has strong and healthy nerves when the kidneys are well. When the kidneys are ill, the whole body is ill, for the poisons which the kidneys ought to filter out of the blood are left in the system. Then how important it must be to see to it that the system of sewerage be not clogged up.

Doan's Kidney Pills are a purely vegetable medicine, combining quick, permanent relief, without any after ill effects. A combination that will effectually cure backache and all forms of kidney and bladder trouble.

Doan's Kidney Pills are 50c. per box at 3 for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

In ordering direct specify "Doan's."

me. I had just noticed it, and was about to go upstairs when to my amazement I saw my groom, Amos, coming quickly round the avenue leading my favorite mare, Starlight, saddled and bridled. I had been riding a stout cob, Rufus, all day. He brought her to the front door, where he waited, looked round him eagerly, caught sight of me, and called out—

"'Here she is, sir. I got her ready as fast as possible.'

"I went out to him in some amazement.

"'What in the world do you mean?' I said. "I don't want Starlight now. Take her back again."

"But excuse me, sir, you told me to get her ready as fast as ever I could. Yo usaid you wanted to be off, and you hadn't a moment to lose."

"My first inclination was to let out a torrent of abuse at the lad, but when I looked into his face, all wish to speak left me. I felt the strangest sensation that could ever be vouchsafed to anybody, and that was a mad desire to find myself on Starlight's back. There she stood, curving her graceful neck, and looking at me with her bright eyes. Get on her I must, and get on her also as quickly as I possibly could. Somehow, I felt that it was not only necessary to ride her, but that it was necessary to ride her quickly, to go as fast as ever I could, as fast as the mare's fleet feet could take me, I knew not whither.

"All thought of Ursula and her disappointment and amazement when she found me not coming in to supper, faded from my mind. I said, after a brief moment's pause—

"'That's all right, then, Amos. You have been quick, and I am off.'

"I sprang on the mare's back, and the sound of her hoofs thundering up the avenue as fast as ever I could compel her to go, must have been born up to Ursula as she laid her babe to rest.

"I must reach the toll gate whatever happens,' I thought, and I urged my willing steed with both spur and whip. But she did not need any entreaties of mine to go fast. Never before had she flown at such a rate. But it seemed to me, that in some accountable way, that minutes were dragging, and that we never could reach our destination in time. All the same I did not know what that destination was, and I had not the faintest idea why I was on Starlight's back; why I had gone away without saying a single word to my wife; why I, a tired man, weary to death with a long day's work, should be suddenly galloping over the roads as fast as ever the feet of my good mare could convey me. I kept on repeating to myself—

"This is absolute folly! But I will ride as far as the toll-gate. The toll-gate, of course, will be shut. The toll-keeper, I know, goes to bed soon after eight o'clock, and will be snoring lustily. I won't wake him, poor chap, I will just go as far as the toll-gate and the unaccountable sensation which is at my heart, and which is driving me there will have passed by then, and I will go home. Yes, when I reach the toll-gate I will return and Starlight will be all the better, for her gallop in the moonlight."

"But there was no moonlight. The young crescent moon was already hidden behind banks of clouds which were gathering up in every direction. Long as the days now were, it was past ten o'clock, and for a mid-summer's night really dark. The wind, too, was sighing amongst the trees. There had been a long season of drought, and little eddies of dust kicked up by my mare's hoofs, were blown disagreeably into my mare's eyes. Still we thundered on and on.

"When we got to the toll-gate we will go back,' I kept on repeating and repeating.

"But when we did not reach the gate, what was my amazement to see it wide open, and old Jakes, the toll-keeper was standing at one side, his wife and little son having placed themselves just behind him. The moment he saw me approaching, he took off his moleskin cap, waved it three or four times in the air, and shouted in a voice of great excitement:—

"'Here you are, Squire! I kept the gate open, for I knew you would be coming. You go through at once, Squire, and don't wait to pay the toll until you are returning; and ride for your life, sir; ride for your life! And God bless you, sir! God bless you!"

"His words were utterly amazing and the frantic gestures of excitement from his wife and son were only matched by his own. Starlight thundered through the open gate-way and on the dusty road, and I felt my heart beating in the quickest state of ungovernable amazement. The frantic haste I had felt the very moment I had seen my mare saddled and bridled and standing waiting for me outside my front door, was nothing to what now caused my heart to beat as though it must burst. Yes, there was no doubt about it; whatever the consequence, I must go forward and as rapidly as it was in the power of man and beast to go.

"Presently we found ourselves in the open country, and a very barren piece of country it was. It was a road stretching across a great extent of heather and moorland, and not a living soul in sight. There were mile stones here and there to mark the way, and there was an old gibbet on which three robbers had hung not so many years ago, their bones clanking in the wind, and there was a blasted oak tree which the lightning had scared. All these objects stood out black and gaunt in the semi-darkness of the summer's night, and still Starlight and I kept the road rushing on and on, and on. Starlight good horse, being quite willing to go anywhere, in any direction where I bade her go, and I, myself in a state of absolute astonishment, not having the faintest idea what I was doing, or where I was being driven, for it came over me, as I rushed along that windy desolate track and dreary road, that something, superhuman, unaccountable was directing my way, and that I was compelled to go I did not know where, and to do I did not know what.

But by and by, as I rode, a sort of reaction took possession of me. The desire to go on and meet something unaccountable and unknown became fainter, the desire to return to my wife and child became more dominant. It is true, the toll gate had not stopped me, for it was open, and I had rushed through as though propelled by a mighty power. But by and by there would be the ferry. The ferryman with his boat would not be in readiness at this hour of the summer's night. I knew quite well the hours that the old ferryman kept. He generally put up his boat, and retired to his cottage near by soon after nine o'clock. It was not far from eleven o'clock now. He would be in bed and asleep, having truly earned his night's repose.

"I will not wake him," I said to myself. "I will go as far as the ferry and if he is not there, I will return. There is no manner of use in taking this mad ride for ever. If the ferryman is not waiting, and of course he will not be waiting for me, Starlight and I will return home quietly. We will go back over the miles of road and forget this night, and what impelled us almost to risk our lives in our speed to get Somewhere and to do Something Unknown. Yes, it will be at the ferry that I shall stop. The ferry will put an end to this extraordinary adventure."

"I had to ride several miles yet, to reach it, but by and by I saw the bend in the river, which very soon afterwards opened out into a landlock harbour, and then once more into the restless main of the open sea. The clouds broke now and then overhead, and I could observe the gleaming of the water. Starlight and I could not swim across. The ferry would be our happing place. Afterwards we would quietly return.

"But as we approached the ferry, what was my amazement to see that the boat was still rocking on the water, and that the ferryman, a stalwart person, with long gray hair, and an unkempt beard, was standing up in the boat, swaying it slightly from side to side. He was looking up the road down which I was rushing, and when he saw me, he did exactly what the toll-keeper had done. He took off his tattered cap and waved it and shouted aloud in the still night air—

"'I knew you were coming, Squire Chalmers, and I kept the boat waiting for you, sir. There isn't a minute to lose. In you get, sir, in you get! and I'll ferry you across in a twinkling! For the Lord's sake don't delay, sir! Get in, get in! I knew well you were coming, and the wife could not get me indoors, try as she would; and neither bite nor sup have I tasted, for the thought of you, and the need that was bringing you. Here's a place for the horse, sir. Here you sit. Get in, get in, Squire! I'll soon have you ferried across the river.'

"Without a word I dismounted; without even the ghost of a remonstrance, I led my horse into the old ferry boat, the ferryman took the oars and I sat quiet, and dumb, in the midst of the boat with the strangest fear at my heart.

"Jenkins on that night seemed to have the strength of ten men, so lustily did he ply the oars and so rapidly did he propel the boat across the stream.

"On the opposite side several men had collected, and when we neared the shore one of them shouted—

"'Faster, faster, Jenkins! It's a case of life and death, you know. That's right, Squire, we knew you'd come.'

"'For the Lord's sake tell me what is the matter,' I said to the man as I sprang on shore and helped Starlight to do likewise.

"But there was not a word from anyone. The men looked at me with that strange fear in their eyes which I had already seen in the face of Jenkins. It communicated itself to me. I had only one desire in life, and that was to go forward. I sprang on Starlight, without even waiting to pay the old ferryman, and was soon galloping up the High Street of the little town. In the street itself all was quiet, for people went to bed early in those days, but as I entered what was called Market Street, and saw the market at one end and the new Court house at the further end, I perceived that several people were still up, and that the crowd which had assembled round the Court house when I left Chadwick was still there, only much greater in intensity.

"As soon as I appeared, the people made way for me right and left, and I drew up my panting horse exactly opposite the great row of steps which led into the court. A man came forward at once.

"'It's all right, sir, you go straight in please. I'll take care of the horse.'

"I put Starlight's reins into his hand without glancing at his face, and went straight up the steps, the people all watching me as I went. No one spoke word, as I disappeared through the thick crowd into the Court house.

"The court where the prisoners were tried was a blaze of light caused by candles and torches stuck against the walls, and the air was breathless and very hot and exhausted. I observed that there were crowds of people, mostly men, but also a few ladies, in the house, and all bending forward as though they were full of the most intense emotion, and there was a great stillness, so still, that you might have heard a pin drop.

"As soon as I appeared, everyone in the house looked at me, and there was a sort of murmur, for I came in all untidy and dusty from my ride, my hat in my hand, and my hair tossed from my forehead. I carried my whip, and my spurs clanked at my heels. There were all these marks of that haste about me which had certainly been mine during that marvellous ride. There was something about my appearance which evidently caused the most intense amazement, and then all of a sudden, the usher, who was standing close to the judge, said 'Hush!' and I looked towards the judge, and I saw that he had the black cap lying close to his side; just then a door was opened to his left and the twelve gentlemen of the jury came out, having at that very moment decided on their verdict. They took their places gravely in the jury box, and I, led by no human being, but still overpowered by that Masterful Presence, which had compelled me to come to the Court, went up and

Her Face and Body Were Utterly Covered With "BOILS."

Burdock Blood Bitters Cured Them.

Mrs. John H. King, Jacksboro, N.B., writes:—"Last summer I was very much troubled with boils, and my face and body were literally covered with them. A friend advised me to take Burdock Blood Bitters. I got three bottles, and before I had taken all the first one my boils began to go away. I had just taken a few doses out of the last one when they all disappeared. My husband has also used Burdock Blood Bitters with much benefit."

Boils in themselves are not a danger, nor trouble, but still, as the cause thereof are very painful. They are caused entirely by bad blood, and to get rid of them it is necessary to put the blood in good condition, and for this purpose there is nothing to equal that old and tried remedy, Burdock Blood Bitters.

THE TERRORS OF THE TINY TADS

1—Three Tiny Tads are walking 'round when all at once they see, a most peculiar animal a-sitting in a tree.

2—"Come down to us," the Tinies cry, "and show us what you are, "Whether a piece of furniture or whether a jaguar."

3—The animal comes down to them, and what do you suppose? On opening his doors they find that he is full of clothes.

4—"You darling old Jaguardrobe!" cry the Tiny Tads in glee, "We thank you for these overcoats; they fit us well, you see."

5—But what in all creation is the old thing doing now? He's getting in the water and he's floating too, somehow!

6—"Come on!" exclaim the Tiny Tads. "I guess this can float! "Oh, here's a pair of oars. I guess he is a Wardrowboat!"

JACK and JILL in FAIRYLAND

1—When Old Mother Hubbard went to the cupboard to get the poor dog a bone—

2— Why Jack and Jill lay there in wait
And scared her wits out, sure as fate—
Or half of them, at any rate!

3—But the dog got very peevish at Jack and Jill. He was thinking of the bone he'd missed.
So after 'em, quicker'n, quicker'n light,
He dashed like a rocket in rocketty flight!

4—Well things were going mighty hard with them when what should appear right in their path but—
The very old woman who lived in the shoe,
Who had so many children that she didn't know what to do!

5—
So Jack dived in, and Jill dived, too,
In the very, very middle of that great big shoe!

6—They thought they were saved. But you remember the old lady used to spank all her children and put them to bed. It was bedtime!
So a whack they got, and a whack, whack, whack!
"We're sure it's very, very bad," said Jill to Jack—

106 YEARS OLD CAN WALK 4 MILES A DAY

Joshua Dubbin Dreads on His 106th Birthday and Has a Livin as a Cricket.

Old Mr. Joshua Dubbin, of 136 Lexington Ave., [illegible], N.Y., hasn't much time to think about how he has lived to be 106 years old. He is too busy planning what he shall do for many more years. He laughs at those who decry drinking and smoking, and points with pride to the fact that he has always done just what he pleased, and has never had a sick day in his life.

"Although I was 106 years old on July 3d last, I still feel that I am good for several years. I was born at Lods, in Poland, and after a lengthy business life in the old land came to this country in 1852 to reside with my daughter. I have used Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey for many years, and find it very beneficial. It invigorates and gives me strength. I feel that it has helped me to live the 106 years. Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey is the very best medicine old Whiskey is the very medicine old people need to restore their failing health and strength.

TWO PATROLS OF BOY SCOUTS FORMED AT WARSAW

Mr. W. J. Neale, Local Scoutmaster, Gave the Boys Some Instruction Will be Affiliated With Peterborough Scouts.

INSTITUTE MEETINGS

Examiner Special.

WARSAW, DEC. 14.—That the most popular and hence the most largely attended event of the year in this place, is the Farmers' and Women's Institute annual gatherings, goes without saying. The meetings afternoon and evening, held on Monday, were record breakers in point of attendance. In the afternoon Mrs. Woeland delighted her audience at a gathering held over Mr. Choate's store. In the evening a joint meeting was held in the town hall, when the delegates all gave instructive and interesting lectures. To add variety to the programme a number of musical numbers were given.

The annual meeting of the Warsaw Rifle Club will be held on Wednesday evening, Dec. 14.

Mr Neale, scout master of the Peterborough boy scouts, was in town on Saturday to give instruction in organization. The local troop was formally organized. Two patrols of nine boys each were given a start on the work and from the interest manifested it will be a very short time before a third will be formed. The local scouts were invited to affiliate with the Peterborough troop and realising the advantages to be gained by being units of a strong organization, they accepted the invitation. The officers are as follows: Scout master, H. E. E. Choate; patrol leader, No. 11, Clayton Selkirk, corporal No. 11, Theodore Douglas. Patrol leader No. 12, Wm. Aitkens, corporal No. 12, Alex. Graham.

Do you realize how near we are to Christmas and what an enormous amount of pleasurable labour has to be gotten over with before the day can be celebrated with a contented mind. Among the greatest difficulties is the selection of gifts, and it is here that the early shopper who has been having pretty things laid away during the past week or month has the advantage. At Warsaw's departmental store there are numerous parcels stowed away and yet with new goods arriving daily, the stock is kept up and is now at its best. Do not fail to come as soon as possible. The fancy goods and china are far superior to any ever shown. Then there are new toys, handkerchiefs, neckwear, silverware, groceries, fruit, confectionery, and in a word the largest selection to be found in the county. A. F. CHOATE.

MILLBROOK AND CAVAN PARAGRAPHS OF INTEREST

Special Wire to The Enquirer.

MILLBROOK, DEC. 14—Miss Dean, of Toronto, is the guest of her sister, Miss Dean, of Millbrook.

A meeting of the Women's Foreign Mission Society, of the Presbyterian church, was held at the home of Mrs. Reid Ball last Tuesday evening, a large number of the members being present. The president, Mrs. (Rev.) Johnston, occupied the chair. Mrs. R. T. Adams gave an excellent paper on Chinese missionary work, while Mrs. Thorndyke gave an interesting paper on the work among the lepers. After the various pros and cons. of the business on hand was dispensed, refreshments were served and a social evening spent.

The Sunday school convention will be held in Millbrook on Dec. 13th at 2 p.m. The Methodist church has been selected for the occasion.

Mrs. R. Reddy and children, of Peterborough, were visiting friends in the village for a few days last week.

Dr. Turner has secured the services of Dr. Wright of Port Hope, to assist him in his extensive practice in and around Millbrook.

The Ladies' Aid of the Methodist church held a bazaar on Friday which proved to be a huge success. The town hall was very prettily decorated for the occasion. The sale of fancy work and home made cooking, etc., took place during the afternoon, while a fish pond figured as the chief attraction for the children. Tea was served to a large number during the latter part of the afternoon.

Miss Bertha Kelly was in town for a few days last week visiting her many friends.

Friends and acquaintances of Mr. H. Sketch will be sorry to learn that he is on the sick list these days. We all join in wishing him a speedy recovery.

CAVAN, DEC. 13.—Two weeks ago we had the pleasure of announcing the arrival of a fine baby boy to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Cecil DeLong, of Bethany, but once again we lift our pen, this time with heavy hand and heart, to record the fact that the mother of the babe has gone to the great beyond. The funeral took place on Tuesday to Graham's cemetery, accompanied by a large concourse of sorrowing friends and relatives. We offer our heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved husband, bereft of a bride of one year, and to the motherless babe, in that Bethany home.

A meeting of the young Men's Club of Cavanville was held on Thursday evening with a view to reorganising the club for the coming year. The Rev. Mr. Clarry, president, occupied the chair. On motion of the members it was decided to reopen the club during the coming winter. The balance of the club's funds remaining over from last winter, will be handed over to the Skating Club committee, who no doubt will know how to take care of it. The meeting closed with the singing of the Canadian national anthem.

Mr. Stewart Pritchard is the guest of his brother, Mr. John Pritchard for a few days.

A skating club committee has been formed with a view to operating a skating rink during the coming winter. A rink 80 ft. x 60 ft. has been secured on the property of Mr. Tom. Hutchison. It is expected to have a suitable building erected and the rink flooded during the course of next week.

Reeve Kelly and Deputy Reeve Thorne, of Cavan and Reeve Fells, of Millbrook, were in attendance at the County Council meeting last week.

Dr. Claude Bretton, of Cardiff, Manitoba, is visiting his uncle, Dr. George Bretton, of Bethany.

The first ball of the season was held in Bethany last Friday evening and despite the severity of the weather quite a large number were present. High class music was furnished by the Bethany orchestra.

Mr. J. N. McGill was visiting at the home of an old friend, Mr. Sam Ferguson, of Cobourg, for a few days last week.

Mr. David Curtis, a highly respected resident of Cavan, passed away last Wednesday after a lingering illness. The deceased was 71 years of age and was formerly a resident of Peterborough, to which place the funeral proceeded on Friday morning to Little Lake cemetery. One son and daughter, David and Mabel, are left to mourn the loss.

Mr. Archie Dedman, of Kirkfield, is a visitor at the home of Mr. Percy Ball for a few days.

The annual meeting held in connection with the Cavanville cheese factory was held on Thursday afternoon at the factory. The unusual interest shown in the above meeting as also the Farmers' Institute meeting recently held in Millbrook, was aptly demonstrated by the slim attendance. We fail to understand why the farmers fail to put in an appearance at these meetings, which are gotten up for their especial benefit and edification, particularly at this slack season of the year. The value of the cheese manufactured at the factory during the past season is in the neighbourhood of $9,840, while about 1,700 lbs. of butter was made out of the whey, the product of which was sold principally in Peterborough and Toronto. As to whether the factory will be operated another year in view of the creamery, which is doing an extensive business in Millbrook, will be decided at a later meeting.

stood between the judge and the prisoner.

"And then, for the first time, I looked full at the prisoner in the dock, and the face I saw was familiar to me, although just for the moment I could not remember where I had seen it before. Then, all of a sudden, I recalled that face, so gray, so sorrowful, with his eyes full of mute entreaty, that shaggy head, that poor exterior, and as I looked at the man, he looked full at me. I had never before seen such lack lustre eyes as his were then, eyes from which all hope and almost intelligence had gone. But as he looked, back into his eyes there leapt a most golden, most rosy, most marvellous hope, and lentreched out his thin hands and he said imploringly—

"'You remember me. Once you and I supped together. You remember me. You will prove that I was with you at the hour the murder was committed. You will save my life!'

"He had scarcely uttered the words before he sank in a dead heap on the floor.

"Well, that was about the principal part of the story. Of course, I proved an alibi and saved the miserable life of the miserable man. But had I not been, so to speak, taken off my own feet and carried to that Court house by a Power stronger than m yown, and by a Will greater than my own, the man would have been hanged by the neck, for the jury, as I entered the house, were just coming out with the verdict of 'Guilty.'

"I cannot explain anything. What impelled my groom, what impelled myself, what impelled theman at the toll-gate, what impelled the ferryman, all to conduct a witness to that court house to save an innocent man, lies amongst those inscrutable mysteries which another world will reveal."

Do You Feel This Way?

Do you feel all tired out? Do you sometimes think you just can't work away at your profession or business? Do you have a poor appetite? Is sleep unable to rest you? Are you losing flesh, and your strength too? Has anything in this world lost you? If so, you need a tonic to your system. You can do it by taking Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, which makes rich, red blood, it will put your lazy liver and kidneys right in your stomach, and thereby cure your blood poisons, such as your deadly internal consumption, that dangerous enemy. Those other poisons gained [illegible] in the form of a cough, if not [illegible] in the lungs, it will bring about a speedy recovery. This wonderful medicine is scientifically prepared by Dr. R. V. Pierce, of Buffalo, N.Y., and has been in use for all over fifty years in curing the most obstinate cases. Its ingredients are printed on every bottle wrapper, and attested as correct under oath. Thirty-six leading medical writers and teachers of the different schools of medicine, in their various text books, recommend the ingredients of which this medicine is made. Why not try it? Don't accept any substitute that may be offered you by some dealer who wants to make a little more profit. Write Dr. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

CANADA'S PEAT OF GREAT VALUE

Ottawa Expert Says There Are No Less Than 35,000 Square Miles of Bog in Dominion

Dr. B. Haanel, director of the new Bureau of mines of the federal government, has been in the West in connection with various mining men interested in the development of the peat deposits to the east of Winnipeg.

Dr. Haanel finds the interesting statement that peat could be laid down in the field for 50 cents per ton and that one and three quarter tons of peat was equal in heat value to a ton of anthracite coal. This peat he stated to be equal to any known coal for grates and for kitchen stoves. It is clean, it does not break up and burns to the finest ash, leaving no clinker. It burns with a clear flame requires no poking and the ash is a good fertiliser. In the experimental station which he has established in Ontario, Dr. Haanel produced during the past season 1,000 tons of peat, and he is burning it in his own home at the present time with perfect success. No examination has yet been made by him of the great peat deposits to the east of Winnipeg, and he was therefore unable to state what there was there.

"It is supposed," said the distinguished visitor, "that there are 35,000 square miles of peat bog in the Dominion, a large part of this being in Manitoba, Ontario and Quebec. Those provinces are dependent largely for their coal on the United States, as the Canadian mines are in the far east and the far West, and the long haul makes the use of Canadian coal impossible in the central provinces. The development of the peat deposits is therefore of high importance."

FIRST ENGLISH NEWSPAPER

The first paper published in England was the "Weekly News," edited by Nathaniel Butler, which made its first bow to the public as long ago as the year 1622, in the year of the Great Plague. The same year (1622) saw the birth of the "London Weekly Courrant," and a score years later came a small family of "Mercuries," followed in 1641 by Sir Roger L'Estrange's "Public Intelligencer." Of all this breed of 17th century newspapers two have survived to our day—the "London Gazette" and Berrow's "Worcester Journal," which, as the "Worcester Postman," first saw the light in 1690, the summer of the Battle of the Boyne.

FLYING IS DANGEROUS SPORT

An Expert Tells of Some of the Dangers that Make Aeroplaning a Risky Business

How aviators are killed and the causes of many recent flying machine accidents were explained by Major J. N. C. Kennedy at the Royal Societies' Club of Great Britain recently.

Major Kennedy classified the causes of forty British aviation accidents at Doncaster, Bournemouth, and Lanark as follows:

Failure of engine and involuntary descent	18
Alighting on bad ground	10
Struck by sudden gust of wind	6
Fire and similar causes	6
Propeller breaking	5
	40

A danger caused by taking up women passengers was also pointed out by Major Kennedy. Ladies are particularly liable to drop things into the works, and thus to cause a smash," explained the lecturer. "Mr. Grahame White believes that lady passengers should secure all their loose articles of jewelry, and Captain Dickson requires even his male passengers to empty all their pockets.

"One can conceive a knife falling from the pockets of a mechanic who picked up by Mr. Grace's propeller and vanished completely. A large piece was cut out of one of the blades of the propeller, but fortunately the knife struck no one in its flight."

The alighting competition in which the Hon. C. S. Rolls was killed was described by Major Kennedy as "a most dangerous one under the strong wind conditions that then existed."

The competitors were, in nautical language, required "to pick up their mooring knife a reef on a rocky lee-shore.

"M. Audemars came out first and turned over," explained Major Kennedy, who was an eye-witness of the tragedy. "Mr Grahame White made a successful landing, but overshot the mark, and Captain Dickson then attempted the feat, approaching from the opposite direction, and smashed his machine.

"Mr. Rolls came out after this, making a long sweep, and after passing through the up-air current caused by the grand stand, the aeroplane descended into the comparative vacuum. To correct this and to recover altitude Rolls put up the elevator and with it the horizontal tail. The latter gave way under the increased resistance, and some portions of the struts fell from the machine. The rupture of the tail then released all the pressure upon the back part of the machine, which promptly dived forward and fell like a stone.

"When I reached Rolls he was lying on his face, giving no signs of life, and I helped to clear away the tangle of wire. It was like working inside a broken cage. Beyond a very slight cut on the lip there was no disfiguration, and the engine and other weights had fallen clear. I noticed that Rolls' cap had been torn off and his head rested close to the front of the boom of one of the planes."

"It would appear that the only safe place in a flying machine wreck is inside the framework, at any rate in monoplanes. On biplanes there is no safe place, as the danger from the engine falling is always present."

DEADLY EFFECT OF FOG

Giving evidence at an inquest held at Newington on the body of an aged female pauper lunatic who died from bronchitis, accelerated by fog and cold, Dr. Charles Frederick Williams, medical officer of Newington Workhouse, said that it was impossible to keep the fog and cold out of an institution like theirs, built up the flags as they might. They had 1,200 inmates there, three-fourths of whom suffered from their chests. Visiting them on a foggy night, one would see them all sitting up in their beds in a long row, all gasping like frogs. Fog was the greatest difficulty with which they had to deal, added the doctor, and a half-dozen inmates had died during the week, the malignity of their ailments having been increased by the fog.

GERMANY'S BUSY TIME

The Turks and Persians are Warming Up to the Kaiser

If Germans never before were in danger of becoming affected with what is called the "swelled head," the present time surely invites an attack of that disease. Never has the Kaiser's country to such an extent been the centre of the world's politics as during the last month. With the Moroccan Turks and Persians falling the Master in the "truest principle of islam," with Germ[illegible] for [illegible] prepping to take over the Turkish loan refused by France, with the Kaiser laying foundations for new friendship with Belgium, with the Crown Prince speeding towards the far East on a similar mission, and with the Czar's recent visit to Potsdam, the German press have really had every reason to feel elated at all these signs of the empire's greatness. On the surface all these events have been very pleasing, but to the statesman, they have not been a source of unalloyed pleasure.

That the heathen Turks and Persians should have such touching and childlike confidence in Germany's Emperor and ruler that they felt constrained to would protect them against the dreaded Russian bear and barbarous British lion was of course very flattering, but the appeal was very embarrassing to Baghdadian Minister of Foreign Affairs, who would do anything rather than stir up the anger of England and Russia and borrow trouble which might end in a very serious checkmate to the Triple Alliance. Another point worth noting is Constantinople and other advices that German financiers while willing to lend Turkey the money which Russia refused her, are by no means in love with the idea of becoming Turkey's bankers, and are advancing the sum required rather to oblige a customer than because the business attracts them. Germany, after her astonishing industrial, with any of her capital at home, and, indeed, if the relations between the two countries permitted, would herself be a borrower in Paris.

NAVIES COST MONEY

The Immense Sums Spent for Armament by Britain and Germany a Heavy Burden

From all the speeches recently made by the various Liberal statesmen in Great Britain, one gets a very strong impression how important it is to the present Liberal government to ease the minds on the naval question, and counteract the eternal unrest emanating from Conservative circles mainly in the form of prophecies, that in a certain number of years the German navy will be at least as strong as the British. The Cabinet Ministers, however, seem to carefully avoid a discussion of the question.

The only thing which will and must put an end to the building of warships is the inability of the people to bear the burdens. At the present time the official German press is full of praise of the Chancellor, who is able to propose a budget that balances. The new indirect taxes imposed upon the German people have evidently had the desired effect. But in strong contrast to this, the German Opposition press points to the increased naval demands to be laid before the Reichstag. The German people are distinguished military services, an increase in the prices of the necessaries of life, which makes it almost impossible for the workingman to endeavor the ordinary classes to buy meat, and simultaneously many millions are expended for military and naval expenses. These things cannot go on like this forever, is evident. For a while, indeed, it will be made to balance by artificial means, but the day will come when this will no longer be possible, and new taxes must be imposed.

THE KAISER'S STEEL HAND

It Makes Good Showing a Possibility Now—Serves as a Gun Rest

The Kaiser has become more expert than ever with the rifle. He has had a new steel hand or fork fastened around the stump of his short arm with the express purpose of serving as a gun rest. He is thus able to rapidly fire his rifle safely with his right hand. This is described with the new contrivance and the good results he has

LITTLE UTOPIA IN SWITZERLAND

Ideal Community Found Among the Swiss—No Taxes to Pay

"Lloyd's" correspondent, wiring from Geneva, announced the discovery of a little Utopia where life is entirely free from the competition and anxieties of the workaday world.

Inhabitants of the village of Burtigny, beautifully situated on the slopes of the Jura Alps, in the Canton of Vaud, have no rates and taxes to pay. The village, after paying its debts, which amount to between £140 and £150 a year, divides the surplus of about £10 among the oldest inhabitants.

The village owns forests, vineyards, and tracts of fertile land, as well as cattle. The villagers possess in common their own water service and reservoir, a cafe, wine presses, public fountain, and weighing machine, a baker's and butcher's shop, and a dairy.

Everything is sold at cost price, and the surplus stock is sent to the markets in the vicinity. Very little money exchanges hands. Most of the necessities of life are paid for in kind and by labor.

family receives so much wine, and the remainder is sold to "outsiders." The same system prevails when the timber is cut every year. If a member of the community becomes ill or old and unable to work, he or she receives food and lodging free.

Each inhabitant is content to work hard for the common good. Crime is unknown. The village sends few but splendid young men to do their service in the federal army.

PUZZLES IN WEIGHTS

The weights and measures used in England are considered to very many more than foreign visitors. Many men are frequently at a loss in making up their reckoning when they chance to be considerably afield in a strange district.

Some butchers and cattle-dealers of the old school still calculate by the Dutch stone of 17½ lbs. London coal heap by the score of 5 lbs., but in many parts of England, notably in the southern counties, the score of 20 lbs. is adhered to in making out weights of farm animals.

The quintal of 100 lbs. is still kept to the exact ale for wheat-weighing. Ireland, wheat goes at Mark Lane, for instance, at the quarter containing 480 lbs. In West Ayrshire the stone of four pounds is used. Newcastle, Carlisle, and Darlington hold by the boll of three bushels. Norwich, Hull, Kendal, and several other places buy and sell wheat at 2 cwts. on the basis of a bolt of six bushels. Chester, Shrewsbury, Nantwich, and one or two other counties reckon the bushel of wheat at 70 lbs. At Bamsworth, however, it is 56 lbs., but it is known to be at Aberystwyth, this being 2 lbs. over what some are inclined to reckon the Scottish standard. Old Preston men have their windle of 280 lbs., while their friends in Denbigh argue over a bushel of 168 lbs.

MOOSE LEAVING MAINE

And Going to New Brunswick, Says Boston Doctor

Dr. Charles M. Whitney and Dr. A. C. Pearce, of Boston, recently spent some time in the backwoods of New Brunswick taking pictures of big game and enjoying life in the woods. Dr. Whitney is said to have the finest series of big game pictures in the world, and obtained between sixty and seventy more as a result of his recent trip. Dr. Pearce stated: "The moose are leaving Maine and coming to New Brunswick. I am sure I am right in my statement. I can also say that the moose down here appear wiser than those in Maine and more difficult to approach. Dr. Whitney saw over two hundred on his trip and I myself saw over one hundred. Some fine specimens were included, and the sportsmen coming to New Brunswick should increase steadily."

HIS POCKET WAS PICKED

Wm. Kelly, Guilty of Being Drunk While on the Blacklist, Had No Money to Pay His Fine

VAGRANTS SENTENCED

Wm. Kelly again appeared in the Police Court on a charge of getting drunk while on the black list. He pleaded guilty, and was fined $10.00 or one month in gaol. He had been in the shanties for the last two months and came to the city a few days ago. He got drunk and was found in one of the hotel yards last night. He claims that when he came to the city he had $30.00 in his pocket. The right hand pocket of his trousers had been ripped open indicating the use of a knife, and whatever money he had was stolen. He could not pay his fine, so will hang up his stocking in Castle Nesbitt this Christmas.

An old man named Andrew Fawcett was given six months on the hill also. He had no home and no place to go, was in bad health and in poor circumstances generally, so His Worship, Magistrate Dumble, deemed the above the only course to pursue.

Thomas Hoyland, another sixty-three-year-old "Weary Willie," was given three months on the hill. He is well known to the local police. He claimed to have worked in the C. G. E. until December, when his health gave out, and since that time has been unable to work. He was here quite a while ago and left for the West, going to Winnipeg, where he spent a while, but at last had to put in at the same old port.

STREET CAR MEN STRIKE

Service in Winnipeg is Tied Up as a Result

Special Wire to the Examiner.

WINNIPEG, MAN., DEC. 16.—After a session lasting from midnight till six o'clock this morning the street railway employees decided to strike in protest because some members of the union had not been reinstated after dismissal for a breach of regularities about going into bar rooms in uniform. The whole service is practically tied up to-day.

STANDING OF THE PARTIES

Special to The Examiner.

LONDON, ENG., DEC. 16.—British elections standing at four p.m.:

Unionists 204.

Government Coalition-Liberals 220.

Irish Nationalists 65, Independent Nationalists 10.

Labourites 22.

Yesterday's total results show one gain each for Liberal and Unionists. The Labourites are the only party thus far to increase their representation in parliament. They have two seats more than in the previous Commons.

AT THE ROYAL

The performance last night at the Royal was exceptionally good, especially to those enjoying good piano [illegible] singing. Gleeps, a young man with only one hand and three [illegible] of the audience missing from [illegible] by the time he was [illegible] of his changes [illegible] of the audience [illegible] of his [illegible] by his father and had just started to school. In his ungovernable temper Vanstone broke two broom handles over the boy's head and body. In the meantime the boy's mother was out looking for assistance. When the police and the doctors came Vanstone was nursing the lad, covered with blood. The doctors pronounced the child dead and Vanstone leaned over the table and kissed the boy, seemingly just realizing what he had done. He has four other children.

BEAT CHILD TO DEATH WITH A BROOMSTICK

Terrible Deed of a Goderich Man When His Six-Year-Old Son Could Not Say Numbers From One to Twenty ---When the Doctor Said Boy Was Dead He Leaned Over and Kissed the Child.

Special Wire to The Examiner.

GODERICH, ONT., DEC. 16.—Another murder occurred at Goderich last night, about 10 o'clock, when George Vanstone, 39 years old, beat his little son, aged 6 years, to death, with a broomstick. The murderer spent some time in jail years ago, for threatening his wife. He has been arrested. It seems that Vanstone was annoyed because the little lad couldn't or wouldn't say his numbers from one to twenty. Freddie had been instructed in them

MR. PERCY OWEN RECEIVES A GOOD APPOINTMENT

The following, taken from the Toronto Star, refers to an old Peterborough boy, whose friends will be glad to read of his success. Mr. Percy Owen, at present organist and choir master of Cooke's Presbyterian church, Queen street east, has been appointed first teacher of the piano department of the Conservatory of Music in Indianapolis, Ind. Mr. Owen returned from Vienna this past summer, where he had been studying the piano under the celebrated and veteran master, Leschetsky and Madame Malvane Bree.

Mr. Owen was nominated for this position by Leschetsky himself, and his friends who are familiar with his thorough musicianship, have every confidence that Mr. Owen will carry out the duties entrusted to him with great credit to himself and to his celebrated teacher. Mr. Owen takes up his new duties on January 1st.

"THE THIEF" COMING HERE FOR CHRISTMAS DAY

Interest runs high in the forthcoming appearance in this city of that far-famed sensation "The Thief," the intense, throbbing, human drama of love and jealousy which scored his greatest triumph New York has ever known, and ran for two solid years at the Lyceum Theatre, that city. "The Thief" is from the pen of Henri Bernstein. The morning after its first production in Paris, Bernstein awoke to find his name on every tongue, and before a week had passed all Europe was hailing him as the greatest dramatist of his time. In New York, upon the first presentation of "The Thief" at the Lyceum Theatre the critics exhausted themselves in trying to do justice in panied words to the intense, powerful, and overwhelming play given us by the Frenchman. He was praised unanimously as the greatest dramatist of the day and his "Thief" was acclaimed an electric sensation.

"The Thief" comes to the Grand Theatre on Christmas Day—matinee and evening.

Special Arrangements At The Royal And Princess

Good as have been the pictures at the Royal and Princess Theatres in the past, they will be infinitely better from now on, as Manager Pappas has just completed arrangements with the two biggest film supply houses in the world, by which the Royal and Princess will have the best and newest photo-plays that are obtainable. For some time the two theatres have been receiving films from the Klein Optical Company of Chicago, which supply the two popular places of amusement with the well known pictures made by the Biograph, Edison, Essanay, Selig and Urban people. In addition to these he has just entered into a contract with the Kinetograph Company of New York, by which Pathe Brothers Vitagraph, Lubin and Kalen films will be shown daily at the Royal and Princess. With films from the nine biggest and best film manufacturers in the world exclusively shown at the two theatres under Mr. Pappas' management the people of Peterborough will have a chance to see films superior to anything shown here before. For the next two weeks at the Royal Mr. Pappas will meet the holiday demand with special vaudeville attractions, a number of acts having been arranged for. The prices remain always the same, 5c. in the afternoon and 10c. in the evening at the Royal and 5c. at the Princess.

Our Military Contingent For The Coronation

OTTAWA, DEC. 16.—Canada has been invited to send a military contingent, seven hundred strong, to represent the Dominion at the coronation of King George in June. The invitation reached Ottawa to-day, and will at once be accepted.

At the coronation of King Edward Canada was represented by a contingent which numbered something less than six hundred men. The contingent which will be picked for the coronation will be carefully selected. Every part of the Dominion will be drawn upon for the very best men in the militia. Every arm of the service will be represented, and as well as infantry, artillery and cavalry, there will be a contingent representing the Northwest Mounted Police.

The Militia Council will at once commence the task of organizing the coronation contingent.

HEALTH OF CITY GOOD

Medical Health Officer Informs the Examiner that There are No Diphtheria or Scarlet Fever Cards Up in the City

CITY WATER IS PURE

Peterborough is certainly on the healthy list. Dr. McPherson informed the Examiner this morning that there are no cases of scarlet fever diptheria or typhoid in the city. Peterborough is free, at present any way, from contagious diseases. The city water, too, is pure, so altogether the health of the people should be pretty good.

PRESENTS PETITION

For the Commutation of Death Sentence Upon James Gorham

Mr. D. O'Connell of the firm of O'Connell and Gordon is in Ottawa to-day for the purpose of placing the petition asking for the commutation of the death sentence upon James Gorham before the Cabinet. It is understood that some 2,000 names were attached to the petition and many more could have been secured if thought necessary.

SAILORS DROWNED

Special Wire to the Examiner.

HARWICH, ENG., DEC. 16.—Five of the crew of the Naval tender, Elfin, were drowned to-day in a collision with a submarine, which sunk the Elfin.

CHILD SCALDED

A rather serious accident occurred this morning at 188 Simcoe street, when the little two and a half year old son of Mr. Samuel Feinberg got scalded about the arms and breast. The little one was sitting in a high chair near the stove and by some means or other upset a small pot of hot water. Some of the hot water splashed onto the child and scalded it about the breast, but it was not found necessary to have a physician. The little one is now getting on fine.

OF INTEREST TO YOUNG MEN AND WOMEN

In another column will be found an announcement which should be of much interest to many young men and women as well as to many parents having sons and daughters about to embark upon the world of business.

It is admitted that no branch of business education offers such splendid opportunities as stenography and the introduction of the 30-day Sylvia Bic System has brought this art within the reach of hundreds who could never have considered it under the older methods which required an average of from six to ten months time and under which methods perhaps upwards of fifty per cent gave up discouraged. The Moon College, 203-208 Yonge street, Toronto, is with the New Year, embarking upon an advertising campaign which, through its fourteen branches, will reach every home in Canada. A representative of the Examiner, having heard much about this system and being rather dubious as to its being all that was claimed for it, personally made thorough investigation, calling at the College, interviewing students in attendance, and interviewing graduates actually holding splendid positions after an average attendance of but 30 days (and some even after only 20 days) and found from student, graduate, and above all the employers, that the Moon College and the 30 day Sylvia Bic System are certainly deserving of confidence.

RETURNED VERDICT OF "NOT GUILTY"

Joseph Wilson of North Burleigh Found Not Guilty of Burning Down the Barns of Ezra McFadden---Jury Was Out One Hour and Forty Minutes.

After being out one hour and forty minutes, the jury in the case of Joseph Wilson, who was charged with burning down the barns of Ezra McFadden in June last and whose trial has occupied the attention of the County Court for the past two days, returned a verdict of "not guilty." The jury retired at twenty minutes to five and returned to the courtroom at twenty minutes after six. His Honour in discharging the prisoner, told him that he might consider himself fortunate. This should be a lesson, and in view of the fact that several witnesses had stated that the accused's only fault was drinking, in consideration for his wife and family, he should give it up and do what was right. When court resumed yesterday afternoon the prisoner was called.

The prisoner, Joseph Wilson, went into the box and made a complete denial of the charge of burning McFadden's barns. He remembered the incident with Mrs. McFadden, but after he went to his home about 8 o'clock that night he never was away from it until next day. He know nothing of the fire until Sunday morning, when his brother Norman came and told him. He did not remember the conversation with Ezdak Hales.

This was the last witness called and Mr. O'Connell then proceeded with his address to the jury, followed by Crown Attorney Wood's and His Honour's addresses. The jury retired at 4.40.

DEPUTATION WAITS UPON THE PREMIER

Farmers of Canada Laid Their Demands for Tariff Reform Before the Government To-day "Impregnant With the Spirit of the West" Says Sir Wilfrid

Special to The Examiner.

OTTAWA, DEC. 16.—"We have a committee to show that we are in earnest" was the way of D. W. McCaug the president of the National Council of Agriculture and the leader of the great delegation of farmers from all over Canada, which marched up to the Parliament Buildings this morning and took possession of the Commons chamber long before a good many of the members of Parliament were out of their beds. It was a day against which Canada's commerce had been fortifying themselves for a long time. Such a free trade demonstration has never before been made to the Councils of the Dominion. The delegates crowded the chamber and occupied the members seats, so that when the rightful occupants arrived they had to sit on the floor or haul in chairs. The crowd was strictly non-partisan and the advent of Sir Wilfrid did not bring forth the customary ovation. The premier and other members of the cabinet got their seats.

With his customary smile, Sir Wilfrid listened intently to all the various resolutions and speeches. The smile broadened when one delegate declared "this delegation is thoroughly loyal and proud of our country's position on the seas, but we would rather be protected from the ever present invaders on the land, before we sail out in iron-clads, to fight the invaders in far distant seas.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier, replying to the farmers, said that the resolutions were certainly impregnated with the radical spirit of the West. He felt that the farmers of the East would, of themselves, not go quite so far. He wouldn't commit himself regarding the Government ownership of elevators, but he did say he was not an ardent supporter of Government operation.

FREE TRIP TO TORONTO

Believing that we can save the student from $100 to $200 on the cost of a course in stenography (even though it necessitates going from his own town or city) and still give him an education which is fully the equal of any, we offer to pay fare up to $10 to the first person enrolling from any municipality. This is done to convince out-of-town persons that 30-day stenography is really and truly genuine. We can afford to do this. We have enrolled 17 students this year from Orillia, although they have their own Pitman College. We have enrolled five from Lindsay, four from Galt, etc., etc., because one satisfied graduate carried home the truth. Write for full particulars. Moon College, 203-208 Yonge street, Toronto.

OBITUARY

WM. JAMES HOPKINS.

The death occurred last night of a well known resident of North Monaghan, in the person of Mr. Wm. James Hopkins. The deceased was 75 years of age and was born near Kitgston. He came to North Monaghan, near Peterborough, about 55 years ago, and had been a devoted member of Knox church. He was married in December 1868, to Miss Isabella Alexander, who predeceased him two years. He leaves to mourn his loss four children; also three brothers and three sisters. The sons are Wm. and Joseph, of North Monaghan. The daughters, Ada and Jennie residing at home. The brothers are John, of Toronto; Joseph and Roderick, of North Monaghan. The sisters: Mrs. R. Owen and Mrs. R. Baker, of Haliburton and Mrs. John Langfield, of Saskatchewan.

The funeral will be held on Saturday afternoon. The service will be conducted by Rev. H. J. Keith at 2 o'clock and funeral will be held at 2.30 to the Little Lake cemetery from the family residence.

THE WEATHER

Lowest temperature last night was 18 degrees below zero. Early this morning it was 11 degrees below, accompanied by a breeze from the south which did not last long, however. At daylight it was 1 below, three days before last year was the first day of December, when the thermometer went down as 7 degrees below. Last December one is reported converted to the present number.—W. F.

Trip to India.

Toronto, Dec. 16.—Final arrangements have been made with the Dominion Government and the C.P.R., by which 125 or more Canadian manufacturers and business men will take a pleasant combination business and holiday trip through the West Indies, on board the Lake Manitoba during January and February next. H. C. McKenzie Carnish, the man who has been engineering the project, is in Toronto for the week. He is an English resident of Jamaica, is general manager of the Canada and West Indies Publishing Co., and editor of the company's magazine. He is also connected with The Daily Telegraph and Guardian of Kingston, Jamaica.

Will Be Tried by Jury.

Buffalo, Dec. 16.—While his aged mother sobbed so violently that the trial of the case at times was interfered with, Ernest V. Tyrell of Toronto, charged with bringing a woman into the country for immoral purposes, was given a preliminary hearing before United States Commissioner C. E. Robinson yesterday. Commissioner Robinson considered the evidence sufficient to hold the man for the grand jury.

Troops Fired on Rioters.

Funchal, Madeira, Dec. 16.—Troops fired into a crowd of rioters at Santa Cruz yesterday. The casualties were not made known. Twenty persons were arrested. The disorders originated in resistance of the unemployed classes to the strict measures taken by the authorities to check the cholera epidemic. The disease is still causing many victims.

A SUDDEN DEATH

Mr. Wm. Talbot, Well Known Tobacconist, Dropped Dead From Heart Disease at His Home Last Night

HIGHLY RESPECTED

Mr. William Talbot, the local tobacconist, and one of the best known and most respected residents of Peterborough, died with startling suddenness at his home, 317 Boswell avenue, last night, dropping dead in the hall-way as he returned to his home after spending the evening at his store. Mr. Talbot had suffered from heart disease for a long period and had not been feeling in the best of health for some time, but his condition was not regarded as serious. He attended to his duties at the store last night as usual, but on returning at 10.45 o'clock, had just stepped inside the door when he dropped to the floor without uttering a sound, and expired immediately.

The late Mr. Talbot was 47 years of age, and has been a resident of this city for the last fifteen years. He came here from Cannington, where he had conducted a tobacco business for several years previous. He leaves to mourn his loss, his wife, his mother, one brother and one sister. He was an enthusiastic curler and bowler. His mother, Mrs. H. Talbot, resides in this city. His sister, Mrs. E. Fluel, is a resident of this city, also his brother, Mr. Albert L., resides here.

The funeral will be held to-morrow afternoon at 4 o'clock. The service will take place at his late residence, at 3.30. Interment will take place in the Little Lake cemetery.

GOLDEN EGGS.

The failure of the Canadian hen to do her duty in the matter of egg production and the consequent high price of eggs, strikes terror to the housewife's heart, and every winter we hear her declaring that she doesn't "know what things are coming to"—"that she never has paid such prices for eggs before." She is mistaken, or hasn't been housekeeping long. For the last ten years eggs have been, in the winter season, a luxury, though the present general price throughout the province is at the top notch. The general price of eggs in the province in December, 1901, was 35 cents; for the three following years there was a drop to 30 cents. In 1905, eggs advanced to 35 cents; and in 1906, eggs soared—some of them near enough chickens, too, to fly—to 40 cents, falling back to 35 in 1907, and regaining lost ground, to 40 cents, in 1908 and 1909. Two weeks ago, in 1910 ,eggs advanced to 40 cents, and last week they touched 45, and this week the general price throughout the province is 45 cents, that is 3, 7-10 cents each. It is no wonder that the housewife dreads the demand of the husband for an egg for breakfast. It is no wonder, either, that he dreads asking for it when he has to pay almost as much for an egg, as he has to pay down town for his after-luncheon cigar. It seems a shame that a man should have to pay for a luxury like an egg, nearly four times as much as he has to pay for that necessary of life, a cigarette. Things have changed. The proverbial goose that lays the golden eggs, becomesthe hen that lays the golden eggs—if we have regard to the price.

MUNICIPAL INDIFFERENCE.

The Ottawa Free Press points out that there are hardly enough candidates in sight to fill the necessary seats on the city council, and the Stratford Beacon and other journals speak in the same way of the popular indifference to the important matter of civic government.

We know how it is in Peterborough. Here we are within a few days of nomination and we find no single ratepayer giving the least attention to the matter of looking up somebody to do the business of the city for the coming year. The ratepayers seem willing to take anything that offers at the last moment. On nomination day we shall have the usual number of crowd. The candidate nominated, not because of any particular fitness, but just because some gilden idling among the crowd, nominates somebody he catches sight of in the crowd. The candidate nominated may not have a single qualification. His name gets on the ballot, and because there may be no great choice among the candidates on the list, one candidate stands almost as good a chance of election, be he good or bad, as another. In such a case, and it's the usual thing, so far as any intelligent selection is exercised, or can be exercised, by the ratepayers, as far as any intelligent appraisal of the merit of the candidate is, or can be made—by the spur of the moment—the names of the candidates might almost go well be put in a hat, well shaken, and the first ten or twelve names, or the case may be, first drawn out, made the city or town council for the coming year.

This is by no means an overdrawn description of the manner in which the quality and fitness of the ratepayers operate in the selection of a city or town council at random. With councils elected in this way and holding office only for a year — with every year a new policy or rather no policy — experimenting in a hand to mouth manner with weighty municipal problems, or neglecting them altogether—how can any reasonable man expect satisfactory civic government?

The situation seems almost hopeless, when we consider that the strongest appeal possible, the appeal to the purse, does not serve to arouse the interest of ratepayers. We see the ratepayer, at the time taxes are payable, prancing about in a great state of excitement and indignation over the fearful size of his tax bill. That mood lasts a day or two, ending in talk, and straightway he forgets all about it, and for the rest of the year takes no more interest in civic matters than the baby in the cradle. At election time he goes out and votes blindly, for candidates, of whom he knows little, and apparently cares less, as to their fitness or unfitness, for the responsible position in which his vote places them. He forgets that the men he votes for are the cause of the grumbling he does "on or before the 15th of August" or the 15th of November.

If high taxes, growing higher every year, with, every year, less in civic improvements to account for them, will not move ratepayers to take an interest in electing their municipal business managers, a charge of dynamite wouldn't apparently move them.

What is to be done to improve things? We don't want Peterborough, the city of which we are all proud, and whose possibilities of growth and progress are so great, to muddle along from year to year, with increasing taxes and little or nothing done, to provide the scores of things that are needed to make the city what it can be made. A few weeks ago the Examiner suggested a dozen or so important matters that could, and should, be, undertaken in the interest of the city. There was universal approval of the programme presented. No one was found to say that any one of the undertakings was not feasible, was not within reach of ordinary enterprise, systematically applied; not one found to say that these things should not be adopted as a policy to be worked up and worked out.

But what use to talk of a policy, under our present system of government? With a council elected at random, holding office for only one year, what can be expected in the matter of policy? The only policy possible, the only policy consistently carried out on the part of some members of municipal councils, is that of making themselves "solid" for election another year.

The only way seems to be the adoption of government by commission, which is being discussed in almost every city and town in the country —a commission of three capable men, men with business ability and ideas—paid something to do something, instead, as is the rule all over Ontario, of a council paid nothing to do nothing, or in cases worse than nothing—three men holding office for three years — when the system is in full play—and capable of originating a fixed policy, to be consistently applied.

Scores and scores of cities and towns in the United States have tried the commission system of government—which permits of system—with the most gratifying results. Des Moines, Iowa, under the old, happy-go-lucky, haphazard system of electing a council, and its happy-go-lucky results, got only fifty to seventy-five cents on the dollar in value from civic expenditure. Under the commission system—the employment of capable men, even though they were paid large salaries—the city gained—saved money—got 100 cents on the dollar from every dollar of taxes collected and spent.

The commission system would, if anything, wake up the people—rouse the ratepayers. With attention concentrated upon the election of three good men, with the duty of electing three good men, to hold office three years, the people would take a greater interest than in voting for a batch of men they know little about, and who can be dropped at the end of the year. What is wanted is something to wake up the people. The present king, when, as Prince of Wales, he returned from a visit to the British dominions beyond the seas, said on the subject of the need progress being high, uttered the words, "Wake up, England!" "Wake up, ratepayers," is the slogan of the hour, in regard to matters of civic good government.

ENLIGHTENED OPINION.

The story of the man that a large [illegible] in waiting on the Ottawa

PILES

ACKNOWLEDGED GREATNESS OF GREAT GREAT BRITAIN

(Toronto News)

It is always to be remembered that the moderate reformers who precipitated the French Revolution neither desired nor foresaw the goal to which they were driving the nation. The Girondists were sincere and even devoted patriots, who thought only of their country's welfare, and the States General was one of the finest representative assemblies ever gathered together. The danger lay in the eloquence of the propagandists. Once the appeals to popular passion gained headway, the multitude got out of hand, and France went headlong to a ruin such as the world has seldom witnessed. The extreme English Radicals must also be credited with sincerity, but in inciting the unemployed and the unemployable they may be playing with dynamite. The safety of the United Kingdom lies only in the traditional steadiness of the British people.

Many of the most remarkable tributes to the British people ever noticed or written have come from foreigners. Frenchmen praise their steadiness and their age-long refusal to be stampeded. A Mohammedan from Egypt remarks their wonderful genius for colonization and government, and hopes for the day when his country may become a self-governing portion of the Empire, with representation at Westminster. One American speaks of the high standard of true liberty that characterises the old land. Another regards the British navy as the chief safeguard of the world's peace. A third says that England's pre-eminence is attributable to her people's insistence through the centuries on freedom of speech, but he does not like to find this freedom descending to license.

After thirty years' residence in Great Britain an ardent American like Mr. Price Collier writes of the superiority of England's statesmen. He says: "Some of their great men would probably appear dull at our after-dinner festivities, alongside of certain American publicists we might mention who have been renowned principally as orators and story-tellers; but what man, however much he loved his country, would mention them in the same breath with Cromer, Milner, Kitchener, as public servants and patriots? Disagreeable as it may be for the American to say so, it is the difference between mastiffs and monkeys! In the long run, which of these two types of men is dull, the for years hard-working, unheard of Cromer, or the ceaselessly chattering simian public men we all have in mind? At least we must give credit where credit is due. The Englishman shines by comparison with the oratorical flippancy and the ready acceptance of the part of after-dinner clown which have made so many reputations in America. Not that we have not our own type of self-sacrificing public servants in men like Wood, Magoon, Taft and scores more, but how shabbily do we reward them!"

A Scotch Tory who came to Canada the other day takes a dark view of the British political situation. He even fears that the Radical upheaval involves England's ruin. Therefore he is going to cast in his lot with Canada, which he regards as the Empire's hope. Many other people of intelligence whom one meets in England these days take a similarly pessimistic view of the situation, which, however, the News does not pretend to share. We still rely upon the steadiness and sobriety of the British people in the mass to stand proof against any appeals to passion to which they may be subjected. Many evils cry for removal in the British Islands, but we have no doubts the necessary reforms will come through decent evolutionary channels rather than by resort to revolution, or by any besmirching of the nation's record for progress by sound and responsible constitutional methods.

reduction, or entire abolition, of the duties on agricultural implements, the following statement of what these duties have been and are will be of interest:

"On harvesters or binders the duty in 1878 was 35 per cent.; in 1894, 20 per cent.; in 1897, 30 per cent., and in 1906, 17½ per cent. On mowing machines the rates of duty under the four tariffs were 35, 20, 20 and 17½, respectively; on ploughs, 35, 20, 20 and 20; on harrows and horse rakes, the same; on portable engines and boilers, in combination, 35, 30, 25 and 20; on horsepowers and traction engines for farms, 35, 30, 25 and 20; on threshing machines and separators, 35, 30, 25 and 20; on fanning mills, 35, 30, 25 and 25; on axes, 30, 30, 25 and 22½; on scythes, $12.40 a dozen, 35 per cent., 25 and 22½; on hoes, rakes and forks, 35, 30, 25, and 22½. These are the more important items that had tariffs at all four periods. Later invented machinery obviously had duties levied only at the later times. Under the Conservative tariffs the duty on agricultural implements and machinery not specified in the list, which would be the newer inventions, was 35 per cent., under the Liberal tariffs this class of imports is subject to a duty of 25 per cent. Under the Liberal tariffs, moreover, all imports from Great Britain are subject to a further reduction of the duty by one-third, due to the British Preference. Material, such as steel, rolled iron, rolled steel and pig iron, if used in the manufacture of agricultural implements is subject to a drawback of ninety-nine per cent. of the duty paid, lessening in this way the cost of production, which should mean a saving for the consumer in turn."

The duties on agricultural implements have already been largely reduced, and further reductions can and be made without driving across the line much manufacturing which is now being done in Canada. The outcome would be that the Canadian farmer would find himself in the clutches of a huge American implement combine, while he would have lost a considerable slice of the home market, which, after all, is the most valuable he has.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Short work, says the Presbyterian, will be made of "Nationalism" in Quebec if the Nationalists of that Province let in such a way as to consolidate against them not merely their anti-Nationalist French neighbours, but the great English-speaking community of Canada. They should let well enough alone.

An Ottawa paper says there is a marked lack of public interest in the civic elections there this year, so much so that there are scarcely enough candidates so far to fill the vacancies. Ottawa is not alone, says the Stratford Beacon in this regard. Barring the mayoralty there is scarcely more than a whisper as to who will be candidates here. Various remedies are proposed for this general indifference to civic matters, among them the commission form of government. No form of government, however ideal in its character, can be a success if the electors, the persons directly concerned, are not alive to their interests.

PROTESTANT HOME RULERS.

(Toronto World.)

Much is being made of a Protestant home ruler being elected in Wales, [illegible] ance for a century and more in Ireland up till Redmond has been a Protestant. The rebellion of 1798 was led by Protestants. The Tory party in England encourages Ulster resistance to local government because it ensures 17 solid votes for the party for which no return has to be made. Belfast never got any favour from Tory governments in London, except an occasional baronetcy for a citizen who paid for it in entertaining. Lord Pirrie, head of the biggest shipbuilding yard in the world, is a supporter of the present Liberal government in England, and a great friend of the Asquiths, who are home rulers.

ELECTION DATES.

(Ottawa Free Press.)

When the Ontario Legislature meets an effort will be made to pass an act setting a different date for the holding of municipal elections. It is pointed out that the present system of having the elections on the first Monday of the New Year and the nominations a week earlier, is most inconvenient and an unnecessary additional burden to a busy season. In the west they have changed things around a bit and earlier municipal elections there seem to work out all right. Why not in Ontario too? In this connection the Kingston Standard very sensibly comments as follows:

"The last three weeks in December are without doubt the busiest time of the year for the retail merchant. He simply can not spare a moment from his business to spend in doing the necessary work to insure his election. Canvassing for him is out of the question and it is well known that without a fairly thorough canvass, even a very strong and popular man can be defeated by a much weaker man who has the time or will give the time to interview the voters. In the rural parts of the province this is not the case, as the farmer is not very busy during the last three weeks of the year."

It would be an improvement to have the elections held, say late in November or early in December and have the financial years of the corporations wind up at the same time. On the other hand it is suggested that the elections be held early, but the candidates elected might not take office till the first of the year. The former method looks the better at this distance, since the temptation would be before old councils to do things not in line with the ideas expressed through the newly elected officials during the few weeks while the latter are waiting to take office.

A FEW SUGGESTIONS

From Farm and Dairy.

Meat must be provided to furnish protein for eggs.

Vitamines should now be fed; more than when the hens were on range.

Dry picked poultry always has the finest appearance on the market if properly picked.

Improvement in the quantity and quality of the poultry products should be the watchword of every progressive poultryman.

A feeding ration unbalanced, especially for the purpose it is intended for, and containing an excess of costly protein feed-stuff is wasteful.

Well-fed marketed poultry demands a fancy price over the ragtime fatted poultry; it is of finer flavor, more delicate and juicy. Plump getting in poor condition [illegible] poor quality [illegible]

Give [illegible] should be taken to never let a hen or chicken get off a regular feed [illegible] the [illegible] pullet [illegible] regular pullet. A hen can [illegible] the appearance of a stale and not a fresh egg.

If you have a select egg trade where you are receiving a fancy price for eggs, and have brown and white shelled eggs, save them to color; their appearance will more than pay for the extra trouble.

"ASHTON-KIRK, INVESTIGATOR"

By John T. McIntyre. Copyrighted and All Rights Reserved

Stillman finally turned; there was an added importance in his manner, and his nervousness had also increased.

"Mr. Osborne," said he, "please let us have what facts the police have gathered."

"That won't take long," said Osborne. "Just before daylight—three o'clock, I think she said—the woman whom Hume employed to scrub the passage-way and stairs got here. She has always a dozen such jobs in the neighbourhood, and as she must have them all done before business begins, she's compelled to get at it early. She has a key to the street door; so she let herself in, came up these stairs and started for the far end of the hall, where there is a water tap. She didn't notice anything unusual until she returned with her pail filled; then she saw this door," pointing to that of the store room, "standing open."

"I see," said Mr. Stillman; and he gazed very hard at the door.

"Hume, according to the scrub woman's story," resumed the big man, "was a queer kind of a chap. You didn't always know just how to take him. He's lapped up a good bit of boose first and last, and sometimes he's come home pretty well settled. So when the woman saw the door open, this is the first thing that enters her mind. But to make sure, she goes into the room and calls him by name. The room's dark and there's just a touch of daylight coming in through the open door leading into the front room. So as there was no answer, she takes a peep in there and sees him on the floor."

"And is that all she can tell?"

"Yes, except that she bolted down the stairs in a hurry, met Paulson here," with a nod to the policeman, who had now discarded his cigar, and told him what she had seen."

"What is her name and address?" Osborne consulted a note book.

"Mrs. Dwyer, 71 Cormant street," read he.

"Please make a note of that," said Stillman to his clerk. "And send for her later in the day." Then turning once more to Osborne, he continued: "Before doing anything else we will endeavour to find out how the criminal gained an entrance."

"That's the way with these Johnnie Newcombes," grumbled Osborne, as Stillman turned once more to his aide. "They want to do it all. Why don't he go in, look at the body and leave the police business to the police."

"Too much earnestness may have its drawbacks," said Ashton-Kirk, "but it is to be preferred to the perfunctory methods of the accustomed official, for all."

"From your angle, maybe so," said Osborne with a frown; "but not from ours."

Stillman began rubbing his palms together with what was intended to be business-like briskness; he stepped up and down the dark hall, peering right and left. But for all his assumption of confidence, his nervousness was very apparent.

"You say," said he to Osborne, "that the scrubwoman slammed the street door. Very good. That shows that it was fast at all events. Now, what other means and those of entering the building?"

"Please, sir," said Paulson, "the windows and transoms, both of the upper and lower floors are all latched except for those at the rear."

"That sounds reasonable enough, eh?"

"Very much so," replied Ashton-Kirk.

"A bayonet is a most unusual weapon," said the coroner thoughtfully, readjusting his glasses. "And I think it would be a most awkward thing to carry around with one. Therefore, it would be a most unlikely choice for an intending assassin. "I am of the opinion," nervously, "that we may safely say that it was a sudden quarrel which ended in this," and he gestured with both hands toward the body.

The safe doors were tried and found locked; a cash register was opened, and found to contain what had been apparently the receipts of the day before. An examination of the cabinets and cases disclosed hundreds of ancient coins and other articles, the value of which must have been heavy. But their orderly array had not been disturbed. A long curtain of faded green material hung from the wall at one side, as though to screen something from the sunlight and dust.

"What have we here?" said the coroner.

He stepped across the store and whisked the curtain aside. A large gilt frame was disclosed; and from it hung the slashed remains of a canvas.

"Hello!" exclaimed Osborne, with interest. "This begins to look like one of the old affairs that they say Hume's been mixed up in. Somebody's tried to cut that picture from the frame."

They examined it carefully. A keen knife had been run around the top and both sides, close to the frame. The painting hung down, its gray back displayed forlornly.

Stillman regarded it with great satisfaction.

"Here," said he, "we at least have a possible motive."

Ashton-Kirk took a twisted walking stick from a rack, and with the end of it, raised the slashed canvas so that its subject could be seen. It was a heroic equestrian figure of an officer of the American Revolution. His sword was drawn; his face shone with the light of battle.

Pendleton was just about to cry out "General Wayne," when the stick fell from his friend's hand, the canvas dropping to its former position. While the others were trying to get it into place once more, Ashton-Kirk whispered to Pendleton:

"Say nothing. This is their turn; let them work in their own way. I will begin where they have finished."

After a little time spent in a gratified inspection of the painting, Stillman said:

"But, gentlemen, let us have a look at the other rooms. There may be something more."

They re-passed through the store room and into the living room. Nothing here took the coroner's attention, and they entered the back room. Both these last had doors leading into the hall; upon their being tried they were found to be locked.

The smashed pictures upon the bedroom floor at once took the eye of Stillman. He regarded the holes in plaster and panelling and prodded the slivers of wood and glass with the toe of his shoe with much complacency.

"This completes the story," declared he. "It is now plain from end to end. The criminal entered the building from the roof, made his way down stairs and secured admittance through the door which the scrub woman found unlocked. His purpose was to steal the painting in the front room.

"In a struggle with Hume, who unexpectedly came upon him, the intruder killed him. Not knowing the exact location of the picture he wanted, he first looked for it here, the light probably being bad he took down every picture he could reach in order to get a better view of it. When, at last, he had found the desired mark, he set about cutting it from its frame. But, before he had finished, something alarmed him, and he fled without the prize."

The stolid man listened to this with marked approval. Even Currah reluctantly whispered to Pendleton:

"He's doped it out. I didn't think it was in him."

After a little more, the Coroner said to his clerk:

"I think that is about all. Perhaps we had better see that the post-mortem is well looked. Put a couple of our men on the case, have them make extensive inquiries in the neighbourhood. Any persons who appear to possess information may be brought to my office at three o'clock. Especially I desire to see this Mrs. Dwyer, Berg, who keeps the store on the ground floor, and the young man who was employed by Hume. I'll empanel a jury later." He took off his eyeglasses, placed them in a case, and, in turn, carefully slipped this into his pocket. "At three o'clock," he repeated.

"If I should not be intruding," said Ashton-Kirk, "I should like to be present."

Stillman smiled with the air of a man triumphant, but who still desired to show charity.

"I shall be pleased to see you, sir," he said, "then or at any other time."

CHAPTER V.

STILLMAN ASKS QUESTIONS

It wanted a few minutes of three o'clock when Ashton-Kirk, still accompanied by the curious Pendleton, walked into the outer room of the coroner's suite.

"Mr. Stillman will be here at any moment now," said Curran. Then lowering his voice and making a short little gesture from the elbow, he added: "These people are the ones he wanted to see."

As he and Pendleton sat down, Ashton-Kirk looked at the persons referred to. The first was a thin, wiry little woman, unmistakably Irish, cleanly dressed and with sharp, inquisitive eyes. Engaged in a low-pitched conversation with her was a thick-necked German, heavy of paunch and with a fat, red face. The third was a spectacled young Jew, poring over a huge volume, which he seemed to have brought with him. He had a tremendous head of curling black hair; his clothing was shabby; plainly nothing existed for him at that moment outside the pages of his book.

After a brief space, the coroner came in.

"Ah, how do you do, gentlemen," greeted he. He was good-natured and strove to be easy; but his natural nervousness clung to him. "I am glad to see you."

He looked at Curran and nodded at the three inquiringly.

"Yes sir," replied the clerk; "these are the parties."

"Then we will get down to business." He opened a door and entered an inner room. "Will you come in?" he asked of Ashton-Kirk and Pendleton.

They followed him at once; and Curran, addressing the little Irishwoman, said:

"Now, Mrs. Dwyer, this way, please."

She arose briskly and also entered the inner room. Stillman seated himself at a desk and carefully perched his glasses upon his nose.

FITY TIME BABIES

All babies whose mothers do not know about Dr. Chase's Ointment are truly to be pitied. They are sure to have skin troubles of one kind or another such as chafing, skin irritation, scald head, milk rash or baby eczema and nothing can bring them comfort so quickly as Dr. Chase's Ointment. It stops itching promptly and heals the skin beautifully.

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY

The second annual Arts dinner was held on Friday evening, Dec. 9th. The dinner was in every way an unqualified success. Some three hundred guests were present. The principal speakers of the evening were Hon. G. P. Graham, Minister of Railways and Canals, Mr. Justice Riddell and Prof. G. M. Wrong, of Toronto. Mr. Riddel and Prof. Wrong responded to the toast "Our Guests" both in a very able manner and in a way that elicited hearty applause from their hearers. The toast to "Our Country," proposed by Prof. Morrison was responded to by the Hon. Geo. P. Graham. Mr. Graham in replying showed a desire to avoid political discussion. He spoke strongly, however, for Canadian autonomy, stating that he believed that the best way for Canada and for the other colonies to aid in the development of greater national strength and unity, was by working out their own salvation and their own perfection. He referred very briefly to Canada's present trade relations with United States and with regard to the present negotiations, declared that the government is keenly alive to Canada's interests and desirous of securing on favourable terms any advantages which would accrue from mutual trade concessions between the two countries. Other toasts of the evening were "Queen's" proposed by W. F. Nickle, M.P.P., and responded to by Principal Gordon in his usual pleasing after dinner style, and the toast to "Sister Universities" proposed by R. M. McTaish and responded to by representatives from University College, Victoria and McGill. Another very pleasing feature of the programme was the solos rendered by Mr. Arthur Blight, of Toronto. The repeated encores, to which Mr. Blight courteously responded, bore ample testimony to the appreciation of his listeners.

Prof. W. W. Swanson delivered an address before Political Science Club Thursday. His subject was the single tax and his treatment was both interesting and instructive. He showed the economic and fiscal defects of a single tax upon the land and pointed out that the non-earned increment as a source of revenue extends to many things besides land. Hence the single tax cannot be advocated as the one and only tax. In concluding, however, he indicated that the tax on mind values was bound to form a greater and greater factor in our taxation system.

Miss Parlow, the prominent young Canadian violinist, favoured a good sized audience in Grant Hall on Thursday afternoon with a musical treat of rare excellence. She came to Queen's very highly recommended and her performance here quite justified the reputation which preceded her.

Dr. McNeil of the First Baptist Church, Toronto, spoke to the students on Sunday afternoon in Convocation Hall. His address was delivered with exceptional eloquence, nor was it lacking in the practicality necessary for personal application and assimilation.

The annual Theatre night was celebrated on Monday evening. "Billy" was the production favoured. The play was splendidly suited to the occasion and it is to be regretted that owing to the nearness of Christmas examinations, a larger number were not present. The Dramatic committee is saddled with a deficit instead of the expected surplus.

The annual conversasions will be held in Grant Hall on Friday evening next, Dec. 16th.

THE BELMONT MINSTRELS SCORE A BIG TRIUMPH SHOW A GENUINE HIT

Catchy Music, Bright Jokes and Clever Olio Features Make the Performance a Most Enjoyable One---Great Credit Due Mr. Shepard and Members of Company.

The Belmont Club Minstrels under the direction of Mr. Holly Shepard scored a genuine triumph in their performance at the Grand last night when they were enthusiastically received by one of the biggest crowds of the season, the opera house being crowded from the upper gallery to the orchestra. That the production was enjoyed almost constant fusilade of applause and laughter that was kept up left no room for doubt, and the members of the Belmont Club and Mr. Shepard have every reason to feel satisfied and proud of the success of this event. With a score of song hits well and snappily sung, the solos being taken by capable vocalists and the choruses sung by the company with spirit and pleasing effect, with a profusion of breezy dancing and bright antics, with a line of 'gags' that were new and bright, with an olio of which every number was a hit, and with the whole performance dispatched along at a fast clip without any tiresome delays, it was no wonder that the audience found the produce immediately to their liking, and were loud in their praises of the pro

Long For You," a tuneful number with a haunting refrain and his rendition won him the marked appreciation of the audience. The company whistled the chorus. "Bamboo Bungalow," a song somewhat unusual in words and harmony alike, was Mr. Geo. Buchanan's offering and he sang it splendidly. Mr. Roy Fuller followed with a typical 'rag' number, "Chinatown Rag," and the manner in which it was received indicated that the audience enjoyed the number. Mr. Reg. Turner, another of the end-men, told to music the story of a prosperous coon and his song, "Things Are Coming My Way," was one of the most amusing on the programme. Several encores had to be given. A delightful sentimental song, written in march tempo, "Think of the Girl Down Home," was splendidly sung by Mr. Stanley Ecclestone. Mr. Walter Davidson's epic song, "I Didn't Ask So I Don't Know" was a hit all the way, and the encore verse, in which he introduced some unfeeling references to David Thompson Burton and the Glove and Shoe Factory he was going to give Lindsay, brought down the house. Miss Geraldine King's sweet soprano voice was displayed to great advantage in her coon lullaby "Close That Eye," which she sang with feeling and expression. The accompaniment by the chorus was a pleasing feature of its rendition. "That Loving, Loving Rag," a quickly moving number, was successfully sung by Mr. Geo. Clarke and was enthusiastically received. Miss Josephine Sproule sang "Baby Doll," a catchy song with an artistic appreciation of its tuneful nature and in excellent voice, and had to respond to a double encore. The first part was wound up with Mr. Shepard's favourite song "Any Rags," a lively coon shout which he has been featuring for years and a speedy climax to a great first part.

The olio keeps up the good work of the first part and every number was a decided hit, the audience indicating its appreciation in no uncertain manner.

The second part opened with a selection by the Belmont Mandolin Club, under the direction of Mr. Louis Hilsdal, the audience-winning heartily encores by their clever playing.

Mr. Walter Davidson followed with a and amusing the subject of "Aerial [illegible] with [illegible] balloons, [illegible] and [illegible] aldermen [illegible] Local doings were interwoven [illegible] Mr. Shepard, at Vimy [illegible] the [illegible] of his [illegible] in an

the air trying to follow the compilation of heterogeneous and homogeneous words, phrases, sentences, and syllables that Mr. Davidson "separated from his system." The speech was a master-piece.

Miss Geraldine King sang the pretty song "Lazy Moon" in splendid fashion, and the dancing by Messrs H. Thomas, W. Briegel, W. Bellegham, L. Fitzgerald, E. Tovey, F. Jamieson, H. Jobbitt and F. Trebilcock was neatly and cleverly executed, the number earning several well deserved encores.

Messrs. George Clarke and Holly Shepard followed in a laughable sing ing and talking specialty that was one of the hits of the evening. Opening with the lively song "Tip-e canoe" and a clever dance they followed this auspicious introduction with a rapid cross-fire of bright jokes that was responsible for a continuous gale of laughter. Incidentally Mr. Clarke, who hails from Lindsay got back at Mr. Davidson for warbling that ditty about D. B. Thomas by explaining that the medal he won was given him for bringing "Purity Ware Limited" to Peterborough.

A very amusing number was the "cop" specialty, introducing Big Chief George Wesley and his bunch of cops, Messrs. J. Simpson, G. Buchanan, D. Brown, K. Lech, N. Greenhalgh, H. Hall, W. Cochrane and S. Ecclestone. Mr. Wesley sang the song "Think of That," and the cops introduced a lively dance drill that was heartily encored.

The grand finale introduced the entire company in the lively march song, "Gee, It's Great to be a Soldier Man," the solo being taken by Mr. Wm. McIlroy in his usual pleasing manner, while the refrain was whistled and sung by the company.

Mr. McIlroy acted as interlocutor of the first part, and made a very efficient man in the centre of the circle.

A feature of the production was the splendid playing of the orchestra, which was in charge of Mrs. Shepard at the piano.

Members of the Belmont Club, in evening dress, acted as the ushers for the evening. The boxes were draped in the Club's colours—mauve and purple.

The performance will be repeated at the Grand to-night and should be seen by everyone.

A PRESENTATION

Miss Jennie Buyers Was Honoured by Her Associates

A pleasant event took place at the Novel-Ti Co. the other evening when Miss Jennie Buyers, who has been a member of the staff for a number of years, was presented with a valuable silver bread plate and a beautiful silver cake basket. The Novel-Ti Co has always been noted for the superior and refined class of goods produced, and it is now to be congratulated on its training, as Miss Buyers has been forming a tie of a lasting nature and the knot will be tied by a reverend gentleman of the city shortly. The gifts were accompanied by many good wishes for her future happiness. Miss Buyers thanked Mr. Attwood and her associates for the kindness shown her and for the beautiful presents.

Man's Misery Promptly Banished

(From "Man's Maladies.")

A certain sort of misery which causes a man to become abject in manner, timid, suspicious and jealous without real warrant, can be readily banished by a systematic nerve treatment which can be followed out in the privacy of home and restoration of a normal or natural condition speedily ensues.

A man feels and knows when he is not getting out of life all that it holds, and this knowledge makes the misery which occurs with such symptoms as unsteady gait, weak voice, downcast eyes, cold extremities, loss of flesh loss of self control, lack of self esteem, pains in the back and back part of head, shooting pains, heart palpitation, nervousness, sleeplessness, hollow eyes, sunken cheeks, colourless lips, dizziness and trembling.

The requirement to overcome these dreadful symptoms is a restoration of power and strength to the nervous system which has been poorly nourished or abused by thoughtless eating, drinking, or social duties, perhaps superinduced by overwork. Keep, strong, sensitive nerves which carry every sensation or emotion to the brain centres of consciousness can and should be the possession of every living individual. Let this prescription be used and the results will surely reward the efforts. Obtain of any good druggist, three ounces of syrup sarsaparilla compound, in a six ounce bottle. Add one ounce of compound fluid balmwort, shake and let stand for two hours, then add one ounce of tincture cadomene compound (not cardamom) and one ounce of compound essence cardiol. Mix. Shake well and take a teaspoonful after each meal and one when retiring. The three last named ingredients are specially prepared and powerful concentrations, much used in various prescriptions, but contain no opiates to harm the system.

JOVIAL THIEVES

Got Home of All the Silver and Before Fleeing They Place Teddy Bear Astride on a Railing

NEW YORK, DEC. 12.—Burglars added insult to injury by playing a joke on V. Monroe Roberts, a wealthy varnish manufacturer living in Malba, Queen's Borough.

Several mornings ago when the Roberts came down staire to breakfast they found the large Teddy bear of Mrs. Roberts astride the newel post. Teddy's head was on one side and a hat was cocked over one ear. Beside the bear was an uncorked bottle of cocktails.

Just then the maid screamed:

"There's been robbers here, there's been robbers here, Mr. Roberts!"

The Roberts hurried into the dining-room, to find that all of their silverware was apparently missing.

"Thank heaven, I kept the best in a trunk," exclaimed Mrs. Roberts.

She ran into a storeroom and found that the trunk in which she had kept her finer silver service had been looted too.

A closer inspection of the house showed that ten pieces had been left three of which were plated. To the rueful amusement of Roberts the wedding gift (plated) of an unsuccessful suitor for the hand of Mrs. Roberts was found behind a door.

"They could have had that and welcome," said Roberts.

From an upper floor two fur overcoats were missing. In all the loot amounted to about $1,700 worth. Before he sat down to a dreary breakfast, Roberts went to Powell's Cove, an arm of the East River which his house overlooks. On the shore he found an apron in which the silver had seemingly been carried. There were also the marks of a boat's landing on the beach.

A BILIOUS HEADACHE

Bile in the blood is poison and causes pain. Mrs. Thomas Covert, Highland Grove, Ont., writes: "For years I suffered with biliousness, stomach trouble and terrible headaches. Having used Dr. Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills will say unhesitatingly that this is the most effective treatment obtainable for these troubles."

Y. M. C. A. NOTES

Y.M.C.A. bowling alleys were the scene of a very close and exciting game last night, when the High Rollers and Lancashire Trio met for the first time. The first game went to the Tri without much serious opposition, but in the second game the High Rollers proved the right to their name and hung up a new team score for the tournament and won the second game handily. The third game was very close and was only decided on the last balls, the Lancashire Trio winning the last game by seven pins. This leaves the Trio and Mivvies tied for first place in the League.

In the Intermediate Basketball League the Burglers had no pity for the Shamrock and robbed them of another game in spite of their protests. Score, Burglers 30, Shamrocks 6. Sawbones and Rowdies postponed their games.

Inspiring Address by Principal of Toronto University Before Canadian Club Last Night—Some Splendid Lessons for Canadians.

LESSON OF TOLERATION

"One of the chief qualities a college can possess is the virtue of tolerance. Tolerance is that virtue in a man that will help to consider and see the good side, and if it is of the opposite, diligence in the study of the phenomena. If you were to [illegible] these forms of conduct as the [illegible] alteration of [illegible] tolerance of [illegible] not agree with him, but you can respect him, you can feel fellowship with him. Toleration and respect go together. They lead to freedom, and there is no freedom where there is not the liberty of others."

Thus was expressed one of the salient features of the address of Principal Falconer of Toronto University to the Peterborough Canadian Club, at the Hotel National last evening. Never has there been a more brilliant or more inspiring address delivered before a gathering of local men than that which the head of Canada's foremost University. The Canadian Club is indeed to be congratulated on securing Principal Falconer for its [illegible] here. REGRETS DESIRE OF UNITED STATES TO ABROGATE RUSH-BAGOT TREATY

Justice Riddell Discusses Warships on the Lakes---Canadian Jurist at Convention at Washington---Notables at Gathering.

Washington, D.C., Dec. 16.—"International Relations between the United States and Canada" was the subject of a comprehensive address by Justice W. R. Riddell of Toronto before the international conference of the American Society for Judicial Settlement of International Disputes, which opened its three days' session yesterday. Secretary of State Knox is presiding, and Hon. Elihu Root and Andrew Carnegie are among the notables participating.

Justice Riddell discussed the progress of various international arbitrations, from the treaty of Ghent in 1814 to the waterways treaty of last year between Canada and the United States, providing for a permanent joint commission. Continuing, he said: "Leaving aside questions of tariff, which are quite outside the subject of this paper, the international relations between the two countries are governed by the three agreements, the Rush-Bagot arrangement, the general arbitration treaty of 1908, and the waterways treaty of 1909."

Speaking of the claim by the United States that there was nothing in treaty obligations to prevent the building of any kind of vessel on the great lakes and that there were shipyards able to launch naval vessels of the maximum size that can be taken through the canal system, he said:

"It may be well for the United States to consider whether it is not unwise to ask what the issue of the agreement should be set aside. Canada would be considered unjustifiable were she to refuse to consent to other ships being allowed to pass up the canals for use on the lakes. It would look as though she feared a hostile movement on the part of her neighbor; that she doubted the good faith and real desire for amicable peace of her elder brother to the south. But both parties thought the agreement was one that should be made, and when made, remained unlimited, and was rather futile to say now the conveniences of one party should lead to its modification. National sensibilities are to be considered, however absurd they may be, and whether they are absurd or not."

"It might well be that the most carefully drawn code would be found not to cover certain matters — the 'casus omissus' is always coming up in ordinary litigation. What harm could result from allowing the board to lay down rules to cover any cases omitted?

"We have got far away from the old 'club law' in most instances. Is it too much to expect that the two great English-speaking nations will set the example to the world of the total abolition of this Scottish law in international matters as well. God speed the day."

Rink Roof Caved In.

Owen Sound, Dec. 16.—At Parkhead, a village ten miles from here, on Wednesday night at 7.45, the entire roof of the rink collapsed. Quite a number of the hockey boys had gone on the ice, when the rafters began to break, and immediately the door was jammed with people endeavoring to make their escape. Strange to say, there was only one injured, one young man received a slight injury to his arm.

Broke Through the Ice.

Belleville, Dec. 16.—J. Adams, a yeoman residing in Ameliasburg Township, in attempting to cross the ice on the bay with a load of hogs, broke through. Mr. Adams, the horse, hogs and outfit, were rescued after much difficulty.

Picked Up Dynamite Cap.

Belleville, Dec. 16.—In the County Courts, in session here, a jad named Harold Lawrence obtained a verdict of $150 against the Federal Co. for injuries he received in picking up a dynamite cap which exploded, injuring his hand.

Farmers Demand A Large Measure Of Reduction For British Goods

Want Reciprocity With the United States---Westerners Want Hudson Bay Railway Scheme Put Through as Soon as Possible---Pass Memorials.

Ottawa, Dec. 16.—Eight hundred delegates, representing every province of Canada, with the exception of Prince Edward Island, were present at the convention held at the Grand Opera House yesterday, to frame the resolutions to be presented to the Government by the monster deputation of farmers, which will wait upon Sir Wilfrid Laurier at the Home of Commons to-day.

The resolution on the tariff was moved by E. C. Drury of Barrie, Ont., secretary-treasurer of the Canadian Council of Agriculture, and ex-leader of the Dominion Grange.

Mr. Drury said that tariff was undoubtedly the greatest question of the day, as far as the farmers were concerned. He did not see any objection to the system of protection, if it did what it was intended to do, namely to adjust an infant industry for a short time, but no one contemplated that this system would run on for years, and become a permanent burden on the country.

Today the organized manufacturers were holding up the country, instead of trying to develop it. They were not trying to increase the output of the country, but to restrict it for their own advantage. He would present this question not from a standpoint of the farmers, but from the standpoint of building up a great empire. In making their deputation, they were not asking for any system which would tax the manufacturers for the benefit of the farmers, but they were asking that the system established for infant industries, and now become a system of legalized robbery, should be put a stop to.

E. A. Partridge of Sintaluta, Sask., seconded the resolution. Under free trade conditions manufacturing could be carried on more cheaply than at present. He declared himself in favor of direct taxation on the basis of land values.

The resolution was supported by representatives from each of the provinces, S. C. Parker of Berwick speaking for Nova Scotia, H. B. Hathaway of Prince Edward Island, and Mr. Fraser for New Brunswick. Robert Gallie of Huntingdon for Quebec, Mr. Bateman of Simcoe for Ontario, James Speakman of Pushoh for Alberta, R. McKenzie of Wiarton, Thomas McMillan of Souris for Manitoba, and S. L. Brown of Pilot Mound, Man., also spoke in support of the resolution, and a delegate showed that he was be heard in favor of the resolution, and that an opportunity be given to those opposed. This was agreed to, and the chairman invited any person who did not approve of the resolution to take the platform, but there was no response, and the resolution carried unanimously, the delegates cheering.

The memorials dealt in brief:—

(1) Reciprocal free trade between the United States and Canada in all horticultural, agricultural and animal products, dairying materials, fertilizers, fuel, illuminating and lubricating oils, cement, lath and lumber.

(2) Reciprocal free trade between the two countries in all agricultural implements, machinery, vehicles and parts thereof.

(3) An immediate lowering of the duties on all British imports to coincide with the duties charged under the general tariff, whatever these may be. That any trade advantages given to the United States in reciprocal trade relations be extended to Great Britain.

(4) That such reduction of the revenue preferential tariff as will increase the establishment of commerce between the Dominion and countries other within two years.

(5) That the farmers of this country are willing to face direct taxation, in such form as may be advisable, to make up the revenue lost under the new tariff relations.

The other resolutions ask: Government ownership of the Hudson Bay Railway, the establishment of a chilled meat trade in Canada, to foster a dynamic export business, the passing of a law to permit the formation of cooperative societies, and Government ownership of terminal elevators.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier Brings In Finance Measure--Illegal Use Of Mails

Ottawa, Dec. 16.—Quite an animated debate was stirred up in the House of Commons yesterday afternoon on the responsibility of the Government in enforcing its own laws and putting an end to the operations of the promoters of get-rich-quick schemes, through their use of the mails.

J. E. Armstrong (E. Lambton) precipitated a long discussion over the C. D. A. Sheldon affair in Montreal. He wanted to know what action the Postoffice Department was taking to put a stop to the mails being used for the furtherance of get-rich-quick schemes, such as that run by Sheldon. Had the Government made any effort to locate the guilty parties? Surely it had not come to this, as was indicated in the reply, he said, that the Government had no control over the matter which was going through the mails. The Postmaster-General, he had been informed, had no power to institute prosecutions. He could not understand this.

He gave instances to show that the United States postal authorities got right after this class of people, and made them disgorge. Why did not the Solicitor-General take the matter up? He should be censured, for he knew that this man was carrying on illegal transactions.

He then went on to say that if the Government of the United States could bring men back, outside the Government of Canada could. If the Government couldn't, they ought to get the power at once. The Federal Government must have the power, for neither Quebec nor Ontario had control over the mails of Canada.

W. F. MacLean (South York): The question raised by the hon. member for East Lambton is on a similar footing to questions that I have raised in this House on several occasions. I contend that it is the duty of the Federal authorities to enforce federal laws. And I am the more confirmed in that opinion, because I find that, in some cases, we are failing in new. We enforce the Railway Act, we prosecute for infractions of the customs law, and for crimes in connection with the Minister's daily.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier said that the British North American Act had not made provision for the administration of the laws. By that act practically all the courts were placed under the jurisdiction of the provinces. To this rule which had been taken by the provincial authorities to prosecute the offender, and so it was found by us at the present time. The provincial courts prosecuted, and so convicted; if we could have them dealt better of in this instance if there was a federal prosecutor.

Mr. Armstrong explained that there were violations of the law in respect to the operation of mining companies in New Ontario.

Jacques Bureau, Solicitor-General, said that before the possibles authorities could be expected to take action, it was necessary to show that things had been fraud, and that the mails had been used for the circulation of circulars.

A. K. Maclean said it was quite manifest that the mails had been used for this purpose, and that the Postmaster-General had neglected his duty in failing to prosecute.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier, in the absence of Hon. W. S. Fielding, introduced in the House of Commons yesterday the new Bank Act, which follows upon the decennial revision required by statute. The bank charter's expire July 1, and will have to be renewed. It is a policy measure, and contains several important changes.

The main feature, Sir Wilfrid explained, was the introduction of a clause providing for a shareholders' audit. At a general meeting of the shareholders, an auditor will be appointed under the new section, and at any time thereafter shareholders representing five per cent. of the capital stock of the bank, can ask the Canadian Bankers' Association for a special audit, and the audit so made shall be included in the annual statement issued to the shareholders of the bank.

"It also provides," Sir Wilfrid continued, "that the annual statement of the affairs and of the condition and the dividends issued by the bank must be issued under the authority and signature of the proper officers, and upon them the civil and criminal liability rests. If they do not acquaint themselves by actual information of the truth of what they sign, it would not be sufficient for these officials to say that they have signed in good faith, as was done in former days, but every official of the bank, whatever his rank or standing, who under the law is compelled to put his signature to a document, must personally acquaint himself as to the truth of the facts therein contained, and the penalty is severe.

"New machinery is provided, whereby banks whose share capital is $500 to $100, which is the usual parity now, by resolution of the shareholders.

An added provision makes it legal to pledge to the bank as security for loans the ore the products of the forest, including saw logs, railway ties, and lumber as deals, boards, staves and other lumber.

There is no doubt that the bill will be unanimously disposed to commend, when the Bankers' Association will be able to make suggestions, and the hope that H. C. McLeod, late general manager of the Bank of Nova Scotia, the Government impressed will be brought up.

Depositors Who Had Been Solicited To Withdraw Their Deposits On Stand

Lindsay, Dec. 16.—[illegible] charged in the [illegible] and Cashier [illegible] with [illegible] to induce the [illegible] to withdraw their deposits, was resumed this morning before Judge Ardagh and a jury. Lester Mahaffy of Fenelon, a farmer and merchant, said Mahaffy and Cashier had called on him one night and asked him to withdraw his deposit. He refused. Mahaffy said that Cashier told him that Mr. Gould, the bank inspector, was coming, and that he would have to withdraw his deposit. Mahaffy said that Cashier told him that Mr. Gould, the bank inspector, was coming, and that he would have to withdraw his deposit. Mahaffy said that Cashier told him that Mr. Gould, the bank inspector, was coming, and that he would have to withdraw his deposit.

"I'll Give Moran First Chance At The Title"

By AD WOLGAST,
World's Lightweight Champion

I am a fighter, not a press agent, but I have been attacked so much and roasted so generously that I believe it is up to me to tell the public a few facts. All this talk about my alleged loafing does not bother me a bit, for when I get in shape I'll step out and make all my critics take off their hats to me.

And right here let me say that Moran will get the first chance. I held him to a draw in New York when I had never fought anybody but dubs and had only been in the business a year, so does it stand to reason that I fear him now, when I have improved 1,000 per cent. and he is the same scrapper he was three years ago? If Moran wants to fight me right away, why did he step up for a three months' tour on the stage? Not that I mean he fears me, but just the same when it comes time to fight, see if I am not prepared before he is.

NELSON RESTED SIX MONTHS

I have had two fights since I won the title from Nelson last February, and there has been an awful yell because I have not boxed oftener. If my "panning" friends would take time to remember they would probably recollect that Nelson did not fight for six months after his first fight with Gans. And no one roasted him.

In the first bout, that with Redmond, in Milwaukee, I broke a small bone of my wrist. I know the accident has been sneered at, but if any sporting writer in the country doubts the seriousness of the injury, I will show him the signed affidavits of two of the most prominent doctors of Milwaukee. Stung by the criticism of a lot of Nelson boosters, I took on a young fellow at a small town in Wisconsin two months later to see whether my arm could stand the strain. It was a foolish venture for I broke the bone in the same place again. Had my arm stood the strain I would have signed to box Nelson in November, as I had announced immediately after I won the title.

"Moran is a good, tough, young fellow, but I expected his victory over Nelson would be more decisive than it was."

READY TO BOX MORAN

I do not fear Moran. When I boxed him in New York I weighed 118 pounds, while he was close to 130. I was a novice then and he was a past master of the game.

Just when I will be ready to fight is a question. I have been doing some light work with my bad arm, and it is coming along nicely. Naturally, with a big fight in sight I wish to take matters easily, and you can take it from me that I will not enter the ring again until I am absolutely certain that the wing is O. K. When it gets right, which I think will be in about a month, I will be ready for any and all of them. Fighting is the way I make my living, and the cost of living is pretty high.

I hear that Knockout Brown is on my trail. Who is this Knockout person? I never heard of him until he won from Tommy Murphy, and any one who cannot beat Tommy Murphy ought to take to selling hair ribbons. If Mr. Brown wants a fight he will have to get a reputation first. Let him fight Moran or Attell or some one of the class, and if he beats them I will be ready to talk to him.

There is absolutely no chance of my fighting Nelson unless the public forces me into it.

Just by way of closing, I beg the public to wait just a little while. I have had a long rest and feel like a bulldog. When my arm gets right, the boxing followers of the country will see all they want of the lightweight champion.

IMPROVEMENTS

Are Being Made to the Hockey Room at Brock Street Rink

The boom in hockey circles has communicated itself to the Brock Street Rink, where some appreciated improvements have been made in the hockey room. The partition has been moved, making the room seven or eight feet longer, and giving the players much more commodious and comfortable quarters. The antiquated wood-stove which has done service so long, will be replaced by a more modern coal-burning heater, and other improvements will be carried out.

SOME HOCKEY HAPPENINGS

Allen of the T.A.A.C. last year, and one of the stars of the Inter-Provincial Union, was counted upon to play with the Belleville Intermediate O.H.A. team but has announced that owing to a recent severe illness he will be out of the game this winter.

Belleville with a junior and intermediate O.H.A. team, and a team in the Ontario Professional League, should get its share of hockey this winter. Cummings and Armstrong of last year's Trenton team, will be out with the intermediate O.H.A. seven.

Convener Scott of Cobourg will likely call a meeting of the representatives of the intermediate clubs of this district at Trenton on Tuesday next for the purpose of drawing up the schedule. It is not expected the games will commence until after New Year's, as some of the teams along the front do not want to start earlier. Convener Graham, of the Junior series will, it is expected, call the junior clubs together to-morrow. The junior schedule will open a week earlier than the intermediate. Cobourg juniors have asked for a home game on the night following New Year's Day, and their request will, in all probability be granted.

The Junior O. H. A. team had another fatiling practice last night, with the full team present. Some of the players are coming along nicely, and should be in the game with a rush when the games start. The intermediates were between the posts.

Galt Reporter: President Hector Brown of the Junior O. H. A. team stated to the Reporter that there is absolutely no truth in the statement made by the London Free Press this morning that Galt will have no junior O. H. A. team because of the professional league. Galt will have a team, and, what is more, every hope is held of having a winning septette. Those who know say that Galt will walk away with the championship easily.

The Barrie Hockey Club has made arrangements for two exhibition games at Barrie. Collingwood will play there Christmas afternoon, and Eaton's intermediates New Year's afternoon. Gren Caldwell is again playing the wing for Barrie.

Preston's good juniors, who went into the final with Kingston last season, are out for intermediate honours. They make their first appearance of the season against Eaton seniors in Toronto on Saturday night.

A Globe despatch from Belleville says: "Buck" Irving, who is negotiating the Eastern Ontario Professional League in this district, was in town to-day on business. Dusome, one of the players signed up for the Belleville team, arrived here to-day. The others are expected shortly.

There are 98 teams entered in the O. H. A., three of which were not grouped. The others are divided as follows:—Senior, 10; Intermediate, 40; Junior, 43.

Stratford is the only club in the O. H. A. that has teams in all three series—senior, intermediate and junior.

Big League Ball Players For Toronto

TORONTO, DEC. 16.—It took a long time to get the Toronto management started, but when the good work was begun more deals were put through concerning the buying and selling of players than have been negotiated by all of the other Eastern League clubs combined. Following is only a partial list of the transfers made by Toronto at the recent New York meeting of the league:

Outfielder Keeler, bought from New York Nationals.

Catcher Phelps, bought from St. Louis Nationals.

Third-baseman Bill Bradley bought from Cleveland Americans.

Pitcher Corridon, bought from St. Louis Nationals.

Catcher Kroch, bought from the New England League.

Pitcher Backman, bought from St. Louis Nationals.

Pitcher Johnny Lush, bought from St. Louis Nationals.

Pitcher Winter, secured from Montreal by trade for Pitcher Carroll.

First baseman Jordan, bought from Brooklyn Nationals.

Catcher Tonneman, sold to the Boston Americans.

First-baseman Grimshaw, sold to Louisville (American Association).

Pitcher Lundgren, sold to Topeka, Kan. (Western League.)

Infielder Frick, sold to Newark (Eastern League).

Pitcher Carroll, traded to Montreal for Pitcher Winter.

Deals are pending for a shortstop. Two players are coming to Toronto from the Boston Americans. Deals for Catcher Vandergrift will be considered; in fact, the Toronto management is still in the business of buying and selling without reserve if adequate prices can be secured, and if players of genuine merit may be had at reasonable figures to strengthen the team.

Amount already disbursed for new men, $9,000; amount received for men sold, $6,100.

The failure to land a winner last season has spurred the Toronto management to radical action, as the foregoing astonishing list of sales and purchases indicate. President McCaffery is not making his plans known, but it is suspected that the players coming to Toronto from Boston are in payment or part payment for Catcher Tonneman. The President assured The Globe last night that the two Red Shins are not owing to Toronto as the result of any old deals which may have taken place between the two clubs.

The sum of $3,500 was offered Toronto for Catcher Phelps after he had been secured from St. Louis. An offer was also made Toronto of $2,500 for Pitcher Lush, who won eleven and lost eighteen games with a club which won only 54 games and lost 99, for a percentage of .355, in seventh place. Tim Jordan assures Manager Kelly that his injured leg is quite well again, and if the big slugger is not mistaken he will be a 'whale' in the Eastern League.

Bill Bradley, the best third baseman who ever played the game, in spite of his nine years in the game, is now less than thirty years of age. Bobby Vaughn has been a disappointment at the bat and has faults that Kelley has tried in vain to correct. Winter for Carroll looks like a good deal. Winter is steady anyway, and that cannot be said of Carroll.

It is proposed to dispose of Infielder Eddie McDonald, a procedure which will not meet with the unanimous approval of the fans. McDonald had trouble with his arm and shoulder last season, but his hitting and speed were great factors in his favour. Bradley will be good enough for any Eastern League team if he succeeds in getting near his best form, but McDonald would be a handy man to fill utility roles. Nobody has yet been mentioned for that job. Grimshaw has been a source of constant trouble for the Leafs, and Jordan should be a worthy successor. All in all it would seem that the activity of the Toronto management is well directed, and should result in much benefit to the team as a pennant possibility. And the end of the strengthening process is not yet.

Anglo-American Marriage.

New York, Dec. 16.—Although Mr. and Mrs. George J. Gould have not admitted the engagement of their second daughter, Miss Vivien, and Lord Decies, as cabled from London, it was reported that the nobleman had admitted to his friends the engagement with the approval of Miss Gould's parents.

It is rumored that the wedding will take place in London next spring and that it will be one of the events of the London social season. Miss Gould is barely over 18 years of age. Lord Decies is 44.

To Work in Poisonous Swamps.

Rio Janeiro, Dec. 16.—Punishment more dreaded than death will be meted out to the Brazilian naval mutineers who were taken from the battleships Sao Paulot, Minas Geraes, Deodoro and Bahia. It was announced yesterday that the men will be sentenced to hard labor and shipped into the Amazon swamps to work upon the new Madeira-Mamor Railroad.

VERY EXPENSIVE BEEF
56c POUND LIVE WEIGHT

Shorthorn Weight Between 1500 and 1600 Pounds Brings This Price in Toronto—Dressed This Beef Would Retail at Over $1.00 a Pound—An Almost Fabulous Price.

The meat-eating citizens of Peterborough, much as they would appreciate a few steaks or a roast from the splendid animal, a photo of which is reproduced herewith, would scarcely care to pay the price that this animal commanded when sold by public auction at the Union Stock Yards, Toronto, last Tuesday afternoon. This animal, a Shorthorn, the property of Mr. Slattery, an Ottawa butcher, weighing between 1,500 and 1,600 pounds, was sold to the highest bidder for 56 cents a pound, live weight. He was purchased by J. Just what this price would mean per pound of the better cuts of meat when dressed, may be gathered when it is learned that such an animal will show somewhere in the neighborhood of 60 per cent. of dressed meat. This animal, a Shorthorn, the property of Mr. Slattery, an Ottawa butcher, would bring the carcass, when hung up, to well over $1.00 a pound.

This animal, "Roan James," was bred at Beaverton, on the estate of the late Donald Gunn. He was sold a year ago to Jas. Leask of Greenbank, Ont., who fitted him, and at the great Chicago International Live Stock Exposition, three weeks ago, he came near carrying off the championship honours. As it was he was first in his class and second in the premier awards for the best steer in the show. At Guelph, last week, he carried off the championship award, and was again champion at the Toronto Fat Stock Show this week.

This steer, through prize money, won at the various exhibitions, and in the fabulous price he netted his owner at public auction last Tuesday, brought Mr. Leask a sum somewhere in the neighborhood of $1,600. The Examiner is indebted to our local weekly contemporary, the Farm and Dairy, for the photo of the out of this steer, and the information given herewith.

Pulp Area Concessions.

Toronto, Dec. 15.—Hon. Frank Cochrane is reported to have set himself against yielding to a formidable movement to secure extension of pulp area concessions in the Nipigon district. According to corridor rumors, it will be a fight to a finish before the Minister of Mines yields any of the public domain, except it be upon such terms as will fully conserve the public interests.

According to one statement, a deputation from the Canadian Power & Paper Co. which saw Hon. Mr. Cochrane, claimed the concessions to be advanced a stage. From another source, a very different intimation was conveyed.

The deputation included Wm. Mackenzie, T. H. Shippen, K.C., and S. Marks, Sault Ste. Marie.

The Canadian Power & Paper Co. holds a Dominion charter. Its head office is at the Canadian Northern headquarters, Toronto.

Twelve Men Entombed.

Denver, Colo., Dec. 15.—Twelve men are reported entombed in shaft No. 2 of the Lorden Coal Co., at Lorden, Colo., fourteen miles west of Denver. It is feared all are dead.

Fire started about nine o'clock Wednesday night, the result of an explosion and the timbering of the shaft was ablaze in a moment, cutting off escape in that way.

Shaft No. 1 is separated from shaft No. 2 by a narrow wall. A rescue party, under the direction of Samuel Perry, president of the Lorden Coal Co., was endeavoring early yesterday to break down the wall, and the twelve imprisoned men could be heard working busily in their efforts to gain liberty. [illegible] in an effort to rescue the men through shaft No. 1.

Free Delivery for Paris.

Niagara Falls, Ont., Dec. 15.—Mayor Thomas yesterday said that free mail delivery would be put in force here in January. Deputy Postmaster-General Ogilvie has promised him that this will be carried out. Last month a petition numerously signed was taken to Ottawa by the deputation requesting 10,000, as the Postmaster promised free delivery if it did over that. The census gave the city 10,000.

Spy Making Sailors.

Brest, France, Dec. 15.—Three sailors of the United States battleship Minnesota were arrested yesterday charged with having assaulted and robbed a civilian. When questioned, it is alleged, they hailed for a naturalization fee.

Storm in Spain.

Barcelona, Dec. 15.—Storms of a cyclonic character are flooding a large part of the country and the situation is becoming dangerous in the Provinces of Malaga, Seville, Valladolid, Badajoz, Zamora, Oviedo and Caceres. Practically all the crops in these districts have been destroyed, and the people are threatened with famine. Many villages are now submerged, and railway bridges have been swept away.

The British steamer Gretna, drifted her anchors at Ormonde and was dashed against a jetty. The Norwegian steamer Tiki, chartered by the Royal Mail Steamship Co., is reported ashore at Oczara, Tenerife, and is regarded as a total loss. Four of her crew perished.

The British Elections.

London, Dec. 15.—The latest returns announced last night give the Government coalition 353 seats, and the Unionists 307.

The standing of the parties is now as follows:—

Government Coalition—Liberals 240, Labor 40, Nationalists 73—Total 353.

Opposition—Unionists 307.

Chesney in the new Parliament, as in the last Parliament, the Nationalists, by combining with the Unionists, could overthrow the Government; but the Liberals, Laborites and Nationalists are all equally desirous of abolishing the veto of the House of Lords, and may be expected to work together to attain that object.

Want Pay For the Blind.

Cambridge, Mass., Dec. 15.—A tablet of cast for Hattie Lathrop, the Hills Corners Canadian girl who was accidentally killed by a car on Wednesday of last week, is expected to arrive in Cambridge this week. Hundreds of school children, each having a penny for the special purpose, went to the mail and express pile of boxes. The lottery included many proposals of marriage, and several gentlemen have offered the girl a large salary for a stage contract. Miss Lathrop's parents were married over 25 years ago.

Tank Earthquake for Bangkok.

Glasgow, Dec. 15.—The Glasgow petroleum tanker is being subjected to unprecedented rallway to-day for its culture in capture the "tank burglars," who on Wednesday night threw the city into a panic. Experiencing a tremendous shock, and rumbling noise, the people jumped to the conclusion that a bank was being dynamited. A general alarm was sounded, and the police searched the city for the supposed [illegible] Bangkok Petroleum Co. [illegible] Bangkok [illegible] Bangkok [illegible] Bangkok

The Traffic On Canadian Canals

The canals of Canada are doing an ever-increasing business. The returns show a growth of over 18,000,000 tons since 1907. In 1900 about 8,000,000 tons of freight were handled through our canals; in 1906 this quantity had more than doubled; and one year later, in 1907, the amount of freight traffic practically doubled again. Although there was a decrease of some 3,000,000 tons in 1908, there has been a splendid recovery in 1909, amounting to an increase of 34 per cent. over the previous banner year, 1907. For the season of 1909 the Sault Ste. Marie canal handled the large traffic of 27,-001,000 tons of freight, which was an increase of more than 15,000,000 tons over the previous season. The St. Lawrence canals handled 9,410,-000 tons, and the Welland followed closely with 8,985,800 tons. Besides freight, the ships carried through the canals 272,223 passengers. The abolition, in 1906, of the system of charging tolls on the canals has undoubtedly been a factor in attracting and developing shipping. A study of the nature of the freight which passes through the canals shows the promise of forest products and coal, particularly on the smaller canals. While the Soo handles large quantities of ore and wheat, and the St. Lawrence canals carry a miscellaneous lot of freight, the following statement shows the forest products and coal carried on the several canals:

Welland ..	195,514	677,661
St. Lawrence Canals	509,157	659,767
Ottawa River	232,025	——
Chambly to L. Champlain ...	599,330	95,553
Trent	55,093	15,959
Sault Ste. Marie

Lumber. 84,909,000 ft. 2,737,899 ft.

It will be noticed that the canals which communicate directly or indirectly with ports in the United States carry considerable forest products, and much of the return cargo consists of coal.

The 3rd Dragoons Showing Activity

Lieut.-Colonel G. H. Syer, of Millbrook, officer commanding the 3rd Prince of Wales Canadian Dragoons, was in town this week conferring with his local officers regarding the furnishing of the Mess Rooms of the regiment at the local Armouries. Although the Dragoons are a rural corps, the headquarters of the regiment, including the Signalling Corps, and most of the staff officers, are at Peterborough, as well as the headquarters of "C" Squadron. The headquarters of "B" Squadron are at Millbrook, so that there is a large percentage of the officers in and around Peterborough. It is therefore natural that suitable quarters should be maintained for the benefit of the officers of the regiment, and as a matter of fact, there are handsome rooms available for this purpose that only require furnishing. With suitably furnished mess rooms, the 3rd Dragoons will rank with the most up-to-date cavalry regiments of Canada.

Quite a number of non-coms. of the 3rd Dragoons will attend the Royal School of Cavalry this winter.

Mr. J. N. McGill, of Cavan, has been appointed to a commission in "B" Squadron 3rd Dragoons. Mr. McGill is one of Cavan's most enterprising young men, and is a member of the municipal council of that Township.

Sgt. G. Heaton and Sgt. J. A. Paul of "B" Squadron will go up at the beginning of the month.

It is understood that Major McLaughlin, of Bowmanville, who has commanded the squadron, will shortly be granted a pension, to succeed Capt. Haywood, resigned.

POLITICS OF YEARS AGO

The Orillia Packet became a little reminiscent the other day, and referred to some of the early political struggles of Simcoe County. Amongst other things the Packet says:

It is now nearly forty years since the writer heard Mr. Cook make his first political speech, in the old Temperance Hall, in Matchedash Street, when he and W. D. Ardagh and Wm. Count fought their famous three-cornered fight, and Ardagh won. Of all the speakers who took part in that contest, Mr. Cook alone, we believe, is left. The two other candidates are years since dead. Also "Bob" Simpson, "Stonewall" Jackson, Dr. Ramsay, D'Alton McCarthy, David Morrow, M. C. Cameron, John Keen, Dr. Hancock, and a number of others. Mr. Cook's journalistic god-father was the Northern Light, of Orillia, with Dr. Ramsay and Peter Murray as publishers, and I. H. Brock as editor. These have all passed away, while Mr. Cook remains, hearty and vigorous. Mr. Brock continued in active newspaper work up to last summer, when he was run down by a mail wagon in one of the streets of Chicago, and almost instantly killed.

Cordova Changes Ownership

It is announced that the Cordova Gold Mines in the Township of Belmont have been sold, the purchasers being Mr. P. Kirkegaard, of Dakota, Dr. W. G. Mackechnie, and Mr. Hughes. The price that was paid, it is said, was $30,000, and it is also stated that mining operations will be resumed this spring.

The Cordova mines were formerly operated by a Scottish syndicate, and the plant is one of the best in the Province. It is some six years since the mines were closed down, and since that time the little village has presented a very deserted appearance. The few remaining inhabitants of the place are much elated over the prospects of further mining activity at Cordova.

Lindsay's Lighting Franchise

The agreement between the Central Ontario Power Company and the town of Lindsay in regard to the proposed franchise asked to be granted that company, has been accepted.

A by-law granting the company the franchise has been given its first and second reading and will be submitted to the ratepayers at the January elections.

The length of the franchise asked is thirty years. The town has the right of purchase after fifteen years.

The price to consumers under 20 h. p. or over is not to exceed at any time during thirty years $20.00 per h.p. for twenty-four hours' service and to small consumers a stand by charge of $12.00 per horse power for connected load, plus a meter rate not to exceed 1 cent per h. p. hour. The rate out for 615 hours' service is $30.00 per h.p.

For lighting purposes a rate of 10 cents per kilowat hour with a discount of 25 per cent. for prompt payment will be charged. This works at 6 cents for all service stamped.

The company also agrees to put its wires on Kent street, from Lindsay street to the limits, and on William street, from Russell to Peel streets, underground.

What the Big Towers Mean

The residents of many places of this district, and in fact other districts throughout Ontario, are very curious to know the meaning of the large, wooden towers that are built on the top of hills at various distances apart. There are several of these towers within a radius of 20 or 25 miles of Peterborough, and they are odd looking structures, standing out on hills, in many instances quite miles from the nearest settler. These are in connection with the Geodetic Survey, and are for purposes of determining the exact position of places on the earth's surface. The ordinary method of taking a position on the earth's surface is the astronomical one, wherein the latitude and longitude of a given point are found by observations of the heavenly bodies. This method is open to error, owing to what is commonly known as the "deflection of the plumb line," or the deviation of the earth level from the horizontal plane. Part of Central Ontario was surveyed in this way, and, as shown on the base existing map, it is two miles out in longitude and over a mile in error in latitude. The geodetic survey method, and the one now in use, is by the measurement of a known base, such as [illegible] University in Montreal, which is the best located point in America. From this the whole country is triangulated, and accurate [illegible] of which a [illegible] are at

Bowmanville Gets Money

The town of Bowmanville has just come into a handsome legacy by the recent death of Mrs. James H. McGill of Washington, D.C. Mrs. McGill's death followed a surgical operation. It will be remembered that Mr. McGill, who died on May 29, 1905, left an estate valued at over $150,000 to his native town of Bowmanville, with the proviso that Mrs. McGill was to enjoy the revenues from his real estate during her natural life. All the current legal difficulties as to bequests to charitable objects will be borne by Mr. McGill's bequests become effective as soon as the necessary legal processes can be carried through.

The late Mr. McGill was a brother of Mr. Charles McGill, formerly General Manager of the Ontario Bank.

By John T. McIntyre. Copyrighted and All Rights Reserved

"I perhaps take more trouble than is customary in these cases," he said to Ashton-Kirk. "It is usual to hear statements, I believe, only when they are proffered as testimony at the inquest. But it seems to me that the office should be carried on in a more thorough way. Preparation, I think, is necessary to get at the facts."

Then he faced the woman who had taken a chair beside the desk.

"Your full name, please," said he.

"Honora Dwyer. I'm a widow with four children; I live at 71 Cormant street, an' me husban' has been dead these three years," declared she, in a breath.

Stillman smiled.

"You don't believe in keeping anything back, Mrs. Dwyer, I can see that," said he. "And a very good trait it is." He leaned back in his swivel chair and looked at her through the glasses. "You are the person who discovered the body of Mr. Hume, are you not?"

"Yes, sir, I were," replied Mrs. Dwyer; "and God spare me such another sight."

"Tell us about it," said the Coroner.

"I work as scrub woman for a good many in Christie Place an' the immejat neighbourhood," said Mrs. Dwyer, genteelly. "But I always gets to Mr. Hume's first."

"You are quite sure you found the street door locked?"

"Yes, sir."

"And you noticed nothing unusual about the place?"

"Only the open door to the store room, sir. Mr. Hume was always particular about closing up, sir. For a man who was in the habit of taking a sup of drink, sir, I'll say he was very particular."

"When you noticed the door being open you went in at once, I suppose?"

"No, sir; I did not. After I got me water, I set down on the top step to get me breath. When I saw the door standin' open, thinks I to meself, thinks I: 'Mr. Hume is up early this mornin'.' But everything was quiet as the grave," in a hushed dramatic tone. "Sorra the sound did I hear. So I gets up and goes in. And in the front room I sees him lyin'. Mr. Hume was never a handsome man, sir; and he'd gained nothing in looks by the end he'd met with. God save us, how I ever got out into the street, I'll never know."

She rocked to and fro and fanned herself with her apron.

"It must have been a very severe shock, Mrs. Dwyer," agreed the coroner. "Now," after a pause, "do you know anything—however slight, mind you—that would seem to point to who did this thing?"

Mrs. Dwyer shook her head.

"My acquaintance with Mr. Hume was a business one only, sir," she said. "I never set foot into his place further than the hall except on the days when I went to get me pay—and this morning, save us from harm!"

"You know nothing of his friends then—of his habits?"

"There is the Jew boy, outside there, that worked for him. He's a nice, good mannered little fella, and is the only person I ever see in the office when I went there, harrin' the boss himself. As for Mr. Hume's habits, I can say only that everybody knows. He were drunk when he engaged me, and he were drunk the last time I seen him alive."

"That will be all, Mrs. Dwyer," said Stillman. "Thank you. Curran, I'll see the young man next."

As Curran and Mrs. Dwyer went out the coroner turned to his two visitors.

"I am still assured that we have the motive for the crime in the attempt to steal the painting," he said. "But it will do no harm to get all the light we can upon every side of the matter. The smallest clue," importantly, "may prove of the utmost value at this inquest."

Ashton-Kirk smilingly nodded his entire assent to this. Then Curran showed in the clerk.

The young man still carried the thick volume and, when he sat down, laid it upon a corner of Stillman's desk. Its back was turned toward Ashton-Kirk and he noted that it was a work on anatomy, such as first-year medical students use.

"What is your name, please?" asked the coroner.

"Isidore Brolatsky," replied the young man.

"You are, or were, employed by Mr. Hume?"

"As a clerk, yes, sir. I've been with him for some years." Brolatsky spoke with scarcely a trace of accent. "He didn't pay much, but then there wasn't much to do, and I had plenty of time to study."

"Ah," said Stillman, encouragingly. "To study, eh?"

"Yes. I've taken up medicine. There's a college up town that has night classes. I have been attending the lectures there and reading during the day. There's a big chance for physicians who can speak Yiddish. Not only to make money, but to do good."

"I see". The coroner regarded him reflectively for a moment. "Now Mr. Brolatsky, having worked for Hume for some years, you must have picked up some details as to his business and himself. Suppose you tell us all you know about both."

The dark face of Brolatsky became thoughtful.

"Mr. Hume was a hard man to get along with," he said. "He seemed ready to quarrel at any time with anybody. I don't recall a customer ever coming into the store that he didn't have some kind of trouble with before they went out. But he had a great knowledge of the things he dealt in. People came from far and near to get his opinion on items in their collections. His fees," with appreciation "were large."

"But there is one thing that I noticed about him. While he knew all about objects of art, he did not seem to care for them. He had no love for his trade, no sympathy. I may say, for the collectors who came to him. I wouldn't be going far from the truth if I said that he thought them all fools for paying their money for such things. And I know that he mocked them."

"Humph!" Stillman looked at Ashton-Kirk, with surprise upon his face. "That seems odd. Men usually go into Hume's business through love of it." He turned once more to Brolatsky. "And he had no hobby of his own, no collection that he fancied more than another?"

Brolatsky nodded smilingly.

"Yes," he replied. "I was just coming to that. He did have a collection that he called his own. And he never sold an item from it as long as I was with him. Indeed, I think if anybody had offered to buy, he would have come to blows with him."

Ashton-Kirk bent forward. For the first time since entering the room, he spoke.

"And what was the nature of that collection?" he inquired eagerly.

"Portraits," answered Isidore Brolatsky. "Prints, lithographs, mezzotints, engravings, paintings, it made no difference. And all of the same person. He had hundreds, I guess, and every one of them was of General Wayne."

Ashton-Kirk leaned back in his chair with a faint breath of triumph.

"When a portrait of General Wayne was offered him," continued Brolatsky, "he never haggled over it. He paid the price asked and seemed quite delighted to get it. It was a standing joke in the trade that if you wanted to get even with Mr. Hume for driving a hard bargain with you, all you ha to do was to offer him a portrait of General Wayne. I never saw him refuse one. Even if he had a dozen of duplicates, which often happened, still he'd buy."

A look of great acuteness had settled upon the face of the young coroner.

"There is a painting at one side of the show room," said he. "It is under a large green curtain. Is that of General Wayne?"

"It is," replied the clerk. "And I believe that he valued it more than anything else that he owned."

Stillman laughed with pleasure.

"Now," said he to his visitors, "we are getting at it, indeed. Someone probably knew of the value he attached to this painting and planned to steal it, perhaps for a ransom. Hume has been suspected of doing this sort of thing himself before now. He was supposed to have engaged someone to do the actual work, I believe, as in the case of the Whistler portrait of the Duchess of Winterton. Suppose this someone," and Stillman rapped his knuckles upon the edge of the desk, excitedly, "took the notion to go into the picture stealing business of his own account. Hume himself with his much prized portrait of General Wayne was ready at hand—and so," with a sweeping gesture, "what has happened, has happened."

Pendleton, much impressed, looked at Ashton-Kirk. But the latter's thoughts seemed far away; his eyes were fixed upon the wall; his expression was of delighted anticipation.

Stillman also noticed this non-attention to his reasoning, and a little wrinkle of discontent appeared between his brows.

So he turned his gaze upon Brolatsky and spoke rather sharply.

"Now, as to Mr. Hume's intimates? What do you know of them?"

Isidore Brolatsky shifted in his chair; his long fingers began to drum upon his knees.

"I have known of the matter of the Whistler portrait," said he, "but I never knew anything more about it than what I read in the newspapers. It happened before my time."

"I'm not accusing you," said Stillman. "I'm asking you about Humes friends."

The clerk considered.

"There was no one that I ever saw or heard of that you could call his friend, exactly," said he at length. "He made game of people too much to have any I guess."

"Had he no associates—no one with whom he spent his time?"

Brolatsky shook his head.

"Perhaps so; but then I was only in Christie Place during business hours, I have heard that he frequently went out at night; but where I do not know."

"Was there no one who came to visit him while you were there during the day. No one whom he spoke of in an intimate way?"

Again the clerk shook his head. Stillman began to appear nonplussed. He looked at the other, pondering and frowning through his glasses.

"Who came most frequently to the store?" he inquired finally.

"Why, I think Antonio Spatola," said Brolatsky.

"Was he a customer?"

The clerk smiled.

"Oh, no. He's a street musician. You may have seen him often about the city. He plays the violin and carries some trained cockatoos upon a perch."

"What was the nature of his business at Hume's?"

"If there was anything that Mr. Hume liked better than strong drink' said the clerk, "it was music. Antonio Spatola would come and play to him for hours at a time."

"A lover of music who could stand the playing of a street musician for hours!" cried Stillman. "That's astonishing."

"But," protested Brolatsky, "Spatola is a splendid musician. He's studied his instrument under the greatest masters in Paris, Rome and other European cities. He has played in the finest orchestras. But he never could keep a position because of his temper. He's told me himself that when aroused he doesn't know what he is doing."

"I understand," said the coroner. "What sort of relations existed between Hume and Spatola outside the music? Were they friendly?"

"No, sir. I might say just the reverse. For hours, sometimes, Mr. Hume would lie back in his chair with his eyes closed, listening to the violin. Then, perhaps, he'd get up suddenly, throw Antonio a dollar or so and tell him to get out. Or maybe he'd begin to jeer at him. Antonio had an ambition to become a concert violinist. Ole Bull and Kubelik had made great successes, he said; and so, why not he?

"This was usually the point Mr. Hume would take up in mocking him. He'd call him a curb-stone fiddler, and say that he ought to be playing at barn dances and Italian christenings instead of aspiring to

RUSSELL and FORD

A GREAT PAIR TO FILL THE BILL

For the customer who wishes a large touring car I recommend the Russell, because it is exceptionally roomy, of very fine appearance, with large wheels and long wheel base. It also has fore doors. Mr. Russell being the first in Canada to introduce this feature. The Russell is also installed with a Knight motor. It is Canadian made and this feature should appeal to all loyal Canadians. This car is on exhibition at 369 George St.

For the customer who wishes a neat stylish moderate priced Touring Car, in which he can combine business with pleasure, I strongly recommend the Ford Model T, at $975 00, full equipment. This car is practically fully explained by the word "economy"—this on account of its small initial cost and the exceptionally small cost of maintenance, it being the lightest weight five passenger touring car manufactured. This light weight is secured by simplified construction, elimination of superfluous parts and the use of the highest grade of material. Quality not quantity is the true measure of strength. The Ford Car is an all Vanadium Steel Car. That is one reason it is not only the lightest car made but the strongest and will actually stand harder service. There has not been a pound of necessary weight sacrificed in the Ford, it weighs plenty for every need but there isn't any dead weight.

the platform. Spatola would get frantic with rage, and fairly scream his resentment at these times.

"Often Mr. Hume would have him bring his trained cockatoos. And while he was making them go through their tricks, Mr. Hume would call him a mountebank, a side show fakir and other things, and tell him he ought to stick to that as a business, for he could make a living at it, where he would starve as a violinist. I've often seen Antonio go out trembling and white at the lips with rage. Several times he's tried to injure Mr. Hume—once he took out a knife."

"Hah!" said the coroner.

"That was the time Mr. Hume called him 'Mad Anthony.' I also remember that Mr. Hume pulled aside the curtain and showed him the large painting of General Wayne, laughing and telling him that was another Mad Anthony. He was so successful that day in arousing Spatola, that always after that, when he was drunk, he'd call the Italian 'Mad Anthony' and it never failed to infuriate him.

"Do you know where this man Spatola lives?"

"In Christie Place, sir; just about half a dozen doors from the store. I believe he rents a garret there, or something."

Stillman seemed struck by this.

"In view of the fact that the building was entered by way of the scuttle," said he to Ashton-Kirk, "I consider that a most interesting piece of information."

"It may indeed prove so," was the non-committal reply.

Once more the discontented crease showed itself upon the coroner's forehead; and again as he turned to Brolatsky, his voice rose sharply.

"Next to Antonio Spatola, who came most to Hume's place while you were there?"

"The next most frequent caller," returned the clerk, "was Mr. Allan Morris."

Ashton-Kirk, glancing at Pendleton, saw him start.

"And who," queried the coroner, "is Mr. Allan Morris?"

"At first I took him to be a customer," replied Brolatsky. "And perhaps he was. He talked a great deal about engraved gems and would look at lists and works upon the subject. But somehow I got the notion that that was not just what he came for."

"What caused you to think that?" asked the coroner.

"His manner, partly, and then the fact that there seemed something between Mr. Hume and him—something that I never understood. Mr. Morris was another one that the boss used to make game of. Not so much as he would Spatola, but still a good bit. Mr. Morris always took it with a show of good temper; but underneath I could see that he, too, was sometimes furious."

"About what did Hume decide him?"

"That's what I never could quite make out. It always seemed as though it was something that Mr. Morris wanted. At first I got the notion that it was something that he wanted to buy and which Mr. Hume refused to sell; but later I changed my mind. There seemed to be more to it than appeared on the top. Both were very secretive about it."

"I understand." Stillman's face wore a puzzled expression; it was as though this latter development worried him. But in a few moments he went on: "Do you know where this man Morris is to be found?"

"Oh, yes. He's quite well known. Has an office in the Blake Building and is accredited back here as 1/6 heath, by the Hon. Bernard."

"You have visited Christie Place today?"

"Yes, sir."

"Did the police have you look about?"

"Yes, sir. And so far as I can see, nothing has been taken."

"The weapon that Hume was killed with, now. Do you know anything about it—did it belong to the store?"

"The hammer? No, sir."

"Are you sure of that?" earnestly.

"Positive. It was my duty to make a complete list of everything he had in stock. We had other sorts of mallets but no such thing as a hammer."

There were a few more questions, but as there drew out nothing of interest, Stillman signified to Brolatsky that the interview was at an end.

"Now, you will go with Mr. Curran to police headquarters on the next floor," said he, "and tell them what you have told me about this Antonio Spatola."

Then he opened the door and stepped out.

"Curran!" they heard him say, importantly. "I want you to—" then the door closed, cutting the sentence short.

Pendleton gazed fixedly at Ashton-Kirk.

"I say," said he. "I'm not up in this sort of thing at all. I've been putting two and two together, and it's led me into a deuce of a state."

Ashton-Kirk looked at him inquiringly; there was expectancy in the investigator's eyes, but he said nothing.

"Perhaps you'll wish that I'm all kinds of a fool," continued Pendleton, "and maybe I am. But here are the things that I'm trying to marshall in order. I'll take them just as they happened." He held up one hand and with the other began to check off the counts upon his fingers. "Yesterday you have a visit—a visit of a professional nature—from Edyth Vale. Last night she strangely disappears for a time. At a most unconventional hour this morning I find you at her door. Then

ASHTON KIRK, INVESTIGATOR

I learn that you are on your way to look into the details of a murder that you had just heard of—somehow. Now I hear that Allan Morris, Edyth's fiance, has been, in rather an odd way, upon familiar terms with the murdered man."

He paused as he checked this last count, still regarding his friend fixedly.

"I don't claim," he went on, after a moment, "that these things have anything to do with each other. But somehow, they've got together in my mind, and I can't—"

Here the door re-opened and Stillman entered, followed by the big German.

"Just take a chair, Mr. Berg," said the coroner, seating himself at the desk and adjusting his eyeglasses.

The German lowered his form into the chair indicated and folded his fat hands across his monstrous paunch.

"Your name in full—is what?" asked Stillman, with formality.

"Franz Berg. I sell me delicatessen at 472 Christie Place. I haf been there for fifteen years."

"You were acquainted with the murdered man?"

The delicatessen dealer unfolded his hands and waved them signifi-

buy. I do a good business, so I keep open."

"Then you were there until midnight last night?"

"Was there any movement of any sort about Hume's place? Did you see or hear anything?"

The great red face of Berg took on a solemn look.

"It is maybe not ride that I should say somethings," complained he. "But if the law will not excuse me, I will say it, if it makes some more trouble or not."

"It is vitally necessary," stated the young coroner, firmly, "that you tell me everything you know about this matter."

"Well," said the delicatessen dealer, reluctantly, "last night as I stood by my window looking outside on the street, I see me that Italian feller go by and turn in at the side door; a second later I hear him go up the steps to Hume's place."

"What Italian fellow do you refer to?"

"He lifs close by me, a few doors away. His name is Spatola, and he plays the violin the gurb-stones beside."

"What time was it that you saw him?"

"Maybe eleven o'clock. I am not sure. But it was just a little while before I got me the rush of customers from the theatres."

"Did you notice his manner? Was there anything unusual in his looks?"

"I had me only a glimbs of him. He looked around the same as ever. He was in a hurry, for it raised a little, and under his coat you he carried his fiddle."

"If it was under his coat, how do you know it was his fiddle?"

The German scratched his head in a reflective way.

"I don't know it," said he at last. "But he sometimes take his violin home inside, and I just put the notice that it was so. Yes."

"What did he come out?"

The man shook his head.

"I don't know," he said.

"Do you mean that you saw no one come out?"

"No; I did see someone come out. But first I see me someone else go in."

"Ah! And who was that?"

"I don't know his name; but I had seen him often before. He is a kind of swell feller. He had a cane and plenty of style."

"And later you saw someone come out. Now, your use of the word 'someone' leads me to think that you do not know whether it was Spatola or the stranger."

"I don'd," said Berg. "I was busy then. I just heard me someone rush down the stairs, making plendy noise, und I heard that drunken Hume lift up a window, stick out his head and call some names after him. My customers laugh und think it's a joke; but I am ashamed such a disgracefulness to have around my business yet."

"If Hume called after the person who left," said Stillman, acutely, to Ashton-Kirk, "that eliminates one of the callers. It proves that Hume was still alive after the man had gone."

"That is undoubtedly a fact," replied the investigator.

Stillman turned upon Berg with dignity.

"Surely you must have noticed the man if all that uproar attended his exit. You must have detected enough to mark a difference between an exceptionally well-dressed man and an Italian street musician."

Berg shook his head.

"It was about twelve o'clock in the nighttime, und my customers be-peens I had to pay some attention to," stated he.

The coroner was baffled by the man's shrewdness.

"Well," said he, resignedly, "What else did you see?"

Berg shook his head once more.

"Nothing else. Purty soon I close up and went home."

Then a flash of recollection came into his dull face. "As I went down the street I saw some lights in Hume's windows. One of them windows was open—maybe the one he stuck his head out of to call the man names—and I could hear him laughing like he was to do when he was trying to make a package of some purchase."

The coroner pondered. At length he said:

"This object that [illegible] under his coat, now. [illegible] a bagpipe?"

"No, no," said Berg with decision. "It was too big. It was bigger as a full size bagpipe already."

This opened the limit of Berg's knowledge of the night's happenings, and after questions and cross questions Stillman dismissed him. The door had hardly closed when the telegraph sounder began to click. Stillman, after a few words, the import of which was lost to Ashton-Kirk, turned to the receiver and listened to his visitors.

"I come," said he, with a smile of satisfaction, "and I've made the appointment for at a little. They talked to all circle of these people before I had them, and didn't seem to get enough to make a beginning. But just now," and the smile grew wider, "I've heard that Osborne is on his way to arrest Antonio Spatola."

TO CELEBRATE PEACE.

Meetings Are Held With a View to a Big Festival.

Toronto, Dec. 17.—With the aim of organizing a movement to celebrate "the centenary of the preservation of British North America to the British Crown," an event which it is hoped to have marked by the coming to Canada of King George, a meeting was held in the City Hall yesterday afternoon, with Rev. Dr. Carman presiding.

The outcome was the enlarging of the executive committee, at whose instance the primary step was taken.

Rev. Dr. Carman read letters sympathising with the movement from Justice Riddell, Bishop Sweeny, W. H. McNaught, M.P.P., Sir Henry Pellatt, Prof. Baker and others.

H. S. Neville, who acted as secretary, said the object was to promote a national and imperial celebration. The preservation of Canada to the British crown in 1813-14 was one of the most important events that ever occurred in the western hemisphere. Petitions should be immediately circulated to bring the matter before all legislatures, municipal bodies, historical associations, Canadian and Empire clubs and educational institutions, asking particularly that the King be invited to come in 1913, 1914 or 1915.

An organization meeting of the Hundred Years of Peace Society was also held yesterday in the Iroquois Hotel, Buffalo, N.Y., with a large representation from the municipalities along the frontier. It was decided to apply at once for incorporation under the laws of the State of New York.

Real Vanilla Once

Just flavor a pudding with Shirriff's—and you will have no more use for extracts that are "vanilla" in name only. You get the rich, full, fragrant savor of the real vanilla bean of Mexico in

Shirriff's
True Vanilla

It goes so much further! It lasts so much longer! It flavors dainties so much more temptingly! And the difference in cookery results is simply wondrous! Shirriff's is aged long enough to get ALL the bouquet of the vanilla bean into this matchless extract.

Caution: A smaller quantity required than of any other extract.

Other delicious Shirriff flavorings are Lemon, Almond, Vanilla, Rose, Pineapple, Strawberry and Maple Nuts.

A Madman's Manuscript
First Day
A Short Story.

March 8th.

They gave me pens and paper when I asked! Perhaps they thought I was about to write a confession. A confession when I am about to destroy. When I had promised—him. But of that no one knows. Only I. . . And he who has sworn to save me.

Yesterday I was brought into the Court for the first time. As I sat in the dock I looked round. Below me were bewigged barristers and reporters at newspapers. Facing me was a raised platform on which the desks and chairs of Judge and Sheriffs stood against a crimson background. The sword of state hung above the chair claimed by Civic dignity. I at first supposed the Judge would sit there. But he took the one to the right of it. Other people came in; curious faces, the faces of men and women, stared at me. The grey sky was not more chill of dreary than those indifferent eyes. My counsel sat below in the well of the Court. The soldiers and clerks also. I looked at them as one in a dream. Of course it was a dream. Had I not seen it all a hundred times and always he awoke me? Touched my arm; whispered in my ear, "You are safe."

He had not come into this Court. Not yet. As I waited there came a squad of three heavy knocks. Everyone rose. I also. A shambling figure, red-robed, winged, with head clanged behind, entered; paused about the narrow platform, took the chair beside the hanging sword of Justice.

We were the opposite one since then. Our eyes met in a deadly challenge. In his power lay a human life—mine. For these tawdry fools beyond I cared not a whit. They would be as sheep following a leader. They would obey what he say bade them obey.

Had I not seen it all, heard it all before?

My warders touched me. I had forgotten to seat myself. Now I did so. Papers and pencil were on the ledge beside me. I could write—make notes of the evidence, communicate with my counsel, as I pleased. But I was only looking for him—my friend—the man who had promised to save me. I could see him anywhere, among that crowd of faces. The dingy court house looked grey and very dreary. Through windows grimed with dust and fog I looked to where blue sky should be. Something caught my eye. Across a skylight and beyond the gaoly and unsightly in their vividness a basket filled with broken dark debris. They were pulling down an old building opposite the prison, and all day long that basket passed to and fro, to and fro, swung like a pendulum with a clumsy monotony that was only also terribly like a voice below me. The voice of the prosecuting counsel. He was opening the case for the Crown. How smoothly and glibly he told out his facts. How neatly he arranged them with, in all the practised manner of an orator. Once he looked at me. His cold grey eyes were flushed with self-satisfied indignation. He held up to public scorn. Shuffling the accusation aside like. "Prisoner! Have you anything to say?" Both my warders. Both saw I. I could only rise mechanically. For I was sick. It had been unexpected and to meet looks would be hard with bright eyes.

The Court rose. My warders hurried me away. Though life and death and a human soul hung in the balance, they were not kept long in the cells.

They came to me. I was in the dock. The Court was full. Every face was a blur. Only I knew that I was to be tried for my life. Only I knew that I was innocent. Only I knew that I was to be condemned. Only I knew that I was to be saved. Only I knew that I was to be betrayed.

The Court rose. It is over for to-day.

They took me to the prison van. Handcuffed and guarded I sat there, and we rolled through the busy streets, catching glimpses of the life and light through the narrow grating of the van. . . .

"Prisoner at the bar," said one of my warders. I looked at him. At his stupid red face, his neat uniform, his air of official police. I should like to walk with him—my friend—the man who had promised to save me. I could see him anywhere, among that crowd of faces. The dingy court house looked grey and very dreary. Through windows grimed with dust and fog I looked to where blue sky should be. Something caught my eye. Across a skylight and beyond the gaoly and unsightly in their vividness a basket filled with broken dark debris. MEN BURIED UNDER TONS OF ROCK

Fatal Accident in Quarries—Men Were Working on Face of a Cliff When It Caved In and They Were Crushed to Death.

SOME ESCAPED

Special to The Examiner.

HILLSBORO, N.B., DEC. 16.—Buried beneath three or four hundred tons of rock and their lives instantly snuffed out was the terrible fate that befell three workmen in the Albert Manufacturing Company's quarries at Hillsboro', Albert county, about 3 o'clock this afternoon, while several others had miraculous escapes.

Dead and Injured.

The dead are: Fred Nelson, aged 40; Edward Collett, aged 45, and Theophilus Allain, aged 21.

Octav Duplissey was severely injured.

The crew were working on the face and at the foot of the forty-foot embankment two men were drilling into the face of the quarry, with a view of blasting the top off, when suddenly the mountain of rock gave way and fell, burying three men. Fred Nelson and Ernest Allain were about half way up the face of the embankment, drilling for the blast, James Livingstone, the foreman, being with them. Below at the foot of the embankment were Edward Collett, Theophilus Allain and Octav Duplissey, who were loading plaster rock on a cart.

Saved Life by Jumping.

As the large body of rock above Nelson and Allain gave way it carried both down to death, but an other man who had a moment's warning jumped aside and saved his life by a hair's breadth. James Livingstone, the foreman, who was superintending the drilling close at hand, also caught a glimpse of the falling rock and stepped aside and miraculously escaped death.

Seven Cart Load Buried.

Those below, however, had little or no warning, and hundreds of tons fell upon them. The horse and cart and all were completely buried except Octav Duplissey, who was pinned down, but in some miraculous way, escaped death.

Workmen quickly began the work of moving the rock from Nelson, Collett and Allain, but it was found that life was extinct. The bodies were horribly mangled and crushed almost out of human resemblance.

The fall of rock was due to a crevice in the embankment, which ran from the top to the bottom, but was hidden from view, being about six or eight feet back from the surface. One of the victims, Fred Nelson, belongs to Albert Mines, and is survived by a wife and two children. The other victims, Edward Collett and Allain, belong to Kent County, near Buctouche, where their families live. Collett leaves a wife and eight children. Allain, who was twenty-one years old, was unmarried.

BRONCHITIS

To Whom It May Concern

Bluevale, Ont., May 4, 1910. "I was sick for two years with chronic bronchitis and a consequent run-down condition. I received no benefit from doctors or from a trip which I took for my health and I had to give up work. Vinol was recommended and from the second bottle I commenced to improve — I gained in weight and strength, my bronchial trouble disappeared, and I am at work again. I want to recommend Vinol to anyone who is in need of such a medicine." Thomas Higgins. (We guarantee this testimonial to be genuine.)

It is the combined action of the curative elements of the cods' livers aided by the blood making and strength creating properties of iodide iron contained in Vinol which makes it so successful in curing bronchitis.

Vinol is a constitutional remedy for chronic coughs, colds, bronchitis and all forms of throat trouble, and a positive [illegible] drugs.

Vinol [illegible] all or drugs and in fact [illegible] enough mixtures, [illegible] the cause. Try it. If you [illegible] to bring you, and will return your money. Nathan Hall and Kelly, Dundas street, Ashburn's drug store, Gerrie and Hannon [illegible].

OPENING SERVICES AT NEW KNOX CHURCH TO CONTINUE TO-MORROW

The opening services of Knox church will be continued to-morrow and the large number who failed to gain admission to the church, will yet have an opportunity of participating in the opening services.

A service for men will be held at 9.30 a.m. in the church, to be addressed by the Rev. J. D. Morrow, of Dale Presbyterian church, Toronto. Mr. Morrow is most favourably known in Peterborough as a speaker. He has been in close contact with men all through his career, both as an athlete who has never known defeat and as preacher who has had a most successful ministry in reaching men. An orchestra will assist in the music at this service.

At 11 a.m., Rev. Prof. Law will conduct the morning service. Prof. Law was noted as an author and preacher in Scotland. He was called about a year ago to Knox College, Toronto, to succeed Prof. Kennedy. He has created a most favourable impression in the pulpits of Canada, and as this is his first visit to Peterboorugh, many will be anxious to hear him and welcome him. Old St. Andrew's church, Toronto, was so impressed with him that they endeavoured to persuade him to leave Knox College and become their pastor, but he declined. Prof. Law will also conduct the service in the evening.

A special service will be held at 3 p.m. in the church when Rev. J. D. Morrow will give an address to the Sabbath school and friends. Special offerings will be received during the day and the offering at this service will be used to pay for the pulpit chairs, the Sabbath schools gift to the church. The scholars have been saving their offerings in blue boxes that will be returned to-morrow afternoon. It is expected that the Rev. J. D. Morrow will sing at the evening service. Special music will be given by the scholars in the afternoon in which the primary class will take part.

JUDGMENT WAS GIVEN FOR PLAINTIFF FOR THE FULL AMOUNT AND COSTS

In the Case of Mrs. Agnes A. Kline versus F. E. Kline Before His Honour Judge Huycke in the County Court—Mrs. Mary A. Kline Succeeds in Counter-claim Against Plaintiff.

The case of Mrs. Agnes Kline, of Lakefield, versus J. E. Kline and his wife, Mary Kline, also of Lakefield, which was heard before His Honour Judge Huycke in the County Court, was concluded yesterday afternoon when His Honour gave judgment in favour of the plaintiff. This was an action brought by the plaintiff, Agnes Kline, against her brother-in-law, J. E. Kline and his wife Mary Kline as surety for her husband on certain promissory notes, to recover $654, the amount of promissory notes representing the plaintiff's share in the business of which she was formerly a partner with J. E. Kline. Judgment for the full amount of claim with costs was given for the plaintiff, but the action against Mary A. Kline as surety on the above notes was dismissed with costs, and she succeeded upon her counter claim to have her mortgage and notes which she executed in favour of Mrs. Agnes Kline, delivered up to be cancelled and her costs and solicitors' costs are to be paid by the plaintiff Agnes Kline.

Judge Huycke decided this case upon the famous case of Stewart and the Bank of Montreal, which has been lately before the Privy Council, in which a married woman was held not to be liable for guarantees she gave upon her separate estate while she was under the influence of her husband. Mr. R. Ruddy, K.C., of Ruddy and Burnham, appeared for the plaintiff, Mr. Langley, of Lakefield, for the defendant, J. E. Kline and Mr. G. N. Gordon, of O'Connell and Gordon for the defendant, Mrs. Mary A. Kline.

Biggest Market Of Season This Morning And Prices Remain At A High Level

"Keep off my toes," was a common expression on the market this morning. The inside market was so crowded that the people found it almost impossible to move around. It was, indeed, a genuine Christmas market and genuine Christmas prices were asked for as the following list will show:

Beef (by the quarter) 8c. and 9c.
Pork (by the quarter) 12c. and 13c.
Brown leghorns (hen and cock alive) 75c. each.
Lamb (per quarter) 12c. and 13c.
Turkeys—15c. per lb.
Hay—$13 per ton.
Baled hay—$10.00.
Potatoes—60c. per bag.
Live geese—$2.00 each.
Dressed geese—$2.00 each.
Apples (Northern Spies) $6 a bbl.
Eggs—40c. per doz.
Butter—34c.
Chickens—$1.00 per pair.
Live hogs—$8.50.
Dressed hogs—$9.50.
Farmers' hides—7c.
Butchers' hides—8c.

The splendid market to-day was an evidence of the importance of this city as the centre of a thriving agricultural district. A sample of everything produced on the farm, from a load of hay to a hen's egg, was for sale on the market to-day. The supply of fowl of all kinds was great, but everything was at the outside figure. The common expression from the buyers was, "The geese are flying high to-day."

"I will give you $1.50 for that goose," said an old lady to a man who had asked $2.00. "You need not touch it at that," responded the other. "No, not you'll not touch $2.00 was the quick reply of the witty old lady, and she got the goose.

The raise in prices since last Saturday on some of the stock is as follows: Apples $1.00 per bbl., geese 75c. Eggs 5c. per doz., chickens 75c. per pair.

The following is a list of the most [illegible] P. Kennedy sold on the Toronto [illegible] this week:

MEAKINS GOES TO GAOL FOR SEVEN DAYS

His Honour Proposed to Let Youth Out the Day Before Christmas—Robt. Keagan Allowed to go on Suspended Sentence.

CHARGED WITH THEFT

Robert Keagan and Albert Meakins appeared before His Honour Judge Huycke at the County Court yesterday afternoon on a charge of stealing seven bottles of gin from the wholesale store of Alex. Elliott. Both pleaded not guilty, being represented by Mr. G. N. Gordon of O'Connell and Gordon. The prosecution was conducted by Crown Attorney R. E. Wood. Considerable evidence was taken, several witnesses being called. However, it was not sufficient to prove the prisoners' innocence and His Honour convicted the two on the charge of theft preferred against them. In the case of Keagan he was allowed to go on suspended sentence and in Meakins' case, on account of his youth, he was only sentenced to seven days in the county jail. His Honour promising to allow him out the day before Christmas.

GETS A YEAR FOR BIGAMY

North Hastings Woman Who Married Too Often Goes to Gaol

Special wire to The Examiner:

BELLEVILLE, ONT., DEC. 17.—Mrs. Wm. Rogers, aged 50, was sent to the Mercer Reformatory for a year for bigamy, having represented to Edward Ash, 30 years of age, that she was a widow, when her husband was living. Ash, who married her, was allowed to go. This is part of the clean-up of terrible moral conditions in the north of Hastings county.

Only Eight Pollings Are to be Taken To-day and on Monday—Majority May be 126—Moral Effect of Victory is Tremendous.

THE STANDING TO-DAY

Examiner Special.

LONDON, ENG., DEC. 17.—With only eight pollings to be taken to-day and on Monday, the prospects are that the government majority in the new Commons will be for all working purposes identical with the last. It may be the instead of 126, but the increase won't help much, in itself, although the moral effect of the third successive victory will be tremendous. Following are the figures at four o'clock this afternoon:

Unionists 270.
Liberals 247.
Nationalists 72.
Independent Nationalists 10.
Labourites 40.
Total coalition 389.

The returns to-day of yesterday's polling indicate a Liberal gain in Banbury, Oxfordshire, and a Unionist gain in Montgomery district.

PRESENTATION TO MR. AND MRS. SHEPARD BY BELMONTS

Members of Club Said Farewell at Enjoyable Function at Coleman's Grill Room Last Night—Speeches and Music Made the Occasion a Delightful One.

Coleman's new grill room was the scene of an interesting and enjoyable function last night when the members of the Belmont Club Minstrel Co. and the committee in charge gathered round the festive board to say farewell to Holly and Mrs. Shepard, to whose instructions and training the great success of the production is due. Mr. and Mrs. Shepard, who leave to-day for their home in Bay City, Mich., have been most popular with the Belmonts, who felt that they could not allow them to take their departure without indicating the regard in which they are held by the members of the local club. The affair which took the form of an impromptu banquet, was an enjoyable windup to the minstrel performance. A dainty supper, served by Messrs. Coleman Bros. was done ample justice to and then followed a delightful programme of speeches and music, Mr. W. McIlroy making a very efficient chairman.

In opening the second part, Mr. McIlroy paid a warm tribute to Mr. and Mrs. Shepard and expressed the appreciation of the members of the company for the manner in which they had rehearsed and trained the Belmonts. Mr. Shepard was the best minstrel-making man he had ever had any experience with, and he had taken part in a good many minstrel performances too, and he had never heard anyone who could play "rag-time" like Mrs. Shepard. The members felt that they should show their appreciation in a practical manner.

At this stage Mr. Ed. Carr presented Mrs. Shepard with a sweater-coat in the Belmont colours and a Belmont pennant and Mr. Shepard with a handsome wallet.

Mr. and Mrs. Shepard replied suitably. Mr. Shepard stated that he had enjoyed every minute of his stay in Peterborough, and thanked the boys for the treatment he and Mrs. Shepard had received.

Mr. J. J. Turner, Sr., who was greeted with a chorus of "What's the Matter With Father?" in a neat speech expressed his enjoyment of the performances of the Belmont Minstrels and congratulated Mr. and Mrs. Shepard upon the results they had accomplished. He would always be ready to do everything in his power for the Belmonts.

Speeches were also made by Messrs. Nat Greenhalgh, Paul Trehilcock, Ed. Carr, Dr. Frederick, W. S. Davidson the latter replying for the non-members of the Belmonts, Miss King, Miss Sproule, Messrs. McIlroy, Skitch and himself, and by the press representatives present.

Chairman McIlroy neatly expressed his appreciation of the work of the ladies of the company. It was an innovation in minstrelsy and had been greatly enjoyed by everyone who had seen the performances.

The following musical programme was interwoven among the oratory:

Song, "Garden of Roses," Mr. W. McIlroy.
Song, "Come After Breakfast," Mr. W. S. Davidson.
Duet, "Tip-e-rance," Messrs. Holly Shepard and Geo. Clarke.
Song, "No-body," Mr. W. S. Davidson.
Song, "Any Rags" Mr. Shepard.
Song, "My Sparkling Moselle," Mr. J. J. Turner, sr.
Song, "That Loving, Loving Rag," Mr. Geo. Clarke.
Song, "Baboon Bungalow," Mr. Geo. Buchanan.
Song, "Think of the Girl Down Home," Mr. Stan. Ecclestone.
Stump speech, "Quaker Oats," Mr. W. S. Davidson.
Piano Solo, "Temptation Rag" Mrs. Shepard
Selection—The Belmont Mandolin Club.
Song, "Baby Doll," Miss Josephine Sproule.
Song, "Honey I will Long for You," Mr. Nat Greenhalgh.
Song, "Rocked in the Cradle of the Deep," Mr. Fred Skitch.
Song, "Pearls," Mr. R. Pollard.
Song, Mr. Geo. Wesley.
Song, "Chicken on the Brain," Mr. Paul Trehilcock.
Song, Mr. Thomas.
Song, "It's Great to Be a Soldier," Mr. McIlroy.

The very enjoyable event was brought to a close with the singing of the national anthem and "Auld Lang Syne."

Song Service At The Crystal

The song service at the Crystal Theatre will be of a specially interesting character to-morrow night. There will be the usual bright chorus singing, led by the Y.M.C.A. Harmony Club and the Y.M.C.A. quartette will sing "Remember Me" and there will also be a male solo. The biggest crowd of the season attended the meeting last Sunday night, but there is still room for more. Those who come regularly are the most interested and many of them would not miss the service for a good deal. If you come once you will want to come again. Come and hear the chorus sing, "Stand up, Stand Up For Jesus" and get an uplift. The meeting will commence at 8.30.

"Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unparalleled"

SATURDAY, DEC. 17, 1910

BUY EARLY.

It may not do much good, but it seems to be the proper thing to invite our citizens to do their Christmas shopping early. Thousands of persons, with plenty of leisure, put off their Christmas buying till Christmas Eve. They are thus in their own way, and in the way of everybody else. They, themselves, cannot select satisfactorily; they cannot do justice to themselves and, above all, they needlessly harrass over-worked salesmen and saleslgirls. Do your Christmas buying early and, above all, do it in Peterborough. Don't rush off to the city to spend money, made in Peterborough, that should be spent in Peterborough. Your fellow citizens helped you to make the money and to spend it out of town is unfair—it it doesn't spell meanness, meanness as bad as the man who hid his wife's glasses so that she couldn't read the Christmas advertisements in the papers.

SEASONS AND WHEAT CROPS.

Some persons seem inclined to think that the slightly short harvest of last year would create a prejudice against the Canadian west and thus retard settlement. But one swallow does not make a summer, nor one crop shortage indicate any lack of adaptability to grain growing a rainy country. Last year throughout the world there was a shot wheap crop as compared with 1909. In twenty two countries, whose crop returns are tabulated in a bulletin of the Agricultural Department, Ottawa, it is shown that the total wheat production of these countries was individually and generally less in 1910 than the previous year. Last year's Canadian wheat crop is placed at 166,740,000 bushels as against 123,760,000 bushels in 1910. The rate of decrease of the Canadian crop was 25.8 per cent., the lowest in the list of twenty-two countries, except Hungary, whose rate of decrease was one-tenth of one per cent. less. The rate of decrease of some countries was twice as great, being 52.2 per cent. in the case of France, whose wheat crop is 187 million bushels, and in that of Italy, the percentage of decrease was 197.6 per cent., with a total crop of 195 millions. The increase in acreage under wheat, in Canada, of 1910 over 1909, was a million and a half acres. Assuming that a corresponding increase in acreage will be under crop next year and, given a good season, like that of 1909, the production of north-west wheat should reach at least double the figures of last year—about 240 million bushels.

"ACTION NEEDED."

Our evening contemporary suggests that the Dominion government "should be urged to complete the Trent canal at once." This is certainly a large contract, a good deal like "urging" a score of generations to build Rome in a day. Our impatient contemporary should remember that the government, by the way a Conservative government, that preceded the present government, spent eighteen years in contributing the locks at Burleigh to the completion "at once" of the Trent Canal. The present government has done fairly well by the Trent Canal and has furnished very tangible evidence of its earnestness in promoting the work of Trent Canal construction, by placing in this year's estimates the considerable sum of two and a half million dollars—considerably more than the Conservative government spent upon the work in the long course of twenty-five years. It is asked by the editorial engineering authority, quoted, why work is not begun at the northern end of the canal. This seems reasonable, but it also seems to a layman that there is not much difference in result between finishing one end and concentrating energy upon the other, and dividing appropriation and work between two ends at the same time. Through navigation would be as soon available by one way as the other. The provision of transportation makes such exacting demands upon the financial resources of Canada, that the giving of an undue share of expenditure to any one work would not be good policy. Listen to the concluding sentence of our contemporary's complaint:

"Put off from year to year"—with a two and a half million appropriation this year and money spent every year, almost, on Trent Canal construction, since the present government came into power.

AFTER-DINNER ORATORY.

The after-dinner speech of President Falconer before the Canadian Club on Thursday night occupied an hour. But he was the only speaker, and he was well worth hearing. He came purposely to be the only speaker and to be heard. His case is much different from the man, at the ordinary banquet, when the after-dinner speakers are by the dozen, who monopolizes the time to a tedious length, and dooms his hearers to yawning boredom, and the succeeding speakers to oratorical short commons. Such a speaker shows a decided lack of the spirit of fair play, and shows enough vanity and pleasure at hearing his own voice to stock a whole family of the good old-fashioned size. All after-dinner speeches, unless in the case of a specially invited speaker should be short and to the point; nothing else is fair play to others associated with the toast list, and to the hearers. Politeness compels, some times, enforced attention to prosy speakers, but good judgment and politeness would counsel the speaker to brevity, make him quick to note when he has reached the limit. This comment, based on thirty years' observation, is entirely impersonal and general, and does not apply to anybody to whom it does not apply. The idea of a banquet and the attendant speech-making is to promote sociability and enjoyment. It ceases to meet these purposes when, by prosy or unseasonably long speeches, it is protracted into the "wee sma' hoors."

THE CANADIAN CLUB.

Club law is repulsive to independent Canadianism; club life has many features tending to subvert the grandeur of home life, but the Canadian Club idea is altogether lovely and worthy. No better illustration of the broadening, deepening, and elevating influence of the Canadian Club is possible than that furnished by the every-way admirable, address of President Falconer to the delighted and edified members of the Peterborough Canadian Club. Replete with real eloquence, the manner of speech-making that reaches at once the intellect and the emotions; patriotic, wholesomely monitory and courageously self-examining, stimulating reflection and high ideals, President Falconer, in his address, realized the aim of the Canadian Club, the cult of the "gnothi seauton" of the Greek philosopher—to know ourselves, to know our country and our duty in respect of the work of making the most of it in a material, moral and intellectual sense. The Canadian Club serves a double end, the end thus generally suggested, and the cultivation of a more unified and homogenous citizenship, through the cultivation of the social wants and impulses of our nature. At stated periods the members gather round the board of feasting, and, by the satisfaction of the animal and social longings of our nature, prepare themselves for the feast of reason implied in the studied oratory of the prominent Canadians that grace their gatherings. From time to time the local club has been addressed by some of the most prominent men of mind of the Dominion, men who think and have the happy knack of pleasantly and clearly imparting their luminous thoughts—in relation to a great subject—the common possession of their hearers. The subjects of these addresses are of wide range, covering every field of interest in regard to really Canadian subjects, dealing with the resources, possibilities and future of the Dominion, and the proper perspective of regard, in relation to individual and associated duty, its citizens should have. While the Canadian Club is not partisan, it is political in the highest sense. It aims, by the means mentioned, to make Canadians good citizens, with the highest ideals and ambitions, and to foster a noble pride in our heritage in our people, and through worthy citizenship, in ourselves.

With President Falconer's noble address still ringing in our ears, and the names of Rev. Dr. Symonds, and Hon. Clifford Sifton, Chairman of the Conservation Commission, on its oratorical agenda, the local Canadian Club need make no apologies for existing.

A GREAT TERCENTENARY.

The Upper Canada Bible Society has passed the following resolution in relation to the celebration of the three hundredth anniversary of the publication—in 1611—of the English version, commonly called the King James version, of the Bible. The resolution to this end was passed on Jan. 24th, 1910, and is as follows:

Resolved,—that this meeting put on record its devout gratitude to Almighty God for the priceless blessing that the English-speaking world has for so many centuries enjoyed in the possession of the Scriptures in the English tongue. In doing this at the present juncture, we desire more especially to express our unfeigned thanks for the noble English version published in the year A.D. 1611, and continuing in general use amongst us to this day. We recognize in this version a great English classic, and a translation of the Scriptures that stands amongst the greatest ever made. We remember the remarkable influence it has exerted on the English language and on English literature. We remember the unique bond it has proved to be in uniting English-speaking peoples in all quarters of the globe; and above all, we remember, with tender gratitude, the fact that it has been for centuries the Bible of our fathers, to whom through it God has revealed Himself; and that it has been to ourselves a source of light and support, of salvation and guidance, of counsel and consolation. We remember also that the possession of this version has for over a century been to the English-speaking world a constant and powerful argument for the translation of the Scriptures into the mother tongue of every nation and every tribe on the face of the globe. Resolved, also, in view of all these blessings that this meeting desires to express its

WESTERN JOURNALISTIC VIEW OF MARITIME PROVINCES' DEMAND

(Manitoba Free Press.)

With persistency worthy of a better cause the Premiers of the three Maritime Provinces continue to keep before public attention the demand that the British North American Act be amended so as to secure hereafter to every vote cast in those Provinces a greater power in Dominion elections than a vote cast anywhere in the Dominion outside those Provinces. The matter was before the Dominion House last session, when the Dominion Government took the only possible position, that nothing could be done except by joint agreement of all the Provinces.

The recent conferences at Ottawa of representatives of the Provinces, which were all represented except Alberta, and British Columbia, was held at the insistence of the Maritime Premiers, in the hope apparently of obtaining something in the way of the desired agreement on which to go to Parliament again with their demand. Between the lines of the colourless statement given out by Sir James Whitney, the Premier of Ontario, at the close of that conference, it is easy to read that the matter has been politely adjourned to the Greek Kalends. It is true that the announcement is made that the members of the Dominion House representing Maritime constituencies will, without distinction of party, present again at the present session their resolution in favour of the desired amendment to the British North American Act. That is a demonstration which, needless to say, they find themselves in duty bound to make. It is equally needless to say that nothing can come of it.

The surprising thing is that anybody in the Maritime Provinces should, if anybody does, imagine that the people of the other Provinces would think for a moment of acceding to such a preposterously unjustifiable demand. The representation in the Dominion House is apportioned under the British North America Act, in a perfectly equitable manner, so far as a decennial redistribution makes that possible after each census, the population of Quebec is divided by sixty-five, that being the fixed number of Quebec representatives. The resulting quotient constitutes the unit of representation for the whole Dominion, and each of the Provinces is divided up into Dominion constituencies on that basis, the constituencies standing until the next redistribution after the next decennial Dominion census.

It is plain that in the redistribution to follow the taking of next year's census, the Maritime Provinces will be entitled to four or five less members, all told, than they have at present. Hence this persistency in urging the demand that their representation be not decreased, but that they be given more members than their population entitles them to—a demand doubly unjust to these Western Provinces, which, owing to their much more rapid growth in population than the rest of the Dominion, are in a chronic condition of under-representation. It is easy to understand that those ancient and historic Provinces down by the sea find it a sore blow to their dignity that their representation in Parliament should be reduced. But the principle of representation by population cannot be tampered with, either for a consideration of mere sentiment, or for any other consideration.

There would be just as much reason in giving the city of Quebec, or the city of Kingston, greater representation in Parliament relatively than the city of Toronto, because they are older and more historic places, famous in Canadian history. Or, to give another example, it would be as reasonable to think of giving the town of Selkirk a member in Parliament all to itself, in memory of Lord Selkirk. One man, one vote, is the principle which is at the basis of our system of representative government; and the idea that the votes shall not all be equal, but that those cast in the Maritime provinces shall avail more than those cast elsewhere in Canada, is not an idea to be seriously entertained.

No one can foretell the development of this country. It is quite conceivable than in a few score years the population of the West may outnumber that of the Maritime provinces vastly. If—which is not conceivable—the Maritime representation were to be constitutionally fixed at the present number, the people down by the sea would be, to the extent of their excessive power in parliament, overlords of the people of the West. All that the Maritime Canadians have the right to ask is that if y shall be equitably represented in Parliament, according to their numbers. The existing arrangement secures them that.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

John Bull has seen a good deal of Toryism in his day, but he never before saw the leader of a Tory party, in order to gain office, or to keep office, resort to such a radical device to catch votes as Mr. Balfour's tariff reform referendum — actually taking the proletariat into account—the common people.

Black as is the crime of the farmers' delegation, in Conservative eyes, in demanding reciprocity in agricultural products and implements, they stopped short of joining the "Nationalists" in condemning the Canadian navy and effectively advocating the severance of British connection. The farmers are patriotic and loyal. They don't want the British preference, which the Conservative leaders damn with fruit applause, to be destroyed. They even want it practically doubled.

Conservative journals and politicians are gloating over the big farmers' deputation because they think the demands of the farmers will embarrass the government. That's it—anything to beat Laurier. Does not the Conservative party realize that it will have to meet, and deal, in its own way, with the same demands. Mr. Borden warmed the "Nationalist" viper in his bosom—by not denouncing it at least—forgetting that in using it to embarrass the government, he and his own party, if they are true to British connection and Canadian integrity, would have to fight it to the death. It's nice to be in office, but too much sacrifice can be made to gain that end.

AN OUT OF DATE SYSTEM.

(Brockville Times.)

The Peterborough Examiner draws the attention of its Board of Trade to the subject of municipal government by commission instead of the present system in vogue throughout Ontario of municipal administration by volunteer town councillors. It points out that the city of Guelph is joining hands with St. Catharines in grappling with the reform in a practical manner. The Guelph Board of Trade will recommend to the City Council that the entire affairs of the fire department be placed in the hands of either an existing commission or a commission to be formed as soon as permission can be obtained from the Legislature making such a step possible, and that legislation to this effect, if necessary, should be applied for without delay by the City Council. Furthermore, they recommend the Council asking the Legislature for powers to place any department or departments of the city's affairs, excepting legislation, appropriation and taxation, under either existing commissions or new commissions to be formed. The Board will also petition the Legislature through the local member, Mr. J. R. Howitt, to make such amendments to the municipal act as will make it possible for any municipality of not less than 10,000 people to adopt civic government by commission on the lines of the laws at present in force in the State of Iowa.

The Peterborough Examiner declares that "the present system is a failure, not so much from the incapacity of members, but because of the system which makes yearly changes of councils, to an extent to deprive us of any guarantee that the policy adopted — if such a miracle should happen—one year would be acted upon the next."

With which sentiment we are in entire accord, and we do not think that there will be many dissenting voices in Ontario.

At present municipal government depends upon the services of volunteer councillors who get no remuneration for their services. The councillor who does his duty must necessarily devote a great deal of time to town affairs and as well as much thought. Moreover he finds himself confronted with the fact that he has but a small amount of money at his disposal and that with that limited amount of money he is expected to do great things for the town. If he does not produce substantial results he is blamed as being incompetent. If he advocates a raise in taxation he is denounced as extravagant. It is no wonder that competent town councillors are hard to find and that they are induced to take office with the greatest reluctance.

The truth is that the present inefficient system is a relic of pioneer days. It is about fifty years behind the times. It belongs to the tallow candle and stage coach days, and it is high time to adopt some system which will be in harmony with electric lighting and rapid transit.

THIRD FLOOR

The Touch Master

You cannot tell off-hand what it is that imparts to dress that much desired element called style. You recognize it when you see it and you often wonder why it is that a garment made by our tailor has so much more snap and expression about it, than the same style of garment made by another tailor. It isn't the quality of the goods. It isn't the more fashioning the outlines of a figure on a fashion plate. Tailoring is something more than that, and the true tailor, like the true musician, realizes that it is his master touch that produces the harmony that inspires admiration. :: ::

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

As we were passing through a narrow passageway leading toward the trains in a certain big depot the other night three men bore down upon us, running as if for dear life, as they tornadoed past, knocked my companion's umbrella from his hand.

He picked it up, brushed it off, opened his mouth as if to speak, and then closed it again, without speaking.

I tried to relieve his feelings by railing against the abominable rudeness and carelessness of the feelings of others that some people show, but, to my surprise, he didn't seem to feel grateful.

"What's the matter," I queried, "why don't you say something?"

"Well, you know," he answered, "I was going to say something quite vigorous, and then I stopped to think first if I might not have done the something in their places. You see it's eleven o'clock, and that was their last train. If they'd missed it they'd have had to stay here all night or take a two-hour trip on the electrics. I suppose I might have been a little bit careless myself if I'd had their reasons for hurrying.

"I try to make it a plan never to let myself get angry at anyone until I've put myself in the other fellow's place and been able to say, "I know I wouldn't have done it under those circumstances.

How's that for a plan? Whenever a wave of indignation or resentment or displeasure against anyone sweeps over you, try to force it back until you have "put yourself in his place."

I think it is a very good plan.

I have tried it several times, and like my companion of the other night, I can't give myself the right to be angry very often.

I tried it the other day in a lunch room.

I ordered some salad. It arrived without bread and butter. The waitress, having deposited it, scooted away, and apparently did not contemplate returning. After waiting several minutes, I inquired mildly of a waitress who strayed near my table if they didn't serve bread and butter with salad there. "She's getting it for you just as fast as she can," she snapped.

I had inquired mildly and didn't think I deserved any such reply, so my first impulse was to be vexed with the waitress for being a disagreeable old thing. And then I made myself stop and think. "Suppose I'd worked hard all day, and was tired, and suppose I heard some one casting what I considered an aspersion upon a sister waitress, who also had worked hard, wasn't it just possible that I might have resented it in a similar manner?"

And I felt so very uncertain of the answer that I had to make myself swallow my indignation post haste.

A most interesting and eye-opening plan, truly? Won't you try it the next time you are inclined to feel indignant or resentful against or superior to anybody?

TERCENTENARY OF THE UPPER CANADA BIBLE SOCIETY TO BE OBSERVED FEB. 12th

That Date Will be Set Aside as Bible Sunday—Boxing Game Week is Proposed to Have a "Mass Meeting"

DETAILS EXPLAINED

The following letter has been sent to every Board in the Upper Canada Bible Society:

My Dear Sir,—We have been instructed by the Board of our Auxiliary to write you and call your attention to the Tercentenary celebration referred to in the accompanying resolution, and to ask if your branch could arrange for a suitable celebration in your community. We feel that this would be a great help to the work of the Bible society, and also to the cause of Christ in general. We have so much reason for gratitude in the possession of the English Bible, that great good would surely follow from meeting together to express that gratitude in a fitting way.

We venture to suggest that you begin at once to plan, and that you first secure the co-operation of those men who are in a position to give you the best help in organizing for the celebration, especially the ministers within the bounds of your branch.

We are instructed to request that you ask all the churches within the bounds of your branch to observe Sunday, Feb. 12th as Bible Sunday, or, if that is not possible, the Sunday nearest the 12th, preferably the 5th. We would also ask that during the same week you have a general meeting in which all can unite. The Toronto mass meeting is to be held in Massey Hall, on Tuesday, Feb. 14th. We should like to suggest that you arrange for these matters as soon as possible, and that you utilize the meetings of the week of prayer to get the subject before the attention of the people.

We feel that it would be appropriate if at your general meeting you were to take up a special thank offering in recognition of the great blessing that people of our tongue have enjoyed during all these centuries, in the possession of the Bible in English. But if, for any reason, such a thank-offering is not possible, do not let this deter you from the celebration, for the calling of Bible Society should be observed, and that the general meeting should be held.

We think also that the secular press, as well as the Young People's Societies and the Sunday schools will help you if you ask them.

We are recommending two books: Milligan's "The English Bible" that sells at twenty cents, and Lovett's "The Printed English Bible" that sells at thirty-five cents. These books state in brief form the essential facts that the celebration should bring out.

Trusting that you will heartily co-operate with us in making this celebration a success, we remain,

On behalf of the Board of the Bible Society.

Your Fellow Workers,
N. W. HOYLES, President,
ELIAS ROGERS, Treasurer.
JESSE GIBSON, Secretary.

How Fat May Be Removed Rapidly By a Simple Home Remedy Without Causing Wrinkles, Disturbing the Diet or Necessity For Exercise

"Fat is nothing but unused energy," says a prominent physician, and the man or woman who is burdened with it can easily get rid of it if they wish. All they need is 1-2 ounce of Marmola, 3-4 ounce of Fluid Extract Cascara Aromatic and 4 3-4 ounces of Peppermint Water; all of which they can get at any good drug store for a few cents. Then let them take one teaspoonful after meals and at bedtime until they are down to the weight they want to be.

This simple home receipt is far and away better than any or all the patent or secret medicines, for it reduces the fat safely and harmlessly. The ingredients are in fact beneficial to the system, having both tonic and purifying qualities, and so help rather than distress the stomach. The remedy does not cause wrinkles, for it reduces one gradually and naturally, preserving good outline, and, best of all, needs neither physical exercise to help it do the work, nor does it require any change in diet—one can get results and still take things easy—eating meanwhile just what, when and how he or she pleases. Be sure and get the Marmola in a sealed package, so that you get Marmola and not a substitute.

NORTH MONAGHAN COUNCIL MEETING

Examiner Special.

NORTH MONAGHAN, DEC. 17.—A meeting of the Township Council was held on Dec. 10, at 2 p.m., in the Town Hall.

All the members were present, the Reeve, Mr. W. G. Howden, presiding.

The minutes of the preceding meetings were read and confirmed.

A communication was read from John A. Fowler, asking the Council to return to the statute labour system in maintaining roads.

The annual report of the Township Sanitary Inspector was read and referred to the Township Board of Health.

Messrs. H. Lillico and N. Fowler addressed the meeting and asked the Council to take such action as would relieve them from the water backing up where the work of deepening the Cavan drain was left off on the 16th and 18th concessions of N. Monaghan.

The Financial Statement of the Township Treasurer was presented, and read. This was ordered to be printed and published according to law.

The following accounts were handed in:

E. A. Peck, Solicitor	20.00
B. Sanderson, caretaker	7.50
W. B. Anderson, San. Insp.	10.00

It was moved by Mr. May, and seconded by Mr. Robson, that this Council endeavour to make such arrangements with the Tp. of Cavan as may result in the deepening of the drain complained of by Messrs. Lillico and Fowler.—Carried.

Moved by Messrs Morrow and Forster, that the taxes of Andrew Dobbin be remitted, owing to his loss by fire.—Carried.

Bylaw No. 180 was then introduced, regularly read and finally passed.

Under the by-law Messrs. H. G. Webber and B. Sanderson were appointed Deputy Returning Officers, and Messrs. Bruce Johnston and Jas. Fowler, Poll Clerks, at Polling Sub-Div. Nos. 1 and 2, respectively.

Council then adjourned to meet as a Court of Revision on the local improvement assessments in Peterborough on Dec. 23, at 2 p.m.

The Rights Of The Indian in Regard To Fishing

To the Editor of The Examiner:

Sir,—I saw a piece in a Peterboro' paper of Thos. Tremaine, complaining of an Indian or Indians from Hagersville trapping in season and out of season the whole year round, etc., etc. I was awfully glad about what our friend Mr. Tremaine said, that Indians can fish the whole year round and not only fish but take anything he needs on the reserve and on any portion of the provincial territory as to which their claims have not been extinguished. If I am not mistaken, I think we are right on where it has never been extinguished yet (or at least the government has not paid off the Indians their claims), which is from the line called the 6th degree running from east to west, and a line running from Hastings to the Ottawa river. We, then, own, lease and kill at any time inside of this unsurrendered land that I am speaking of, also.

Yours truly,
NISH-WAH-BA.

Following Up Investigation Into Conditions in Belmont

High County Constable George Cochrane, Agent of the Children's Aid Society, is in Havelock to-day, continuing the investigation into the conditions recently found there and in Belmont Township. Some families who were warned as to their mode of living, will be visited and it will be seen how far the instructions of the officers have been obeyed. It is understood that there are also some more children, whose environment is not altogether of the best, and who will likely be brought to the Shelter here.

STABLE BADLY GUTTED DAMAGE WILL BE $500

Mr. John Murphy Heavy Loser as Result of a Fire This Afternoon, the Origin of Which is a Mystery---Contents Were Totally Destroyed.

A rather bad fire broke out some time early this afternoon in the stable at the back of Mr John Murphy's residence, 57 Smith street. The damage was about $500. The fire had been going some time before it was noticed. Mr. Murphy works in the Quaker Oats Co's factory and just came home to dinner about 1 o'clock. They were sitting at the table after dinner when one of the children ran in saying that the barn was on fire. An alarm was quickly sent in from Box 47 and the brigade was soon on the scene. Two lines of hose were soon laid and the firemen set to work in earnest. Two cows, a dog and some kittens, as well as a ton and a half of hay were in the building. The two cows were gotten out, but the dog and all but one of the kittens were suffocated. The barn was almost totally destroyed. The fire started in the back part of the barn in a shed and was under way before the firemen got there. Mr. Murphy stated to a reporter that it was by a miracle that he managed to get the cows and the calf out. He said that he was nearly overcome by the smoke himself. About $150 insurance was carried on the building. The cause is absolutely unknown, as Mr. Murphy said that no light or fire had been near the barn since 5 o'clock in the morning.

Reeve Of Ennismore Complains About The Market Scales

Mr. Young, Reeve of Ennismore, this morning brought two pigs to market. They had been weighed at home, on a pair of Quincy scales, and the respective weights were 135 and 139 lbs. When weighed on one set of market scales the respective weights were 125 and 114 lbs., a difference in weight of 10 and 15 lbs. This discrepancy caused Mr. Young to insist on another pair of scales being tried. According to these scales Mr. Young's weights were correct, within a pound. The animals were taken back to the first scales and re-weighed, with the same result as at first. The weight master, in examining the scales, which appeared to balance correctly, found under one edge a sliver of wood, which accounted for the trouble. With this removed the scales were again tried and gave correct results.

This incident indicates the importance of keeping the scales in the best of order. It is very important that patrons of the markets should have confidence in a just balance, otherwise the weights and good name of the farmers will stand to be injured, and the confidence in the market weights lessened. We want to keep a good name for both the Peterborough market and the farmers who frequent it.

SON'S CLUE MAY LIFT LIFE TERM

Special to The Examiner.

PITTSBURG, PA., DEC. 16.—After serving twenty years of a life sentence for murder of which he has always protested his innocence, Andrew Toth, aged 68, will probably be pardoned.

A son of the prisoner who was 13 months old when his father was convicted and sentenced to be hanged, has finally secured evidence which, it is believed, will open the doors for the white-haired man. A supposed death-bed confession by a man of the same name of the prisoner is now in the hands of attorneys.

The murder was committed New Year's Day, 1891, at Braddock, and the subsequent trials and appeals made the case one of the most famous in the criminal annals of Allegheny county. The companions of the prisoner, who were also sentenced to death, but whose sentences were commuted to life imprisonment, have since been released. Both are now dead.

Andrew Toth was convicted of killing Michael Quinn, a young man of Braddock, whose skull had been crushed by a huge clinker hurled from a train.

Two months ago the son heard that "Steve" Toth, no relative of the prisoner, was taken ill at his home in Vienna and it was feared he would die. His confession was later made. Steve Toth recovered. Friends of the prisoner notified Andrew Toth's son and he went to Vienna to investigate. He secured an affidavit from Toth's wife to the effect that her husband was the man who killed Braddock.

Five Shots Didn't Kill

Special to The Examiner:

Buffalo, N.Y., Dec. 17.—After taking a long trip in a railroad train from Montclair to Jersey City, a ride on a ferry boat and a trolley car, with five self-inflicted bullet wounds in his side, Frederick Knoke, a giant in stature, lives to-day to tell of his experiences at St. Catherine's Hospital. Physicians state that he has a chance of recovering, says the New York Journal.

Knoke, who is forty-three years old, is more than six feet tall and strong in proportion. He is a laborer and lives at No. 102 Huron street, Williamsburg. While visiting his sister, Mrs. Ernest Happe, at No. 20 Glenwood avenue, Montclair, he showed that he was despondent over failure to get work.

Going into a vacant lot he fired five shots into his left side, aiming at his heart, and then lay back in the snow, which caused the blood to coagulate. He then changed his mind about dying. He arose and started on his long journey by foot, train, trolley and ferry to the home of another sister, Mrs. Emma Quell, who resides at No. 202 Franklin Street, Williamsburg.

At the hospital, after the surgeons had extracted three of the bullets, Knoke revived long enough to tell of his experience and to acknowledge what he had done. He was then placed under arrest.

YOU CA NSEE IT WORK

The beauty of Dr. A. W. Chase's Ointment as a healer of the skin in eczema, salt rheum, itching skin disease and old sores is that you can see from day to day exactly what it is doing. There is no guess work, no experimenting. It simply heals the skin and makes it soft, smooth and natural. It heals as if by magic. Prove this to your own satisfaction by trying it.

ANOTHER SUCCESS

Minstrels' Second Performance Greeted by Big House

Another big house greeted the Belmont Minstrels last night, when they gave the second performance with even greater success than on the first occasion. The presentation went through snappily and gingerly and the audience was very profuse in its encores, nearly every number having to be repeated before the audience was satisfied. The Belmont Minstrels have an established reputation in the city now, and their future presentations will be awaited with interest.

"A COUNTER-BLAST"

Letter From Mr. John Carlisle in the Montreal Witness

The following letter from Mr. John Carlisle, of Peterborough, appears in the Montreal Weekly Witness:

(To the Editor of the Witness.)

Sir,—We are told by the "new lights," these modern apostles, the so-called higher critics, that since the uncovering of the monuments, etc., our faith in the word of God as a divine revelation will have to be restated. Allow me to give my readers a little of this restated faith as found written in Prof. Geo. Jackson's book, "Studies in the Old Testaments," which book is used in Victoria University as a text book, in which institution Prof. Jackson is teacher of the English Bible. On p. 97, speaking on the early chapters of Genesis, he says: "It is indeed hardly less than cruel to allow young men and women to grow up in the belief that these chapters are literal history, and afterwards to send them to a university." On p. 99 he continues: "It has somehow to be made plain that these chapters are not science, and are not history." On p. 102 he adds: "They contain no account"—such is the sober summary of Dr. Driver's reverent pen—"of the real beginnings either of the earth itself or of man and human civilisation upon it. . . . If, for example, we read in any other book that a serpent talked with a woman in a garden, that in the same garden God himself walked in the cool of the day, that the sons of God took unto themselves wives of the daughters of men, and that as a result the earth was peopled with a race of giants—if, I say, we read things like these in any other book, we should never dream of taking them as the sober record of actual facts. We should say at once, 'This is no history; this is myth, legend, allegory.'"

On page 105 one would really think one was reading Tom Paine or Robt. Ingersoll. He says: "What is to be said of the remarkable longevity which these early narrations attribute to the patriarchs? Did Methuselah really live to be nine hundred and sixty-nine? Had Noah a son born to him when he was five hundred years old? It is, to say the least, extremely difficult to take such statements seriously."

Now our new apostle goes on to write about the fall of man. Hear him, on page 110: "On the story of the fall it is unnecessary to dwell, because even the most thoroughpaced literalist hesitates to treat its picturesque details as SOBER PROSE" (the capitals are mine). Continuing, on page 111, he says: "If we admit, as probably we must, that of the origin of sin we KNOW NOTHING" (capitals mine), "that does not mean that we are any less certain of the fact . . . that all men are sinners in need of the mercy of God."

The first apostles of Jesus Christ wrote as though they knew something of the fall of man and the origin of sin. Their teaching, as every Bible reader knows, accorded exactly with the records found in these early chapters of Genesis. Between the first apostles of the Lamb, and these modern apostles so-called, there is a great gulf fixed. Hear how this critical analyst cuts out the books of Daniel and Esther.

On page 71 he writes: "Again, as was mentioned in the last lecture, it seems probable that the books of Daniel and Esther belong to the realm of RELIGIOUS ROMANCE (capitals mine), or to the borderland of romance and history proper." Now, I have given my readers only a little of the restated faith which these modern apostles of the new revelation would have us accept. Now, I want my readers to note particularly how much faith Prof. Jackson has in this modern critical analysis of God's Word. He has beat an inglorious retreat, and had not enough soldierly skill to cover his retreat. On page 22 we read—listen: "Over many of the details of the critical analysis, there is, OF COURSE, MUCH UNCERTAINTY. In the very nature of the case, it MUST probably ALWAYS BE SO" (capitals are mine). Thoughtful persons have long thought that the lump sum conclusions, the so-called assured results of these critical analysts of Holy Writ, looked suspiciously large. In the name of God and in the name of common sense let me ask, how much faith can be put in these builders of the new faith when they admit that UNCERTAINTY must always be written over their findings. A costly building is to be erected, the contract is let. The builder, before turning a sod, demands from the architect specified details of every part of his building. The architect refuses, saying, 'Mr. Builder, over many of the details of this plan there is, of course, MUCH UNCERTAINTY, in the very nature of the case it must probably always be so. You will therefore please accept the plan as a whole, and proceed with the work.' We all know what the contractor would say. Hear him: 'Mr. Architect, I want you to know that there will not be a sod turned nor sound of a hammer or saw heard on this building until you furnish certified details of every part of this plan.'"

Prof. Jackson is merely a reporter passing around the uncertainties of others. On page 63 he says: "I speak ENTIRELY without first-hand knowledge." Again, on page 82, he says: "Here again I can but report the findings of others." Nothing certain; nothing. And yet these teachers ask us to throw away the sure an dcertain word of the living God for their new anti-Christian faith. Reader, are you going to throw away your common sense, to say nothing about your faith, and accept this new revelation? Are you? This teaching is falsely called Higher Criticism. It comes from FROM BELOW. Reject it.

POST CARD COLUMN

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—Just a word in reference to British, Canadian and United States democracy. I maintain that in none of these countries does the constitution admit the absolute sovereignty of the people, which, in itself, is political atheism. Mr. Burnham has, evidently, not grasped what "the sovereignty of the people" means. In the sense condemned by the Pope it means the people claiming to rule independently of God or Eternal Justice. This principle all Christians must condemn, as well as the Pope, because it makes the people Gods. They, who maintain the sovereignty of the people in this sense are, therefore, atheists in principle, as for example: Red Republicans and Anarchists. Now, this is plain and simple reasoning. The democracies of Great Britain, Canada, United States, etc., do not maintain this, and on this question, therefore, agree perfectly with the teaching of the Catholic Church. The constitutions of these countries provide certain safeguards, which protect their citizens against mob violence, and are, therefore, in harmony with Catholic teachings and principles. In fact, the great principles of liberty underlying the British Constitution were adopted by the British people many centuries ago and were so firmly fixed that private judgment so far has been unable permanently to dislodge them. The United States, Canada, etc., are all modelled after Great Britain. We therefore love these countries because they protect the liberties of the people. The Catholic Church is free in them. Mr. Burnham is a lawyer, but seems as ignorant of the constitution of these countries as he is of the teachings of the Catholic Church.

I refuse to argue further with Mr. Burnham, because, in the first place, he does not grasp the nature of the subject he is discussing. He reminds me of the man I met the other day in a certain place, who was convinced his backbone was made of wood. No possible reasonings could change his opinions. Another reason is that I have found from personal experience that he makes statements which he must know are not true. I take, for example, my speech at the opening of the new Collegiate Institute. Mr. Burnham was sitting in one of the front seats, and in his newspaper report next day, he made positively false assertions, putting in my mouth words I did not say. Since then I have no confidence whatever in Mr. Burnham's veracity.

W. J. McCOLL.

Dec. 17th, 1910.

To the Editor of The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—Would you kindly allow me, through your columns, to bring to the notice of those who have overdue books belonging to the Public Library the absolute necessity of returning them at once to the Librarian for the purpose of cataloguing and classification. The advertisement asking for overdue books to be returned, which was lately inserted in all three papers in this city, has resulted in about eighteen volumes being brought back to the Library. There are hundreds of books missing from the shelves, many of which, of course, have succumbed to the wear and tear consequent on usage, but there are very many in the houses of our citizens which have been held for months and years, and in the interests of all readers should be returned at once. Some valuable reference books are also missing, second or third volumes of a set, which, if not returned, will render the series to which they belong, comparatively valueless.

I am sure it is only necessary to bring this matter in a proper light before our citizens to insure the return of whatever volumes may be in their possession.

Yours, etc.,
FRED. M. DELA FOSSE.
Librarian.

MacGREAGOR—MORRISON.

A very pretty wedding took place on Dec. 6th, 1910, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Clydes, 584 Pine St., Winnipeg, Man., when Whitemore Reid MacGreagor of Winnipeg, was united in marriage to Miss Mary Jane Morrison of Peterborough, Ont., by the Rev. Dr. Farquharson. The bride was dressed in blue silk and carried a bouquet of roses and carnations. After the ceremony the happy couple drove to the home of the groom's brother, where a most enjoyable evening was spent, after which the happy couple left for their wedding tour, and on their return will reside at Winnipeg, Man.

Calgary Jewel Robbery.

Calgary, Dec. 17.—One of the most daring jewel robberies in the history of local crime took place when a thief or thieves, surreptitiously carried off over $8,000 worth of pearls, opals and diamonds from D. E. Black's jewelry store, Eighth avenue. It was between four and five o'clock in the afternoon that the precious stones were missed. Black had been showing his jewels to a customer and had left them in a package on a table in the diamond room. Later one of the packages was missed. A man named Mason, who is alleged to have been employed as a piano-player in a resort in the "red light" district, is under arrest.

Lake Steamer Ice Bound.

Sandusky, O., Dec. 17.—The passenger steamer Lakeside, bound from Kelly Island and Put-in-Bay, with 75 passengers aboard, is fast in the ice about two miles off Cedar Point, and five miles from here.

About half the passengers are women and children.

The first information of her serious predicament came with the arrival of the lifeboat, who walked across the ice yesterday to get aid for the icebound ship and her passengers.

If it is found, after a trial, that the ice is firm enough, sleds will be sent out after the passengers.

BAD STORMS IN ENGLAND WORST IN THIRTY YEARS

Floods on the Thames---River Overflows its Banks and Large Areas of Country are Inundated---Great Damage Done---Gale Sweeps Southern Coast.

London, Dec. 17.—It is thirty years since England has known such floods as are now devastating immense stretches of the country. The deluge of rain practically has been incessant since the first of December, only two days out of the sixteen being without rain. The farmers have suffered heavy losses.

Large areas of territory are so inundated that five barred gates are covered with water, which, in some parts of the country is twelve feet deep.

In many villages houses have been flooded and the residents are living in the upper stories.

The outlook in the Thames valley is grave. The river has risen ten inches in the Henley district within the last 36 hours and thousand acres more areas. Many residences have been irretrievably ruined.

Yesterday a severe gale swept the coast, causing havoc at seaside towns like Worthing, Hastings, Cowes and Dover, where seawalls were washed away and thousands of tons of sand deposited in the streets.

In the neighborhood of the sea front, houses have been flooded and yachts tossed ashore.

A number of minor wrecks are reported. Off Sheerness, a British naval tender, occupied by 100 sailors, who were going ashore on liberty time, was capsized and five of the men drowned.

Much damage has been done by the heavy sea at Portsmouth.

PREMIER'S RESPONSE

To Deputation of Farmers Which Waited Upon Him Yesterday... Withholds Government's Full Answer

GREAT SCENE IN HOUSE

Ottawa, Dec. 17.—Nearly one thousand farmers, representing all parts of the Dominion, sitting in the seats of the legislators in the Commons chamber yesterday morning and filling the galleries to overflowing, with the members of the Government and the members of Parliament as auditors, made their first organized public onslaught on the citadel of protection and voiced in a plain and clear-cut statement the demands of the agricultural community for legislation of a radical and far-reaching character in the interests of the tillers of the soil and the chief producers of national wealth. It was the most significant four hours of straight talk which has been heard in Parliament for years. The question of what Parliament will do for the farmers and of what the farmers will do for Parliament was not answered yesterday morning, but as a result of the storming of the legislative halls by the organized and aroused yeomanry politicians on both sides of the House are now scratching their heads and preparing to revise their opinion of the political importance of the low tariff movement inaugurated in such a spectacular manner by the men from the west.

As to tariff matters, the Premier said that if what was in view was better commercial relations with the U.S., "we are at one with you," but this was rather in the direction of natural products and not as to manufacturers. Nothing could be done that would impair or affect the British preference, which must always remain a cardinal feature of policy. Indefinite references to the question of terminal ownership and obtaining a reply as to other subjects of importance raised by the delegates on the plea of lack of time, completed the Premier's reply. Sir Wilfrid was inclined to the belief that the western farmers were too progressive in their policies, and were demanding the sun.

When the Premier arose to address the great assembly, he was warmly greeted.

The delegates went to Rideau Hall later in the day and shook hands with Earl Grey, who presented them with a book on "Co-operation" by Sir Horace Plunkett. In the evening they were entertained at dinner by Hon. Frank Oliver on behalf of the Government.

By 9.30 yesterday morning every seat in the House of Commons chamber was taken and the galleries thronged. The delegates marched to the buildings from the opera house, six abreast, four leading members of the Government and Opposition leaders (Laurier) declined when they arrived. On the Premier's left sat Sir Richard Cartwright, and on his right W. McCraig, president of the National Council of Agriculture, and leader of the delegation. Mr. McCraig introduced the delegation, who he said, had come an three-hour carriage, and then called on the various members deputized to present the different conditions and resolutions already published. Frequent applause marked the reading of the long resolutions. Sir Wilfrid listened attentively throughout, and at two o'clock rose to make his reply.

"Permit me at the very outset," he said, "on behalf of the Government and on behalf of Parliament to welcome you to this House, for although, on this occasion and for the [illegible] can speak—E. L. Borden: Hear, hear."—"To express to you the gratification it affords us to see before us such a representative delegation as we have here and to acknowledge also the proofs with which we have listened to the expression of your views, even if we do not share those views in their entirety.

"When I came here this morning I thought we were coming to receive a deputation from the west. But I understand from your remarks that the delegation we have before us represents all the agricultural interests of Canada, on the east as well as the west. Then you will perhaps permit me to observe that it seems to me that, though the delegation represents the agricultural interests of the whole of Canada, it is the western spirit which pervades it.

"I think that in this I speak correctly, and if you will not deny the impeachment, if such it be, that, in the west, your ideas are far more advanced than are those of the east. As I say, I do not complain of this, but simply state it as a basis of fact. The resolutions you have put before us are certainly impregnated with the western spirit.

"Not do I believe the farmers of the east are prepared to go quite so far as you gentlemen of the west. You are in favor, I understand, of the Government ownership and operation of all Government utilities, of railways, of abattoirs and of elevators. As to this, I have nothing to say at present. The idea may, perhaps, be a good one. I understand that you have started a campaign of education, and I, perhaps, may be the first to be educated in that respect, because, up to this time I have not been an absolutely ardent supporter of Government ownership and operation of all public utilities. To Government ownership, I may be persuaded, to Government operation I may be persuaded also, but with greater difficulty. In this I am a man of the past.

"Now, what is to be the nature of the improvement? With regard to the tariff, I understand that what is proposed is closer commercial relations with our neighbors—whether by treaty of concurrent legislation is another matter. I suppose you would rather have it in the form of a treaty than not have it at all. If what you have in view is better commercial relations with the United States, we are at one with you. I am happy to say that at this moment, we are negotiating with the American authorities to do this very thing which you ask for—to improve our commercial relations with our neighbors.

"But there is one view which you have expressed, which it is the object of the Government to carry out and in which the Government will respond to your views in full as you have expressed them. That is, whatever we do with our neighbors, whatever we may be able to accomplish with them, nothing that we do shall in any way impair or affect the British preference. That remains a cardinal feature of our policy. The hour is advanced, and I submit five more deputations upon this points as this.

"As the hour is so late, I hope you will excuse me if I do not deal with the other problems you have mentioned. You may say one word only with regard to the Hudson Bay Railway. I am pleased to say that it will be completed to go on with the construction of the railway at this moment. On the 1st of December next, if I mistake not, I will have a statement to make to the House. Government ownership, as I said a moment ago, is a matter as to which we must give all the weight to your representations."

Fine Play Ended.

Regina, Sask., Dec. 17.—Although the fine imposed on Capt. Hall, of the Salvation Army, who was charged with selling a paper without a hawker's license, has been paid, the matter is not ended. The police magistrate has refused to return the money, and the Army officials have decided to appeal the case. Capt. Hall was fined $10 and costs.

PREMIER'S WHIRLWIND JOURNEY

Washington, Dec. 17.—Landing in New York from Mauretania at four o'clock yesterday morning, W. R. Holt, Parliamentary correspondent for a London newspaper, caught a special train, held in waiting, and was whisked to Washington.

At the station here Mr. Holt leaped into an automobile and began a whirlwind investigation of the capital of the United States. He will leave on the special train last night for New York and will sail at six o'clock this afternoon on the Mauretania for Liverpool. The result of this meteor-like flight will be a series of articles for his paper on "Thirty-eight hours' impressions in America."

Before arriving here Mr. Holt had arranged for an audience with President Taft. He saw the president, talked with Speaker Cannon and Vice-President Sherman and the chairman of the House ways and means and the Senate finance committees. Last night he returned to New York to go "slumming" and generally "do" the metropolis before sailing.

Newfoundland Fisheries.

St. John's, Nfld., Dec. 17.—It was stated yesterday that early in January the Premier of Newfoundland probably would visit Washington for the purpose of conferring with the representatives of Canada and the United States regarding an amicable modification of the fishery regulations as a result of the recent Hague decision. The recent ruling of the American Board of Treaty Appointees, facilitating the admission of Newfoundland fish into American ports is regarded here as indicating a friendly attitude on the part of the American officials.

United States Soldier Boy Killed.

St. Thomas, Dec. 17.—John B. McLachlan, an ex-soldier from the Philippines, travelling from Chicago to Providence, R.I., fell from a Michigan Central train near Sparta, some time during yesterday night, and his dead body almost frozen, was found by section men early yesterday morning. Letters found showed he had a brother and sister living at Providence, who sent a message to their dead boy's brother, and urged him to come home.

U. S. Postal Prosecutions.

Philadelphia, Pa., Dec. 17.—Postal officers recently, in connection with the Government's crusade against persons suspected of using the mails improperly, arrested Louis L. Rose, [illegible] A. C. Paterson, and vice-president Edgar Fehlig, second vice-president and treasurer, and Geo. H. Hyman, first vice-president of the Chain Store Stores Syndicate, and [illegible] Mechanics of Philadelphia, Camden, Camden Corp., [illegible] officers of the Film Reigate Co., a local [illegible] corp.

According to Postal Inspector Cuthbert, the Chain Store Stores Syndicate, with the capitalization of $2,000,000, had widely advertised that it was establishing retail stores in large [illegible] and that it was purchasing shoes [illegible] factories, and that the company was able to do business cheaper by eliminating middlemen.

The Film Reigate Co. advertised [illegible] and the same in connection with the [illegible] corp. and selling it [illegible] to the Chain Store Syndicate, which [illegible] Jersey, which [illegible] [illegible] simple and profitably worked [illegible].

IN THE WORLD OF SPORT

THE JUNIOR SCHEDULE IS ARRANGED FIRST GAME ON NEW YEAR'S NIGHT

Local Colts Open the Season by Invading Cobourg on the Holiday —First Home Game Here With Lindsay on January 6th.

REFEREES APPOINTED

At a meeting of the junior O. H. A. clubs of this district held this afternoon in the Oriental, the schedule for the group was arranged. Convener C. G. Graham was in the chair. The Lindsay team was represented by "Cap" Simpson, the Cobourg juniors by proxy by R. M. Glover, and the local team by Mr. McClenchie. The schedule, it will be seen, requires the local juniors to go to Cobourg on New Year's night and to play their first home game the following Friday with Lindsay.

Following is the schedule:

Jan. 2—PETERBOROUGH at Cobourg.
Jan. 6—Lindsay at PETERBOROUGH.
Jan. 10—Cobourg at Lindsay
Jan. 17—PETERBOROUGH at Lindsay.
Jan. 24—Lindsay at Cobourg.
Jan. 30—Cobourg at PETERBOROUGH.

The following referees were agreed upon — Dick Turpin, Cobourg; W. Sloddard, Lindsay; W. O'Brien, Peterborough.

Trenton Is After Some Ottawa Men

Ottawa, Dec. 16.—Ottawa amateurs seem to be passing up the Ontario Professional League. Geo. Booth has been trying for weeks to sign up a team for Trenton, but has not yet succeeded in getting any complete contracts.

Yesterday the Trenton club made an offer to "Moose" Goodwin, the Capital cover-point, who is also some hockey player. They guaranteed him $25 per week and expenses, as well as transportation both ways. Goodwin may go; also "Rus" Murphy, who was at Galt last season, and Fred Moffatt, who played "amateur" hockey at $30 per week in the Maritime Provinces. Dickie A. Young, an Emmett player, may take a trip to the Trenton town for a few weeks.

Alex. Currie, Tommie Smith, and Harry Broadbent declined the offers.

JUNIOR HOCKEY PRACTISE TO-NIGHT

The Junior O. H. A. team will practise to-night at Brock Street rink and every junior player is asked to be out sharp at 7 o'clock for a workout. The Juniors have only another week to get into shape and every practice from now on should be well attended. The practise hours for next week have been arranged as follows, and the players are asked to keep them in mind:

Monday, 7 to 8—Intermediates.
Tuesday, 7 to 8—Juniors.
Wednesday, 7 to 8—Intermediates.
Thursday, 7 to 8—Juniors.
Friday, 7 to 8—Intermediates.
Saturday, 7 to 8—Juniors.

SHRUBB WANTS LONGBOAT TO TOUR IN ENGLAND GOOD MONEY IN SIGHT

Toronto, Dec. 16.—Alfred Shrubb is negotiating with Tom Longboat's manager with a view to having him accompany him to England and run a series of match races in February.

"Longboat as he is now, is as tough a man as I want to meet from 15 to 18 miles," said Shrubb to-day. "In England I believe some one would take hold of him and persuade him to train properly and properly trained that Indian is even now as good a 10 and 12 miler as there is roaming around. The more I see of that Indian the more I respect him. He runs wonderfully well for a man who does no training. I know a dozen places where we can draw 20,000 people to a race. They are crazy to see the Indian in England. If I could get a decided answer from the Indian and could depend on it my English friends would draft a tour that would make us both some big money."

Shrubb is in nice shape right now. He ran one and a half miles through the deep snow with all his hunting clothes on, on Wednesday, after plowing through the woods and swamps for four hours after rabbits.

TO CURE A HEADACHE

The experience of Mr. O. Barber, Simcoe, Ont., is of interest to all who suffer from headaches. He writes: "For a long time I was troubled with headaches which came on about once a week with such violence that I could not eat or do my work. Headache powders and quick cures did me no good. I then used six boxes of Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food and have not been troubled with headache since. That was eight months ago."

Frank McGee One Of Gamest Of Players

"Railbird", writing in the Edmonton Journal, gets off the following, which will prove of interest to Eastern hockey fans:

"I was over at the Elk Club the other day, when some of the boys were discussing the question of physical gameness in athletics. Some way, no one has any use for a player who is not game; and every one in the room had a special favourite or another, who, he thought, was the finest ever. Personally, to me, Harvey Pulford has always appeared the ideal athlete in boxing, football, lacrosse, hockey and rowing.

It is a real treat to see a man take his medicine in sport and take it with a smile. One of the best hockey players that ever pulled on a shoe was Frank McGee, of Ottawa. I've seen such men as Alf. Smith, Bill Gilmour, Suddy Gilmour, Bruce Stuart, Tom Phillips, Fred Taylor, Lake, Glass, Art Ross, the two Patricks, and a hundred others of the same high calibre in action, most of them in games with McGee, and yet Frank was always the one best bet on the ice. A hockey wonder was McGee. He weighed only about 140, if he weighed that, and when I saw him first, some ten or twelve years ago, I thought I never saw an alleged hockey player who looked so very easy," and so likely to quit if he ever got a good, hard slap on the wrist. I'd heard of McGee as a marvel, and was ready for a savage-looking player. I was fooled. McGee pushed open the little side door in Dey's famous rink in Ottawa and stepped on the ice—a regular dude. His golden hair was parted exactly in the centre, his hockey pants were snow white, and actually creased. His boots, I believe, were even polished. I never was more surprised in my life. I asked "Bob" Shillington if that was really the famous McGee, and he only nodded. I think it was the Winnipeg Rowing Club's Cup series that was on that night, but, anyway, I will never forget the terrific roar that went up when little McGee glided out on the ice. Just a tremendous bellow of "McGee!" "McGee!" Everyone in the ring seemed to idolize the lad. Big Pulford, Hutton, Smith, Billy Gilmour, Art Moore, and Rat Westwick were all given a glad hand, but nothing to the reception that McGee got. I noticed that Frank slid around the ice pretty nice in practice, before the whistle, handled his stick, as easy as you would a knife and fork, and seemed to have plenty of speed in one or two dashes up the big sheet to warm up. But when the game started there was just one boy on the ice. That was Frank McGee. I never saw speed or stick handling like it. He could skate like a ghost, any old way, and when he had to, could play with any two men on the Winnipeg team when possession of the puck was needed. Unselfishness itself, he, as centre, began almost all the team work, and took more chances in five minutes than most players would take in a match. How the crowd roared! For the next few years I followed McGee's playing carefully, and every match was the same. Away from home for example, in a furious series with the Montreal Wanderers, with about 8,000 people all howling to "get McGee," I saw Frank put out, cold, half a dozen teams in the one match, and, honest, he scored the last two games that won the fixture. No one could slow him up; he was always right on the spot, and I distinctly remember the silence that fell on the crowd when, with the large clock on the wall registering two minutes more time to play, McGee began his final effort. He was game. Taking the puck and beginning a series of slashing attacks, he finally sailed right into the mouth of the nets, with Billy Strachan and company doing their best to "eat him alive," took a round dozen of healthy cracks and scored. One minute before time he repeated, and skated off the ice with that same smile with which he went on. In the dressing room, when he doffed his clothes, one could see that he had been pruned good and plenty. He was simply cut all up. Yes, he was game. That's why the average Ottawan loved him; more than that, really idolized him.

SOME HOCKEY HAPPENINGS

Peterborough has the hockey 'bug' worse just now than she has had for some seasons. The form shown by the O. H. A. teams in the practices this week has caused great enthusiasm and the fans are eagerly waiting for the opening of hostilities.

A feature of the workouts, so far, has been the big turn out of fans and each night sees a big squad of rail-birds on hand, who seem to find the practices as interesting as a game.

The Intermediates had a grand practice again last night, with every one going at top speed for the hour. Referee Thom kept them playing hockey according to Hoyle, and it looked like a real game. The practice was featured by some very clever work, and the stick-handling and shooting is improving with each time out. The men out were Detocher, Milne, Bond, Fetherman, Stewart, Ray, Dobson, Kelley, Steel, Weatherstone, Gibson, Short and Marshall.

The Intermediate O. H. A. team will work out at 8 o'clock to-day at the rink making the fifth practice this week. This time last year there was nothing doing at all in the ice line.

Kingston Standard: There was only a handful of players out at the Frontenac's hockey practice last night. Reg. Crawford and Dunphy of the seniors and Breese, Hunt, Millan, Williams and Davidson of the juniors, being the only players out. The small showing was probably due to Mr. James T. Sutherland's absence, he being in Toronto attending the meeting of the O.H.A. The ice was not in good condition and the practice was a very listless one.

Lindsay Warder: President A. M. Paton, of the junior O.H.A. team writes as follows: "A junior O.H.A. team has been duly entered. Our representatives in this connection will naturally be drawn from the town league, and as winning teams are not made in a day, the sooner this league gets in action the better chance will be afforded to select the strongest players for O.H.A. honors. Any boy under 20 years of age on Jan. 1, 1911, is eligible for the junior O.H.A. series this year and subject to this restriction. The best only will be given a place. If we can select seven juniors that can't be defeated by a picked team from the town and Hobo leagues the junior O.H.A. rep will come to Lindsay. Let us try it."

130 BEATINGS

Received by Bride but Husband Got 162

BALTIMORE, DEC. 16.—Admitting that he had beaten his wife 130 times since they were married six months ago, John Yoreck gave as his excuse that his wife had beaten him 162 times in that period.

"Since we were married, only half a year ago," said Mrs. Yoreck, to Justice Loden, in the Western Court, "he has beaten me regularly every Tuesday and Thursday, and three times on Sunday."

"And she has beaten me regularly once every day in the week, Sunday included," retorted Yoreck.

Three-Year-Old Boy Smokes Big Cigars

Special to The Examiner.

BUFFALO, N.Y., DEC. 17.—Edward Herbert is just past 3 years of age, yet Edward is one of the most invetereate smokers along the upper Canadian shore. For a year and a half the baby has been a slave of "My Lady Nicotine" and the indications are that the habit may become so firmly fixed that it will cling to him through life.

Edward is only a baby in size, thought and action, but to him a big, black cigar has more attractions than a gaudy red cart. He will lay aside his toys at any time of the day to smoke, and the strength of that smoke has no terrors for that infantile stomach. Colour and shape cut a figure, however, as Edward is partial to cigars with a bright coloured band, the bigger the cuff the better the smoke, according to his philosophy.

The father, Charles, is a fisherman, and the mother is employed at Abare's Hotel, about six miles from Windsor, on the river bank.
